The greatness of God does not render Him indifferent to men (5-14).—"He despiseth not any" (5). It is no proof of greatness to treat others with contempt. God's care is not merely for kings exalted on their thrones (7), but even for the afflicted (7-9). Their very distresses are his method of bringing them to Himself. How many would never have sought God at all if they had not been "bound in fetters"? And how often have his own people wandered from Him, until brought back by the pressure of sore trouble! The ears are opened in affliction as at no other time (15).

In applying this thought to Job, Elihu repeats in substance what he had said before (xxxiii. 14-28). To afflict men is no pleasure to God (Sam. iii. 31-36). When its purpose is accomplished deliverance may be expected. That purpose is always connected with humbling on our part (16). But Job had not yet been brought to this. His frequent assertions of righteousness ranked him among the wicked (17); exposed him to wrath, from which nothing could redeem him (18-20); and were an insult to God (21-23). Beware of self-vindication before God. None will attempt it who know either their own hearts, or God Himself. Bow reverently before the darkest mysteries, but charge not unrighteousness on God.

International S.S. Lessons.

Sunday Afternoon, May 4.

THE RULER'S DAUGHTER.

LUKE viii. 41, 42, 49-56.

GOLDEN TEXT: Verse 50.

COMPARE parallel passages in Matt. ix. and Mark v. Matthew places other incidents between the Lord's return from Gadara and this lesson; but the order in Mark and Luke is probably correct.

(1) Faith's request (41, 42).—Jairus was ruler of the synagogue at Capernaum. It was his work to superintend and direct the services. His position made it difficult for him to acknowledge faith in Christ. His reason for coming to Christ was the serious illness of his only daughter (42). Luke describes her as "dying," Mark as "at the point of death." Her age, and the fact that she was an only daughter, made the ruler's distress the greater. He had witnessed several displays of Christ's miraculous power in the synagogue (iv. 31-34, v. 12-26, vii. 1-10). Yet these had never led him to acknowledge faith in Christ. But distress, which no one else can relieve, proves his greatest blessing. It is not mere knowledge of Christ that produces faith; but a consciousness of need which only Christ can supply. This sense of need is often produced by affliction (Job xxxiii. 14-28). His faith was reverent (41). "Fell at his feet." Matthew says, "worshipped." How much he meant by this we cannot tell. To us it is the becoming attitude, for we know Jesus as Son of God, therefore to be honoured equally with the Father (John v. 22, 23). The higher our thoughts of Him, the lower shall we lie at his feet. So far, the ruler's faith furnishes an example to us. Every scholar has a deeper need for coming to the Saviour. His own condition, if unsaved, is more desperate; come as the ruler did.

Yet there was weakness in his faith. It does not compare with that of the Roman centurion (vii. 7). He seemed to think that healing was not possible unless Jesus came and laid his hand (Mark) upon the child. But this weakness did not prevent Jesus responding to the appeal. He does not despise the feeblest believer (Matt. xii. 20). It is faith, not merely strong faith, that obtains an answer from Him (xvii. 6).

(2) Faith's experiences.—Jesus recognised its weakness in the ruler's eagerness, and in prescribing the method in which his daughter was to be raised. The first and most important need was, not the raising of the child, but the strengthening of the ruler's faith. To strengthen it the Lord tries it first by delay. The healing of the woman (43-48) took up much time, and Jesus showed no disposition to hurry. To the ruler, to whom every moment seemed so precious, this delay may have seemed like indifference to his great need. But it was the Lord's method of restraining his impatience. Delays have often the same purpose. True faith can wait. Next, his faith was tried by the message from home (49). The child is now dead, the Master need not be "troubled!" A discouraging message certainly, and one which showed an entire ignorance of what Jesus really was. Trouble Him by appeals for his aid, by telling Him our distress, by coming to Him with a grief no one else can relieve! It is his delight to hear and answer such appeals. But, if the child is dead, is not the case hopeless? Does the ruler secretly chide Jesus for the delay? Of course he will be ready to heed the hopeless message. So often is faith tried still. At the first approach to Jesus things get worse rather than better. It is only that we may learn more of the power of Jesus.

With the trial Jesus supplies also the strengthening word (50). His "Fear not" would be of little value without the promise that followed. Death has laid hold of the ruler's daughter, and has well-nigh quenched the feeble faith of the ruler; but the fact has not in the least daunted Jesus. "She shall be made whole." It was not a boast, but a word of power from death's conqueror. See how "believe only" removes "fear." Faith destroys fear (Isa. xii. 2; Psa. lvi. 3).

(3) Faith's reward (51-56).—Jesus did not at all accept the ruler's lines on which to grant his request. We may ask very great blessing from Jesus, but He must choose his own method of imparting it. Everything connected with this miracle indicates that it was very important in the Lord's judgment. Note who accompanied Him (51). —The same three apostles who witnessed the transfiguration and the agony. They needed the lessons such a miracle could teach, and were doubtless prepared to trust Him for it. The father and mother of the child were there also, that their faith might be strengthened. The mourners were put out (54).—Jesus had come to comfort all who mourn. It is only his presence that makes the mourners unnecessary. Yet He does not say, "Weep not," without giving us reason for obedience. Death before Him is no longer death (John xi. 11-14). Sleep is a beautiful figure of death that should take away all its terror. It suggests rest after weariness, with the prospect of a joyous awakening (1 Cor. xv. 20; 1 Thess. iv. 13, 14). But to the mourners this occasioned scornful laughter (53). Unbelief perverts the grandest truths, calculated to comfort in deepest distress, into matter for mocking. Beware of the scornful spirit (Prov. iii. 34). In a far more solemn sense the scorners shall be "put out."

Then the miracle (54-56).—The ruler saw Jesus face to face with death's victim. His feeble faith at first would never have expected Jesus to do this. But a simple word, "Maid, arise," was enough from the lips of Jesus. Thank God, He can repeat the miracle upon those who are spiritually dead (John v. 24, 25). It is the work of Jesus to impart life; but others must give the food necessary to sustain it (55). Those whom Jesus has saved the Church must care for.

APPLICATION.

Jesus the worthy object of our faith.—Don't wait, as the ruler did, for some sore distress to drive to Him. Let his power, as displayed in this narrative, prove Him deserving of our fearless confession as Saviour and Lord.

Jesus has changed the character of death.—Sleep, though so much like death, has none of death's terrors. Two brothers were wounded on the same battlefield. A friend found them embracing each other, and talking and praying for themselves, for absent friends, and especially for mother. The elder, blinded by a wound in the face, did not notice the death of the younger; and obtaining no reply, he said, "Poor little Rob's asleep." So he was—in that last sleep which the din of battle cannot disturb.

Jesus has power to quicken the dead.—Every unconverted person is "dead in sins," and needs the life-giving word of Jesus. Our case is so hopeless that only resurrection power can save us. Has He done this work for you?

We are reminded of the future resurrection. We shall share in that. It will be either to life or to judgment (John v. 28, 29). Which it will be to us depends upon our attitude towards Jesus now.

DR. MOON, of Brighton, was presented, on April 16, with a handsome testimonial in recognition of the completion of his jubilee of work for the blind. The testimonial consisted of a cheque for £250 and a handsome clock, so ingeniously constructed that when a cord is pulled it indicates the time by striking. A present was also made to Miss Moon, who has long been associated with her father in the work. An illuminated address to Dr. Moon accompanied the gift.

ROYAL NORMAL COLLEGE FOR THE BLIND.—At Grosvenor House on Saturday, under the presidency of the Duke of Westminster, a large company attended the annual meeting of the Royal Normal College and Academy of Music for the Blind, Upper Norwood. The report, presented by the Bishop of London, recorded another year's successful work. The practical results of the work, in enabling the blind to become independent members of society, gave confidence to the committee in appealing to the public to maintain the work in efficiency. The Duke of Westminster said that if the recommendations of the Royal Commission were carried out, the thirty thousand blind in the United Kingdom, the majority of whom were in a condition of helplessness and dependence, would be raised from the condition to which they had been condemned by neglect. The Bishop of London said the time had come when the College should be made permanent in its character. The work carried out had established itself in the public estimation year by year, and the principle upon which the work was founded, that of placing the blind in the position of seeing persons, had commended itself to all who had seen the success of that principle. This institution had taken first rank in the institutions of the country, and he hoped that full support would be given to it. Mr. Mundella, M.P., Sir Lyon Playfair, M.P., and others, advocated the claims of the College.

MR. SPURGEON'S COLLEGE.

THE opening meeting of the third Conference of the Pastors' College Evangelical Association was held on Monday evening in the Talbot Tabernacle, Bayswater. The proceedings commenced with a prayer-meeting in the afternoon, at which the pastor, Mr. Frank White, presided, after which tea was served in the Powis Hall to the assembled ministers and students.

The public meeting was at seven, by which time the spacious and beautiful tabernacle was packed with an earnest and sympathising audience. Hearty indeed was the welcome which Mr. Spurgeon received as he passed to the platform, looking somewhat worn, but evidently cheered by the sight which awaited him. A hymn being sung, Dr. Bennett, of Worthing, led in a prayer which proved unmistakably his deep sympathy with Mr. Spurgeon and his present witness to the power and preciousness of the old Gospel.

The President's address was listened to with intense interest. It sketched in simple and homely language the history of the College from its birth, by which it appeared that no less than 828 had received its benefits, 673 of whom were still preaching the Word. Mr. Spurgeon carried the whole audience with him when he said that his object was not to make ministers, for man-made ministers were but poor things at the best. He received those who had begun to preach, and aimed to help them to preach better. He would rather have live men who violated every principle of grammar, if they did but preach with motion and power, than dead men, however highly cultured, without the Spirit of God. As for himself, he should continue to preach the same old Gospel he had preached when he was young. Until it changed he should not. Someone had once remarked about him that he was a good sort of fellow, but he had not grown a bit during the last twenty-five years; he preaches the same as he preached twenty-five years ago. The one who said this remarked of himself that he did not preach anything now that he preached twenty-five years ago. The State of Massachusetts declared their State was governed by the law of God, and would continue to be so governed until they could find a better law. He would continue to preach the same Gospel until he could find a better.

The preacher spoke with much affection of Mr. Frank White as one of his first students, and whom he believed, like himself, was too old-fashioned to give up, for any of its modern substitutes, the preaching of the doctrines of the Cross of Christ. He trusted the men who had come from all parts of the kingdom would return to their various spheres stronger, happier, and holier from this week's Conference, and to this end earnestly entreated the prayers of all present.

Other addresses followed, all of which were characterised by much earnestness and directness. The speakers were Pastors Styles, Hancocks of Chatham, Gregory from South California, and Wainwright of Bournemouth. Of all of them it may be said that, though they had not (to use the phraseology of one of their number) in their love of him swallowed Mr. Spurgeon whole, they had drunk deeply of his spirit, and with him were "determined to know nothing among men save Jesus Christ and Him crucified."

It was an excellent meeting, and a splendid beginning of what we trust will prove one of the most helpful Conferences ever held in the Pastors' College. There was a collection, which amounted we learn, to £20. The remaining meetings of the Conference took place in the College buildings, Newington Causeway.

BISHOP GREGG, of the Reformed Church of England, has returned to England after an absence of nearly four months on the Continent. His physical health has been much benefited by the change, but, after a short stay in England, it is probable that it will be necessary for him to take further rest, in the hope of complete restoration.

MRS. JOSEPHINE BUTLER has taken a house on the edge of Wimbledon Common. The gain of the change (says The National Advance) lies in the fact that Mrs. Butler, who is, and will be as long as she lives, the soul and centre of the great world protest against legalised vice, is now within thirty minutes of the heart of London, instead of being, as heretofore, more than two hours away.

THE CHRISTMAS APPEAL on behalf of the finances of this Work, not having been responded to sufficiently to enable us to pay the remaining debts of the year, we now make an earnest appeal for £200 to meet the present demands for rent, &c. Unless this is IMMEDIATELY forthcoming, the Committee feel that we shall be obliged to cut off at least part of the Home Branch. This will be very sad, knowing, as we do, what a great blessing (both temporal and spiritual) it has proved to the poor lads in the past.

Prayerfully we leave this in the hands of the Lord, who alone can guide His children as to where their help is needed.

MISSIONS TO SEAMEN SOCIETY.

Patron—Admiral H.R.H. THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH, K.G.

THIS Society labours among the great seafaring population of our country, numbering upwards of 625,000 men, who man some 36,000 Merchant, Passenger, Emigrant, Light, and other Ships, and 29,000 Fishing Vessels; not one of which carries a Chaplain. It also labours among the 60,000 Seamen of the Royal Navy.

AFLOAT.—Its work is carried on by holding Services or Bible Readings on board the ships when in ports or roadsteads, distributing Tracts, selling Bibles and Prayer Books, and giving Boxes or Books of sound reading to be taken to sea.

In 1888, about 6,000 Bibles were sold; 70,000 Unsound Bibles, Tracts, &c., distributed, and 10,000 Boxes or Bags of Books given to ships.

ASHORE.—Its work is threefold:—

I. Spiritual: In 61 Churches or Mission Rooms at various ports, at home and abroad, where seamen are ministered to on Sundays and week-days, by the Society's Chaplains and Scripture Readers.

II. Philanthropic: Who men being rescued from public-houses and crimps, and induced to come to the Society's Institutes, where they are provided with good reading, newspapers, &c., with means of writing to their families, and harmless games.

III. Temperance: In 1888, about 3,000 Seamen signed the Temperance Pledge; and during the last 10 years 77,000 have signed it.

Information as to the details of this work is given in the Society's Magazine Words on the Waters.

Increased FUNDS are urgently appealed for, to enable this good work to be maintained and extended. Subscriptions and contributions should be sent to the Secretary, Commander W. Dawson, R.N., at the Society's Offices, 11, Buckingham Street, Strand, London.

Scripture Readers' Society

FOR IRELAND.

INSTITUTED 1822.

Funds greatly needed to extend the Itinerant work.

The Scripture Readers are placed under carefully selected Superintendents, and not only located in Towns and Cities, but also sent into remote districts where they are generally well received by all denominations.

Irish speaking Readers are sent where required. Sailors in Seaports are visited, and Bethel Services held.

The work is carried on in a spirit of love and not of controversy.

Reports and all particulars sent post free on application to Captain JAMES KEARNEY WHITE, Secretary, Offices, 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin, and 9, Paternoster-row, London.

Donations may be sent to the above addresses, or will be received by the Proprietors of THE CHRISTIAN.

Please notice exact title of Society as above.

SUITABLE FOR A GIFT-BOOK.

The Christian Portrait Gallery.

Consisting of OVER ONE HUNDRED Life-like Portraits and Biographic Sketches of Prominent Christian Workers of the Present Day.

Handsomely Bound, Demy Quarto, Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 10s. 6d.

"In respect of truthful portraiture, nothing could be more desirable than the sketches here presented; many of the faces familiar to the public of to-day starting from the pages with the vividness of life. The subjects are drawn from a very extended tract of religious life; and a meed of praise is rendered equally to the popular pulpiteer; the worker in the slums; the gleaner in the Indian mission field; and the South African evangelist."—Scottish Leader.

"The statement on the title-page that the portraits are 'life-like illustrations' is no empty boast. Of the kind there are few which more nearly fulfil the exacting requirements of popular taste, or indeed of artistic criticism. The letterpress also is admirable. The book is handsomely bound in cloth, with gilt edges and lettering. As a worthy record of noble lives it deserves a place on every Christian drawing-room table."
Methodist Recorder.

GALVANISM v. SCIATICA and LUMBAGO.

39, Union-street, Tranmere, Birkenhead, 28th February, 1890.

Dear Sir,—I feel I ought to thank you as the means, in the hands of a merciful God, of restoring me to health and strength. For upwards of four months I had been in a helpless condition, suffering from Sciatica and Lumbago, and was under three medical men; a fourth doctor was called in, and he informed me that my sciatic nerves and lumbar muscles were contracted, and the muscles of left leg completely wasted for want of circulation, and my sufferings were so great that they injected morphia to give me rest. One doctor advised electricity as a last resource, and I wrote to you, and from the first hour I wore your Galvanic Belt I obtained immediate relief, and day by day the cramps and severe pains gradually left me, and my muscles are perfectly restored again. I have now resumed business, believing my cure to be permanent. I have recommended your treatment to many of my friends and neighbours who have witnessed the wonderful cure effected in my case, and I consider your Galvanic appliances a marvellous scientific invention. One of the doctors called on me to know the result, and asked me what I thought of your Belt. I replied, I don't think, but I know, it has been my Salvation.—Yours faithfully, J. PHILLIPS.

Mr. J. L. Pulvermacher, 194, Regent-street, W.

GALVANISM v. INDIGESTION and NERVOUS DEBILITY.

Melview, Clonmel, Ireland, February 21, 1890.

Dear Sir,—I have only worn your Galvanic Bands for two months, since which I have had no return of the ailments I suffered from in consequence of the damp weather (indigestion and nervous debility). I now feel strong and healthy, which I believe is due entirely to using your electric appliance, and shall feel obliged if you will send me some of your pamphlets for my friends.—Yours very truly, (Mrs.) L. MALCOMSON.

Mr. J. L. Pulvermacher, 194, Regent-street, W.

GALVANISM v. EXTREME NERVOUS DEBILITY and SLEEPLESSNESS.

12, Henry-street, Rawtenstall, Lancashire, February 17, 1890.

Dear Sir,—You will be pleased to hear of the recovery of my apparently hopeless case. It is now some months since you persuaded me to try one of your Electric Belts. I was then suffering from nervous weakness, loss of appetite, sleeplessness, and pain in the side. In fact, I was a complete wreck, and two physicians whom I consulted told me that I should never be well again. Before I consulted you I had lost 3 stone in weight, and was so completely broken down, I lost all hope; but after wearing your Belt for a short time I began to revive, and in two months the improvement was so rapid that one of my physicians told me I should get well again; and now that I am restored to health, you are at perfect liberty to use this letter as a testimonial. —Faithfully yours, J. NORTH.

Mr. J. L. Pulvermacher, 194, Regent-street, W.

GALVANISM v. NERVOUS EXHAUSTION.

The distressing symptoms of NERVOUS EXHAUSTION, LOSS of MUSCULAR POWER, RHEUMATISM, SCIATICA, PARALYSIS, EPILEPSY, &c., are speedily removed by means of PULVERMACHER'S world-famed GALVANIC BELTS, which convey the electric current direct to the affected parts, gradually stimulating and strengthening all the nerves and muscles, and speedily arresting all symptoms of premature waste and decay.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

(THIRTY-THIRD SERIES.)

LEFT LUNG DISEASED—CASE of MR. S. H. BLACKMORE, of MARLBOROUGH.

This patient is a clerk in the Post Office, Marlborough. He applied to me at the end of July, last year. Some time in the spring he had taken a very bad cold, the symptoms of which becoming worse, he was treated for bronchitis. Making no progress, he consulted a second doctor, who reported his lungs to be in a very weak state, and ordered him to Clevedon. Here he was under another local doctor, but getting no better was again carefully examined, with the result that a diseased spot was found in the left lung.

At the time the patient wrote me from Clevedon the cough had become severe, the expectoration had assumed the well-marked greenish hue; the night perspirations had become profuse, but had diminished at Clevedon. There were the usual accompaniments of wheezing, pains in the chest, and weakness; and some loss of weight was distinctly noted.

I at once advised the patient, sending medicine. I was pleased to hear of his improvement in the cough, pains, character of the expectoration, and breathing, with a slight gain of flesh. This in a fortnight.

At the latter end of August he writes me that he had wonderfully gained strength. He could sleep all night without coughing, and that all his symptoms had improved.

Also on September 15 he writes: "I am now myself again."

Having gone back to work at Marlborough, perhaps too early, a slight relapse occurred with the advent of damp and trying weather; but on December 1 he writes me: "I am pleased to say I am in a state of perfect health. I am able to do without the medicine now, as all symptoms have vanished. I thank you most heartily for your attention and kindness, and trust many more may reap the benefit of your wonderful treatment. You may make what use you like of my testimony."

I have just heard again from him (February 26): "I am now quite well."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR

Is a Household Requisite of Constant Utility.

That BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR possesses very valuable qualities as a food for all classes, at all periods of life except earliest infancy, has been attested by eminent dietetic authorities, as well as by universal public experience during over thirty years.

Interested attempts to set aside these facts in favour of other foods can only appeal to ignorance and prejudice, and it remains true that no other kind of food can serve the special purposes of Corn Flour.

Society for Promoting FEMALE EDUCATION IN THE EAST.

Treasurer: Sir W. R. FARQUHAR, Bart.

This Society, established fifty-five years ago, has lived to see its work, once considered Utopian, not only fully recognised as possible, but regarded as an indispensable part of Gospel Missions.

The sphere of the Society's work embraces China, Japan, India, Persia, Africa, and the Levant, and it includes the establishment of Orphanages, Boarding, Day, and Infant Schools, Bible and Sewing Classes, Mothers' Meetings, Zenana Visiting, and Medical Work.

This important work is now crippled by want of funds. HELP is therefore URGENTLY NEEDED for its support and extension, and will be most gratefully received by THE SECRETARY, Miss Webb, 267, Vauxhall Bridge Road, London, S.W.; or by the Bankers, Messrs. Herries, Farquhar & Co., 16, St. James's Street, S.W.

A NEW BOOK BY SIR J. WILLIAM DAWSON.

MODERN IDEAS OF EVOLUTION AS RELATED TO MODERN REVELATION AND SCIENCE. By Sir J. WILLIAM DAWSON, C.M.G., LL.D., F.R.S., Author of "Acadian Geology," "The Chain of Life in Geological Time," "Egypt and Syria: their Physical Features in Relation to Bible History," &c. Crown 8vo. 5s., cloth boards.

"In this volume Sir William Dawson discusses in a calm and philosophic spirit the leading positions of the rival modern theories of evolution. He shows by conclusive evidence that we are by no means compelled to admit that the case for evolution is established. He shows that while science has reason to be grateful for the facts ascertained, revelation has yet nothing to fear from the mutually destructive views of the present followers of Darwin. The book is worthy of the careful attention not only of ministers and men of science, but of all young and thoughtful readers."

MARY LOUISA WHATELY. Her Life and Work. By Her Sister. With Portrait. Crown 8vo. 2s., cloth boards.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we shall give portrait and sketch of the late Mr. George H. Stuart, of Philadelphia.

The great Protestant meeting called for Tuesday last in Exeter Hall was unavoidably postponed. It will, all being well, be held on May 23.

The expositions by Rev. F. B. Meyer on the First Epistle of Peter were concluded last week. Many of our readers will be glad to know that the Daily Notes on the Book of Psalms, which commence in our present issue, are from Mr. Meyer's pen.

In a recent issue we gave an extract from the "Key to Theosophy," showing that the exponents of that esoteric system do not believe in God in any definite sense. We have received a letter from "A Christian and a Fellow of the Theosophical Society," charging us with "suppressing a qualifying passage" in our quotation. We contented ourselves with showing that the "Key" plainly repudiated "the God of the Christians." Our reason for not giving the entire passage is the offensive way in which "the God of the Bible" was spoken of. This repudiation of the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ fully justifies us in declaring this system to be from beneath, and not from above. We trust that those who have become fascinated thereby will have given unto them that spiritual light and grace which shall enable them to see that in Christ alone are hid "all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge."

We are glad to quote the following from a recent letter by Rev. Newman Hall:—

"Everywhere I find the people anxious and delighted to hear the old Gospel—Christ Himself, as expounded by Paul and the other Apostles. Whatever seeming departure there may be, it is more by a few only of the younger preachers, who read a little of modern science and criticism, and ventilate doubts of which most of their hearers have never heard. The great danger, I think, is from the Ritualism which is rampant in most places I visit. More and more I long for a federal and heart union of all in all churches who hold the fundamental truth of the absolute efficiency and completeness of the one sacrifice of the one and only High Priest, Christ Jesus."

The last, and on many accounts the ablest, attack on the evangelical interpretation of the New Testament appears in Dr. Martineau's new book on "The Seat of Authority in Religion" (Longmans). But we do not fear to say that the injury it will do will be to the reputation of an octogenarian and distinguished writer who has compressed into it the studies of a long life. The attempt to resuscitate the exploded notions of the Tübingen school; to frame a Christianity without the supernatural; to make human consciousness the judge of what is true or false in Scripture; and to reduce to fanaticism all testimony of witnesses that does not accord therewith, has already been pronounced an impossible one even by critics of negative leanings.

Dr. Martineau is a man of vast learning, and with the repute of the highest philosophical intellect. To him the authority of the New Testament and of the Evangelical system of theology are one and the same. It is well that we have it so. It thus appears that if Evangelical religion is to be discredited, the records of the Gospels and Epistles must be set aside. This in the light and experience of eighteen centuries is an impossibility. The attack therefore must turn unto the furtherance of the truth. Well has The Spectator said, in an able article on the book, that such a mode of treating the New Testament is to bring men to a great tree, to tear away its leaves, to hew down its branches, to strip off its bark, and then point to its naked wreck and say that is the tree in its nobleness. A treatment of Christianity after this manner proclaims its own failure.

The "May Meetings" are in session. Two hundred and twenty years ago Richard Baxter poured out a lamentation that the world was closed against the Gospel. Now a wide and effectual door is opened almost everywhere. And the mark of Apostolic days is upon us: there are many adversaries. In India, a dominant caste; in China, an alarmed priesthood; in the Southern seas, Popish intrigues; in Madagascar and on the Congo, the lust of gold. The second Psalm is being fulfilled before our eyes. But, as the adversaries are imagining a vain thing, let us hear the word of Jehovah: "I have set my King upon my holy hill of Zion." Let the inspiration of our glorified, triumphant Redeemer be over our meetings, in prayers everywhere, and blend with our sympathies for the noble army of labourers.

In an address before the London Congregational Union, Dr. Joseph Parker denounced in very incisive language what he termed "religious journals." Extraordinary to say, a long letter of strong reflections on Mr. Spurgeon appeared three days after from Dr. Parker in a weekly contemporary. The leading organ of Congregationalists, The Nonconformist and Independent, defends religious journalism from the attack made on it, and declares that it is conducted as honourably as the secular, and that it excludes reflections on men which such papers admit.

Whatever may be the defects of the Revised Version of the Scriptures, few scholars will be found to deny that it has many conspicuous excellencies. The more general use of this version would doubtless conduce to a more correct acquaintance with the Word of God. There seems, however, to be a prejudice against the employment of the Revised Version in public worship. At the London Diocesan Conference last week, a resolution was proposed in favour of clergymen being at liberty to use it if so disposed. It was urged that "public feeling" preponderates in favour of the Authorised Version, but, of course, this is no argument. Many will regret that the Conference did not sanction the course suggested. The discussion led the Bishop of London to say that he regarded it as extremely improbable that any bishop would allow the prosecution of any clergyman who might make use of the Revised Version in public worship.

It is to be regretted that Lord Meath's Bill, with regard to the custody of children of vicious parents, has again been nipped in the bud. Recent events have amply proved the need of some such measure, and, as Lord Thring said in the course of the debate, the evidence given before the Sweating Committee further emphasised this necessity. On the introduction of Lord Meath's Bill last session, the Lord Chancellor undertook to bring in a measure dealing with the subject; but, although this suggestion was made in the recent debate, on this occasion he gave no undertaking to that effect.

Many of the churches are being so saturated with another Gospel which is not another, the so-called gospel of Fatherhood, that their members are to a large extent becoming unevangelised while talking about the evangelisation of the masses. The learned shallowness of "advanced thought," which knows far less of the unsearchable riches of Christ than many a saint of the old time who could not read, is making worse havoc of the Church than did Saul of Tarsus; and putting more men and women than he did into a worse prison of indifference and doubt. The fear of the Lord is explained away, and the power to persuade men is largely lost. The Gospel is no power in the mouths of self-satisfied saints, nor has it any grip upon self-satisfied sinners. "Only a broken-hearted sinner can receive a crucified Christ." "Oh, that Thou wouldest rend the heavens and come down, that the mountains might flow down at thy presence!"

On two occasions last week the slave trade was discussed in Parliament, on votes in Committee of Supply. It was alleged that British interference with the traffic on the East Coast of Africa is so wanting in energy as to be of little use; and, moreover, that Britain subsidises steamers which carry slave-borne goods. We are sorry to observe that the East African Company, which has promised so much, should be implicated in the scandal, consequent upon having employed slave labour. Mr. Hanbury deserves thanks for rallying members of the House to the flag of freedom. In one of his speeches he said:—

> The miseries of the slave trade have been enormously increased by the pharisaic and half-hearted way in which we have acted, while making great professions about the suppression of the slave trade. We are repeating the error by subsidising a line of steamers which carry slave-borne goods; and, of course, the amount of trade will be increased, and the result will be an enormous extension of the slave trade. What we ought to do is to subsidise a line into the interior, which would abolish the necessity for the employment of slaves.

Though the subject was well debated, nothing was resolved on that gives promise of terminating or even diminishing the evil.

"Parker to Spurgeon."

"AN OPEN LETTER."

"Then sent Sanballat his servant unto me...with an open letter in his hand."—NEHEMIAH vi. 5.

DR. JOSEPH PARKER writes in The British Weekly "An Open Letter" to Mr. Spurgeon, whom he blesses in his heart and orphanage, and anathematises in his head and tabernacle, and takes farewell of him with "Good bye, you sturdy, honest old soul." It would be hard if "this fertilising shower" of "suggestions" did not find some arid places. But here, as often is the case, the illustrations are the test of the homily. We should not know exactly what it meant unless it were explained by concrete incidents.

Dr. Parker gathers material for his attack upon his brother minister from the ex parte statements of two young men, and from a sentence extracted from a newspaper report of one of Mr. Spurgeon's sermons.

His first anecdote is this:—

> Now, for the matter I have in charge. It relates to the cruelty of your theological judgments—judgments which you do not mean to be cruel, yet they have all the effect of deliberate savagery. A young man rose to reply to me at a working men's meeting, and said that Spurgeon had driven him into infidelity. The young man's mother had not made any profession of religion, but was wise, affectionate, and most unselfish in her devotion to her family. She died. The young man (then a member of a Baptist church) went to you, hoping that you might be able to comfort him. He stated his case. He waited for your reply. You simply said, "He that believeth shall be saved, he that believeth not shall be damned." The young man understood (as he could hardly help doing) that his mother was in the latter condition in your opinion. He then and there, knowing what she had been in disposition and in service, determined to cast in his lot with his mother, so he left the Baptist church and united himself with a so-called unbeliever or heretic, who told him, as I should have done in the name of Christ, that the last judgment is with God, who alone knows the heart, and in God's hands we must leave the issues which we cannot explain.

Now if Mr. Spurgeon "simply said," in reply to that sorrowing son, "He that believeth shall be saved, he that believeth not shall be damned," he would rather have shown want of heart than want of head; but Dr. Parker's representation is that his fellow-servant's "blemished part" is rather in "the head than heart." Is Dr. Parker sure that Mr. Spurgeon "simply said" the words above quoted? and if so, was it right to publish this statement without first asking for Mr. Spurgeon's version of the interview? It appears to us an extraordinary breach of ministerial propriety, of Christian courtesy, and of common fairness, to publish this one-sided story as an illustration of—

> That leering, slavering, sly-winking Calvinism that says, Bless the Lord we are all right, booked straight through to heaven first-class, and insured against both collision and explosion; as for those who have missed the train or been crushed to death, it is not for us to find fault with discriminating grace or arrest the action of Divine decrees.

While we doubt that Mr. Spurgeon did no more than quote this text, let us ask, was it necessarily either foolish or unfeeling to remind that young brother of the Master's words? For there is duty to the living as well as consideration for the dead. There are thousands of mothers who are "wise" as regards earthly things, "affectionate and most unselfish in their devotion to their family," but who neglect or reject or deny the Lord that bought them; and concerning whom we cannot help but ask, "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?" while we only too thankfully "leave in God's hands the issues which we cannot explain," a relief from which Dr. Parker cannot fairly assume that Mr. Spurgeon shut out himself or the young man who sought his counsel.

This is Dr. Parker's second anecdote illustrative of "the kind of Calvinism which" "the Spurgeon of the Tabernacle" "sometimes represents," and which the Doctor says, "I simply hate as I hate selfishness and blasphemy":—

> The second case is that of a young man who came to me with the statement that Spurgeon had driven him to distraction and despair. I quote the substance of his statement:—"I cannot see my way clear to belief in all the miracles. I do not want to reject them; I want to believe them, but I cannot. I went to hear Spurgeon preach, and he simply denounced everybody like myself, and damned us for our unbelief." The young man quite writhed in pain, and cried bitterly, giving every evidence of the deepest earnestness and feeling.

After explaining how he himself more wisely spoke to the young man, Dr. Parker thus frames his indictment against "the Spurgeon of the Tabernacle":—

> I accuse you of the heterodoxy of one-sidedness; I accuse you of want of spiritual discrimination; I accuse you of a bluntness, which can only be accounted for by the worst kind of spiritual ignorance.

A young man in a morbid condition of mind hears a sermon which, as likely as not, he more or less misinterprets, and Dr. Parker, without offering the preacher the opportunity of explanation, attributes to him the worst kind of spiritual ignorance.

Such a charge, resting upon such a narrative, is very like an inverted pyramid.

It is worth while to sit for a moment at Dr. Parker's feet, and hear his wiser counsel to the distracted and despairing young doubter:—

> I ventured to tell him that damnation did not turn upon our belief of miracles, but upon our rejection of Christ Himself. Christ never made much of his own miracles, as mere signs and wonders, but He made everything of Himself.

This last sentence is not true. On the contrary, Jesus appeals from Himself to his works, and says, "The Father that dwelleth in Me, He doeth the works. Believe Me, that I am in the Father, and the Father in Me; or else believe Me for the very works' sake." The beloved disciple tells us that the signs which Jesus did "manifested forth his glory"; and that they were written that we "might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and believing, have life through his name" (John ii. 11, xiv. 10, 11, xx. 30, 31). Peter founds his Pentecostal appeal to Israel on "Jesus of Nazareth, a Man approved of God by miracles, and wonders, and signs, which God did by Him in the midst of you"; and the Apostle to the Hebrews enforces his question, "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?" by reminding them that God bore witness to Jesus and his Apostles, "both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to his own will."

We are not going to denounce as an unbeliever a young man who, we are assured, "gave every evidence of the deepest earnestness and feeling"; but we do not think it at all unlikely that had he gone to Mr. Spurgeon he would have received counsel more scriptural, and, therefore, more truly comforting, than that which he received from the writer of the "open letter."

The third illustration of Mr. Spurgeon's wrongheadedness is found in the following sentence from a newspaper report: "Every funeral is God's repetition of His anathema against sin." Whereupon the Doctor asks, "Who taught you such nonsense?" The nonsense seems to be in the question. As the context is not quoted from the sermon, we must take this brief sentence as it stands; but we fail to see where the nonsense comes in. It conveys to us much the same sentiment as those oft-quoted words of Milton:—

> Of man's first disobedience, and the fruit
> Of that forbidden tree whose mortal taste
> Brought death into the world, and all our woe.

From the three items mentioned the writer of the open letter proceeds to such a supercilious mode of address as this:—"Believe me, you are really not infallible. Pardon me if I venture upon the suggestion that even you are presumably human." We refrain from characterising these sentences. The consistent testimony of "the Spurgeon of the Tabernacle" will not be discredited by criticism of this order.

This one-sided "open letter" has a mischievous significance beyond its injustice to Mr. Spurgeon. Family life would be made miserable, social and business relations would be thrown into confusion, if children, or servants, or clients were encouraged to complain of the father to the mother, or of the decision of one partner to another. Few things would tend more quickly to discredit the ministry than for pastors to listen to one-sided and unauthenticated complaints from dissatisfied inquirers or disturbed hearers, and upon them to base virulent accusations in open letters in the public press.

Malign utterances come home to roost. We commend to Dr. Parker's own personal consideration his words in the sentence beginning, "I accuse you of the heresy of one-sidedness."

FRENCH HOME-MISSION WORK.—An "occasional paper" records progress in the excellent home-mission and evangelistic work conducted by a committee of the Union of Free Evangelical Churches of France. The Committee not only aids churches in various parts, but establishes mission stations in needy towns and villages. The number of stations at present is twenty-three, and there is an itinerant agent that gives help wherever required. Altogether thirty-five places are regularly evangelised, and many hamlets are also visited from time to time. The workers have of late had precious encouragements; they see, however, the pressing need of further extension. The secretary of the work is M. Bonnet, Clairac, Lot-et-Garonne.

COMMUNION WINE.—At a recent Gospel temperance meeting at Castletown, a Manx fisherman, known to be a sincere child of God, said:—"In early life I was a slave to strong drink; but through the instrumentality of the temperance movement I was led to give it up. I subsequently became converted to God, and, longing to obey his almost last command, 'Do this in remembrance of Me,' I went to the Communion. The instant I tasted the wine, so highly was it charged with alcohol, the old longing came back, and from that moment, nine years ago, I have never once been to the Lord's Table. I dare not lead myself into temptation." J. D.

HOME OF REST FOR CHRISTIANS AT LITTLEHAMPTON.—Close to the sea, on the Norfolk road, the house, "The Hillyers," is a very comfortable place of temporary retirement for hard-worked Christian soldiers. In 1887, Rev. W. D. and Mrs. Sargent, of Croydon, opened a cottage; six months later they took a larger house; last year additional accommodation was required, and adjoining premises taken. Many who were on the verge of physical breakdown have been harboured, and have gone back to home and church stronger to work and mightier to live. The last annual report states that a still more commodious building is much needed, and that by an outlay of £6000 a Home could be erected large enough to hold a hundred visitors at one time, and afford rest and change to 1700 workers in the course of a year.

The Book of Psalms.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

The Jewish Psalms have furnished the bridal hymns, the battle songs, the pilgrim marches, the penitential prayers, and the public praises of every nation in Christendom, since Christendom was born. They have rolled through the din of every great European battlefield; they have pealed through the scream of the storm in every ocean highway of the world. Drake's sailors sang them when they clave the virgin waters of the Pacific; Frobisher's when they dashed against the barriers of Arctic ice and night. They floated over the waters on that day of days when England held her freedom against Pope and Spaniard, and won the naval supremacy of the world. They crossed the ocean with the Mayflower pilgrims; were sung round Cromwell's camp fires, and his Ironsides charged to their music; whilst they have filled the peaceful homes of England with the voice of supplication and the breath of praise. In palace halls, by happy hearths, in squalid rooms, in pauper wards, in prison cells, in crowded sanctuaries, in lonely wilderness—everywhere they have uttered our moan of contrition and our song of triumph, our tearful complaints and our wrestling, conquering prayer.

About one-third of the Psalms are anonymous. Seventy-three bear the name of David, "the sweet Psalmist of Israel." Twenty-four are attributed to the minstrels of his reign, and to subsequent singers, some of whom may have lived in the glorious period of Ezra's restoration. Two are attributed to Solomon, and one to Moses, "the man of God."

The inscriptions of the Psalms have given rise to much discussion. Some of them indicate the musical accompaniment, which had been carefully selected, whether with flutes, as the 5th, or with stringed instruments, as the 6th. Others express the intentions of the Psalms, to teach, to bring to remembrance, to give thanks. Others again commemorate the circumstances under which the Psalms they head were penned; as for instance the 56th, which is entitled, "The silent dove in far-off lands," and commemorates the time when David was an exile in the land of the Philistines.

The Hebrew Title for this precious collection of Sacred Hymns is Praises; and rightly so, for the most prominent feature in it is Praise. The rendering of this word into Greek gives us our title Psalms. There are five books embraced in this collection:—

The First, including i.-xli.; ending with the doxology and double amen.

The Second, including xlii.-lxxii.; ending in the same way, and with the further addition that: "The prayers of David, the son of Jesse, are ended."

The Third, including lxxiii.-lxxxix.; ending in the same way.

The Fourth, including cx.-cvi; ending with doxology, amen, and hallelujah.

The Fifth, including cvii.-cl.; ending with repeated hallelujahs.

There are three ways in which the Psalms may be studied. We may look at them, first, as recording the inner heart-history of those who wrote them, and especially of David. We cannot understand his life merely by reading the historical books; but when we compare the outer with the inner, and listen to his own musings on the varied episodes of his changeful career, we are able to form an altogether new and realistic conception of that rich and many-chorded nature. It was good that he should be afflicted: that he should extract from the wine-press of his sorrows a cordial to cheer all weary and aching hearts till time shall be no more.

Next, we should study the Psalter in its bearing on our blessed Lord. He said Himself, "It is written in the Psalms concerning Me"; and He expressed some of his deepest emotions in words borrowed from that marvellous vocabulary. There are some Psalms that are entirely Messianic, for they can have no useful reference but to Him; others have a primary reference to some figure or event in Hebrew story, from which, however, they soon pass on, to find a richer and wider fulfilment in Him to whose person and work all the rays of Scripture converge. It is the Spirit of Christ which breathes throughout the Psalter, and we cannot be surprised if it often rises into tones and expressions of thought which may be uttered by human lips, but certainly emanate from a higher than mortal source. In this sense David's Son is also David's Root.

Lastly, we may study the Psalms for ourselves, nourishing our spirits with their rich expressions of experimental religion. Few men have reached such heights of joy, or touched such depths of penitential grief, as David. Nor is there a note in the entire gamut of the experiences of the religious life, which does not speak beneath his marvellous touch. When language fails us, these Psalms will often express our deepest selves, our yearnings for God, our contrition for sin, our inexpressible joy. They are like some marble staircase, trodden by myriads of feet, yet unworn and clearcut still, up which we too may pass from the blessedness of the initial verse, to the ringing hallelujahs that peal out their inspired anthems in the closing sentence of this Golden Book of the inner life.

May He, who is expressly said to have been their Author (2 Sam. xxiii. 2; Heb. iii. 7, 8), give us his own divine and blessed help as we seek to open up their sacred and blessed treasures.

Mr. Gladstone on the Creation

In his second paper, in Good Words for May, Mr. Gladstone considers "the Creation story," as recorded in the beginning of Genesis. After alluding to the subsequent Scripture references to the narrative, he proceeds to ask how this recital of what was outside of and anterior to the very earliest human experience, came into the possession of mankind. He maintains that the tale of the Creation is not poetry, nor science, nor theory; it is represented as a recital of history. If it is, as it professes to be, a serious conveyance of truth, it can only be a communication from the Most High; a communication to man and for the use of man, therefore in a form adapted to his mind and to his use.

Passing on to suggest the moral and spiritual lessons intended to be conveyed and impressed by the narrative, the writer deems that one lesson is to teach man his proper place in creation. Another to make him know and feel what was the beautiful and noble home he inhabited, and with what a fatherly and tender care Providence had prepared it for him to dwell in. Another would be to show the institution of the day of rest by exhibiting it as an object-lesson. The purpose of the revelation is not scientific, but for moral and spiritual ends, though the truth conveyed had a physical basis. The days of Creation, in Mr. Gladstone's view, are neither solar days, nor geological periods, but rather chapters, or stages, in the history of Creation; several and distinct, even if, like the lapse of time, they were without breach of continuity. But whatever view be taken as to the "days," the moral intent and the moral benefit remains the same.

Mr. Gladstone proceeds to cite and to give ingenious replies to various objections by the "Contradictionists" to the recorded chronological order of Creation, and closes by reasserting his belief, on a consideration of all the facts and investigations, "that the Ordainer of Nature and the Giver or Guide of the Creation Story are one and the same."

German Prisons.

What a striking contrast I find in the prisons here to those of other Continental countries. France in her dealings with criminals is excessively severe; Italy is careless alike of their health and their morals, making them work seven days in the week; Austria is intolerant to a degree of anyone but the priests of Rome seeking their spiritual welfare; and Spain, with her filthy gaols, is a disgrace to the nineteenth century; but one and all are identical in never supplying their prisoners with the Word of life. In one prison in Belgium I have seen sixty men in one room all sentenced "for life." In a Spanish prison in North Africa there were nearly 3000 men, mostly with life sentences, but in no instance had any of them ever had a copy of the Scriptures, save as I had managed to supply them. Here, after I have visited the prisons of Berlin, I have the joy and pleasure to report that in every cell I found a copy of the Scriptures and a hymn-book.

The treatment compares favourably with our own. There are light and airy workshops, well ventilated; many are working at trades, thus partly paying for their own expense to the State, and laying up a little for themselves when released. Here and there you see a portrait of mother and sister, or perhaps a wife, on the table of the lonely cell. Liberty is given to certain godly people to visit the prisoners, whose efforts to bring them to a sense of their sinfulness, and thus produce conviction, which may lead to conversion, have not been without fruit. There are also societies ready to take in hand the released prisoner, and start him afresh. All this on the Continent was to me novel and pleasing; and there are many things in the system of prison discipline and management as arranged in Germany, that England would do well to follow.

In the central prison in Berlin a large stained window in the chapel and the large Bible in the pulpit were the gift of the late Empress Augusta. The signatures of the old Emperor and Empress were pointed out to me in the visitors' book, where the name of the present Emperor is also found.

Thanks to Count Bernstorff, my stay here was pleasant, and my work easy. I looked in at the Y.M.C.A., and found a live, healthy Association, apparently in good hands. On Sunday I heard a bright, earnest, evangelical sermon in the American Church—"new birth," "atonement," and such words, told of no "uncertain sound." Those who reside here say Berlin has greatly improved these last fifteen years. I must add, however, in closing, that they have followed England in gambling. As in our own land, it has greatly increased. Men cry out in the streets the sporting papers, and the sporting news. Races seem by the advertisements to be always going on, and men are as much absorbed in the intoxication of gambling as in London.

Berlin, April 25.

A COTTAGE HOSPITAL is greatly needed for poor Protestants in the Spanish towns of Jerez, Puerto Sta. Maria, Pto. Real, San Fernando, and Cadiz, which lie close to one another. Christian work has been carried on in these centres for over twenty years with some success; congregations have been formed and daily schools have been established, and the necessity of such an institution is more than ever felt. Mission work is chiefly among the poor classes. Even Roman Catholics have a horror of entering the Provincial hospitals, because of the defective treatment. How much more the Protestants, who, in addition to other privations, are persecuted on account of their religion! By utilising some freehold property, two hundred pounds would enable the friends to build and furnish a small hospital. Christians are asked to aid the project. The appeal is endorsed by Rev. William Moore, Principal, Missionary Training College, Puerto Sta. Maria; and Rev. Joseph Viliesid, minister of Spanish Church, Jerez.

Seed-Sowing in China.

IN sending us a copy of the report of the "Central China Religious Tract Society," for the year 1889, Rev. Griffith John writes from the Yang-tsze-Kiang:—

For more than fifteen years, the work of this Society has been growing in strength and influence. All its publications are carefully revised by a committee of examiners, and no tract, however small, is accepted without receiving the imprimatur of this committee. This will account, in a measure, for the acknowledged excellency of its tracts, and for the great demand which exists for them all over China. The circulation has been steadily going up from the beginning, but last year it reached a mark which astonished the most sanguine among us. Throughout the year orders kept flowing in from all quarters, in response to which more than a million copies of our various publications were sent forth. That no special effort was made to get up a number will appear from the fact that, over and above the million, we had in hand at the close of the year orders for tracts to the extent of about one hundred thousand which we were not able to execute.

When I came to China, about thirty-five years ago, the scheme of the venerable John Angell James, to supply China with a million Testaments, was the grand sensation of the day, so far as the missionary world was concerned. God's people throughout the world took a great interest in that magnificent effort to touch the heart of China, and much good was expected to flow from it. Though the expected results have not followed, it is impossible not to admire the grandeur of the idea as it filled the soul of that devoted saint of God.

Our Hankow Religious Tract Society has been doing its work very noiselessly there; even its existence is not known to many in England, yet it has managed to give China more than a million of tracts within one year, and nearly four millions in all since its commencement. And this it has done, not in pursuance of any particular scheme, but simply in trying as they present themselves from time to time.

Our tracts contain the very pith and marrow of the Gospel. They are written in both the literary style and the Mandarin dialect, and are thus adapted for the scholar on the one hand and the general reader on the other. They find their way into all the provinces of China proper; into Mongolia, Japan, Corea, Singapore, Australia, America, and almost every other place where the Chinaman dwells. They are ordered and used by all the societies in China, and thus prove themselves to be undenominational in their character, and a valuable aid to direct missionary work everywhere.

We, the missionaries at Hankow, feel that we are called of God to give much of our time and energies to the preparation of such a literature as that which the Central China Religious Tract Society is sending forth. The one aim of all our tracts is to lead this great people into the knowledge of God in Christ. Some of our publications contain information on historical, geographical, and scientific matters; but all this comes in only by way of illustration and allurement. The theme is God and his redemptive love. Others may go in for secular teaching as such, and we wish them well. China needs every kind of teaching the missionary can give her people. But this is not our vocation. Another line of work has been marked out for us, which appears to us to be of surpassing importance, and to which we have hitherto devoted ourselves.

And we know that our labour in this direction is not in vain. Our books are being widely read, and a knowledge of God's saving truth is gradually covering the land. We are constantly meeting with people who have read them, and who have been more or less influenced by them. Among the Christians there are some who are indebted to the book for the first awakening of the Divine life in their souls.

SEVERAL VERY INTERESTING ILLUSTRATIONS of this fact are given in the report. Take the following:—"I have much joy in stating," writes one missionary, "that a military Mandarin named Ping has abandoned forty-eight years of vegetarian merit and idol worship, as a result of reading some tracts and a copy of the New Testament." "As the result of the colporteur's work," writes another brother, "many have been induced to abandon idolatry, and place themselves under Christian instruction, and several of these I have had the pleasure of receiving into the communion of Christ's Church." "Scriptures and tracts," writes a brother from Wen-chow, "are circulated all over this district, and are read with much interest. There has been a gradual but very manifest breaking down of prejudice during the last two or three years, and this I attribute in a considerable measure to the distribution of the Society's publications. Four B.A.'s have recently cast in their lot with us, and are bringing your books before all their educated friends. This district is being leavened by the two methods of preaching, oral and printed, and I do not know which is the most important."

TESTIMONIES MIGHT BE GREATLY MULTIPLIED,

but it is not necessary that I should adduce any more in order to show the great importance of this branch of the missionary work.

I may add that, in connection with the National Bible Society of Scotland, there were sent forth from Hankow last year, 5398 whole New Testaments, and 204,860 portions, or a total of 210,258 books. Thus, in the year 1889, Hankow alone gave China more than a million of tracts, and nearly a quarter of a million of Scriptures in whole or in parts. What a mighty army of preachers to send forth from one centre in one year. Well may Mr. Bonsey, the secretary, speak of the fact as unique in the history of the Christian Church in China. And yet what is a million, or a million and a quarter, of books amongst the many millions of China? In asking you to remember this work in your prayers, I am not asking too much. Our prayer is that God's blessing may rest on every book and every tract, and that many may find Christ the Saviour in the reading of them. Please join us in this petition.

But we need more than your prayers, if this work is to go on and grow. We are greatly indebted to the Religious Tract Society of London for their ever ready and generous help. Without their aid we could have done nothing. We depend a good deal on the part payment for the tracts sent out by us. All our tracts are sold, and last year the sales brought in the very substantial sum of £350. But the payment is only a part of the cost, and there is a loss on every tract sold. The larger the circulation the greater the loss. In former years any debit cash balance was more than covered by stock and other assets; but, owing to the immense circulation of last year, there is an actual deficit on the year's working. Any help towards clearing off this deficit, and enabling us to extend our operations will be thankfully received. There is much land to be possessed in this special direction. If the Lord's stewards at home cannot come over themselves and help us, perhaps they would not mind sending us a little of their gold and silver as a substitute.

You will be glad to hear that on a visit recently paid to the Hiaw-kan district by Mr. Sparham, Dr. Davenport, and myself, eleven were added to our numbers—nine baptized and two admitted to full communion. We saw much to inspire hope, and to fill our hearts with gratitude on this journey. I am now on my way to I-Chang, where the Church of Scotland has been carrying on work for several years. Mr. Cockburn has just finished his new chapel, and at his urgent request I am going up to open it. Years since, I escorted him and Mr. Paton to their station, and had the pleasure of helping them to establish themselves in the city of I-Chang. It is a double pleasure to go now, and give any further help in my power.

PAST AND PRESENT.

It is now twenty-two years since I went up the river for the first time, accompanied by my dear friend, the late Mr. Wylie. That was the first missionary journey made by any Protestant missionary in this region. We went up by the Yang-tsze and its tributary, the Min, as far as Chengtu, the capital of Sze-Chwan. We then tramped Sze-Chwan, and made for the river Han. At Han-Chung Foo we took a boat and came down to Hankow by the Han. It was a journey of about three thousand miles, and it took us more than five months to complete it. We preached and sold books at almost every city, and at most of the towns on the route. But the fact to which I wish to call attention is this. From the day we left Hankow to the day we returned to it, we never saw a foreigner (with the exception of two or three Roman Catholic priests), and never came across a single Protestant convert. We met with one or two who had heard the Gospel at Hankow, and that was all.

How different the present state of things! On the same route there are now from ten to twenty mission stations manned by foreign missionaries, and several more stations in other parts of the provinces through which we passed. I cannot give the number of foreign workers who are now occupying this vast region; but it is by no means inconsiderable. Neither can I give the number of converts connected with the different missions, but I know that the number is such as to cheer the hearts of the workers.

Going up the river once more, I find it impossible not to go back in thought to the past, and bless God for the great things which He has done. When I arrived in China in 1855, Hankow seemed far, far away, and as for Sze-Chwan, it seemed hopelessly distant. We had heard much of the magnificence and wealth of the province of Sze-Chwan, but none of us dared hope to see them. Thirteen years later, it was my privilege to preach the Gospel in the streets and temples of its cities; again a few years later, and missionaries were seen taking up their abode in these same cities, and now epistles are constantly passing between the mission house in Pyrland-road, London, and the church of God at Chengtu, Sze-chwan. Thus God has done great things in China during the past thirty-five years. What will He do during the next thirty-five years? Who can tell? The Divine resources are infinite.

A PRESSING NEED IN JEWISH WORK.—The speech of large numbers of Jews is what is known as Judeo-Polish or Hebrew-German. Mr. M. S. Bergmann, of Upton House, 222, Burdett-road, Bow, E., writes regretting that the Holy Scriptures in their integrity do not exist in this jargon. He says:—"Two-thirds, if not more, of the whole Jewish race are unable to understand the Hebrew language in which their own Scriptures are written. There is a kind of translation of the Old Testament in Judeo-Polish, but it is in conjunction with many Jewish commentaries, and is not so much a translation as a Rabbinical explanation. The most important passages in the law of Moses and the Prophets, which refer to the Messiah, are either overlooked, or so mystified and darkened, that it makes the Jew dislike and utterly hate the name of Jesus. The New Testament is widely circulated both in the Hebrew and Judeo-Polish; but of what good is it to the Jew, who does not know his own Old Testament? I am sure every Jewish missionary feels the great need of a Judeo-Polish version of the Old Testament." We join with Mr. Bergmann in the hope that the entire Scriptures may soon be translated into this widely-prevalent speech of the Jewish people.

"Nyassaland."—II.

BY CAPT. HORE (LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY).

(Concluded from last week.)

UNDER the title of "The Heart Disease of Africa," some of the horrors of the slave trade have been so touchingly and ably described by Professor Drummond as to aid greatly the determination to abolish that terrible traffic. Perhaps we owe, in great part, to those descriptions, some of the recent measures to that end. But, while the symptoms have been ably described, the diagnosis is so much in error as to lead to great mistakes about the nature of the disease. It goes to support the exaggerated statements current during the last two years as to the doings of Arabs in Nyassaland, and other parts of Africa: and to excite a feeling which has extended even to the supporters of Christian missions. That feeling has resulted in an indiscriminate crusade against Arabs, during which some have been outlawed, others put to death, and all over a large region rendered desperate, though many of them were the least guilty, and nearly all might have been made auxiliary to abolition measures.

The map which in "Tropical Africa" illustrates this chapter demonstrates a number of lines and patches as infected with this terrible disease, which should be covered in one dark patch from shore to shore; while the chapter itself changes the "African" into the "Arab" slave trade. If we can deal with the "African," the smaller "Arab" slave trade must die with it. But even if the "Arab" trade were entirely cleared away, the "African" trade will still exist in all its horror and vast extent. The reader is prejudiced by a condemnation of these Arabs, the worst part of their character and doings being only brought forward. To them and their religion are attributed all the evil doings of the lower and degraded classes, who, by the wearing of turbans, or for other reasons, may be classed with them.

This chapter also serves to perpetuate the mistaken idea of the Africans being universally oppressed by Arab slave-dealers, whereas the fact is that the greatest slave-traders are the Africans themselves. This is indicated by the phrase, "The slaves are needed to buy ivory with." It corresponds with Sir S. Baker's explanation of the commencement of the slave trade in the Soudan. Natives refused to sell their wares to the Arabs for cloth and beads, and demanded slaves. The Arabs, with no scruples of conscience on this head, yielded to the demand, and became slavers. Livingstone tells the same story of Arabs yielding to requests of Africans to buy slaves where ivory was scarce. The horrors of the slave raids of the far interior are committed, not by Arabs, but by natives and by disreputable half-castes, very likely by strangers mistaken for Arabs; those along the coast, where most visible to us, are no doubt by Arabs. The Arabs of Central Africa are frequently extensive slave-holders, but many extensive slave-holders are honest and benevolent. On the other hand, some of the real criminals, especially on the coast, may not own a single slave themselves.

That the ivory trade necessarily promotes the slave trade is certainly not the case, except so far as increase of population or influx of traders may increase that as well as other trades for the time being in any one place. On one great trunk line with which I am acquainted, the Arab ivory caravans consist of free hired porters of the Wanyamwezi on regular pay and rations, by agreement, as in other parts of the world. They are officered by the slaves of the Arab owner. These slaves, educated, and civilised, and with good clothes (Arab fashion), would undoubtedly be pronounced by an unexperienced European to be "Arabs" driving native slaves. A little inquiry only would aid the delusion, for many of the porters are slaves to their native owners, who serve with them as fellow porters; or to their chief, who hires them to the Arab, and stays at home awaiting their return. These porters come up country again, for on any great trunk route as many Africans pass up with barter goods and personal effects as go down with ivory.

The slaves who are collected for shipment at the coast have filtered or gravitated there from hand to hand till they accumulate at the coast towns in the hands of villainous traders, who, it is true, are chiefly Arabs and half-castes; but it is not at all correct to speak of all the coast Arabs as slave-trade criminals.

The two cases cited by Professor Drummond in his chapter on "The Heart Disease of Africa" have been misrepresented. The brief description given of the affair at the south end of Tanganyika* is altogether misleading. About the year 1870 Livingstone found the natives of that part—the Walungu—the constant prey of another tribe—the Wawemba—who continually raided them, and carried them off as slaves. About that time Tippoo Tib, and other Arabs "put things to rights" there, no doubt, like other African arbitrators, to their own advantage. By a succession of Arab residents ever since, until the time of the events described by Professor Drummond, the Walungu were protected from the attacks of the Wawemba, and attained the state of prosperity he refers to, and which was witnessed by myself. In 1883, Kabunda, the then Arab resident, went off to the coast. His going was the occasion of no very affectionate parting with the natives; but the great raiding and damage were the act of the old enemies of the tribe—the Wawemba, who came down upon the Walungu as soon as their protector was gone. Kabunda is now back again; the Wawemba are again restrained; the prosperity of the Walungu is returning; and even the missionaries there, who still attribute the trouble to him, refer to his return as a further ray of hope. The Walungu themselves are noted slavers. I have seen several expeditions of Wajiji and Wafipa, other tribes on Tanganyika, go there to buy slaves, for whom it has been considered for years a regular mart. This is altogether apart from procuration trade, or use by Arabs, or connection with the coast slave trade.

The other case referred to by Professor Drummond is the affair at the north end of Nyassa.† The progress of warfare between the African Lakes Company and the Arabs was for many months reported (on one side only) in the English newspapers as "Arab raids upon mission stations," and other exaggerated terms. It was really a gathering of Arabs and half-castes to the neighbourhood of the British trading station at Karongas, where was provided specially selected barter for the slave-trade, where they could sell their ivory, and obtain new supplies, without going to the coast, receiving every encouragement, if not direct invitation, to make it a centre of trade. Naturally, they wanted a place to settle, and these things are done of course as roughly by Arabs as by Europeans. I am informed by one who was there—and his statement confirmed the current country news coming to me on Tanganyika—that the Europeans commenced the war. The Arabs (who I believe, unassailed, have never yet attacked any missionary or other station in Central Africa) were up in arms directly. A war ensued, characterised by Europeans as on their part "a crusade against the slave trade," and on the part of the Arabs as "a war for the slave trade," or as "raids" and "attacks" on mission stations. The success of the Arabs would of course mean favourable circumstances for them, and all their trade, of whatever kind; but, from their point of view, they were fighting distinctly in defence of certain territorial trading rights, and in protest of the armed interference of their rivals. Missionaries, as a matter of course, in the disturbed state of the country, were sometimes in the Company's beleagured settlements, and subjected to all the inconveniences and dangers of siege. But, on the other side, strangers in the Arab camp suffered; one of the first men shot was an Arab who had gone over on business from Tanganyika, and had nothing to do with the warfare.

The suggestion that this was a challenge to Europe from the whole Mohammedan power cannot be entertained. Even at the south end of Tanganyika, the nearest settlement of Arabs, they hastened to assure us that they had nothing to do with the fight at Nyassa; indeed they first heard of it from me. The coincidence about that time of so-called Arab aggression on the Victoria Nyanza, and the opposition at the coast of some Arabs to the sudden violence of European aggression, added credence to the wild suggestion of general Mohammedan opposition to Christian enterprise. We had better say nothing about the religious aspect; alas for us, if our doings in Africa are to be referred to our religion.

The outcome of all this exaggeration has been a beclouding of our vision in regard to the African slave trade. Leaving the nine-tenths and the worst of the slave trade of inner Africa, we have turned to the Arabs, perhaps the least guilty of any—those who, we have ample evidence to show, would help us if rightly dealt with. Many of them, hurriedly pronounced "rebels" on the coast, are lost already to civilising influences. Busheri, of whom Colonel Euan Smith said at Exeter Hall last May, "He acted as a thorough gentleman in all his negociations with us," was driven to desperation, and, when captured, was hung at once. Bevana Heri, who ever since 1877 has been the host and friend of all missionaries and travellers entering East Africa by way of Saadani, and who has frequently acted as arbitrator between Arabs and myself about slaves, has, in like manner, been made an outlaw, and will probably share the same fate. Tippoo Tib, the protector of the mission on Tanganyika, too far afield to be bombarded, is the subject of abuse in the public press. Many others are already slain of those who have aided and rendered possible our enterprises into inner Africa. These violent and impolitic proceedings are the outcome of exaggerations which are neither English nor Christian.

The slave trade that loudly calls for repressive effort is African. Let the strongest measures be taken against all the criminals, African, Arab, or European. But simply to hunt down the Arabs will be to cause many innocent persons to suffer, and set our best helpers against us. Even if such a crusade were effectually prosecuted, it would only affect a small portion of the African slave trade.

* "It was but yesterday that an explorer, crossing from Lake Nyassa to Lake Tanganyika, saw the whole southern end of Tanganyika peopled with large and prosperous villages. The next to follow him found not a solitary human being—nothing but burned bones and bleaching skeletons." ("Nyassaland," pp. 72, 73.)

† The Professor says in effect ("Nyassaland," pp. 73, 74) that the Arabs stealthily found their way into the prosperous country of Wa-Nkonde tribe, and when they were strong enough they asserted their authority, ultimately compassing the expulsion of the whole tribe from their fatherland.

CEYLON.—Rev. G. Gray, of the Baptist Mission, Ratuapura, Ceylon, writes that, owing to the health of his family, he is returning to England this month. He says:—"Our Mission is making steady and satisfactory progress. We have a whole province under our control, with but three native assistants and a few schoolmasters to assist in the proclamation of the truth among the thousands of heathen, so that our progress can, with the present staff, be but slow. However, God is pleased to bless us; and do doubt more workers will be supplied in due course. At present we are but sowing the seed—sowing in the faith of a grand reaping by and by. We may expect this ere long, as the Buddhists are particularly active in opposition at present, and generally there is some cause for it when the Evil One bestirs himself. May our heavenly Father grant a rich harvest soon."

Notes from Cambridge.

Sunday, April 20, was our first Sunday in the May term. Among the Christian men it was a day of special prayer for guidance and strength during a term too pleasant not to have many and peculiar temptations.

As in past years, open-air work will form a very prominent item in work for the Master this term. Many of the Colleges have flourishing contingents to send into the field. The freshmen are volunteering in a most encouraging way for this trying duty. Trinity preaches in one of the low courts in the body of the town. Pembroke and Corpus undertake Barnwell. Clare men hold their services outside the gasworks; Queen's, in one of the villages near the town; Christ's, in the body of the town. Colleges that have not their own open-air service send individual members to help some other college. The Cambridge Intercollegiate Christian Union holds an afternoon service in those "Backs" for which Cambridge is so famed, and of which she is so proud.

The University pulpit is generally well supplied during the May term. On April 27, Rev. E. S. Talbot, D.D., preached. The next six Sundays are occupied by the following:—Rt. Rev. Sir L. T. Stainer, Bart., D.D., Bishop of Shrewsbury; Rev. S. R. Driver, D.D.; Rev. A. F. Kirkpatrick, D.D.; Ramsden Sermon (preacher not yet appointed); Rev. H. Wace, D.D.; The Archbishop of Canterbury, D.D.

Rev. H. C. G. Moule's class for members of the University commenced last Sunday (April 27). His sermon of April 20, the first of the term, was very largely attended by undergraduates; indeed, so full was that church that the difficulty was to find room for all comers. It may interest your readers to know that at least three honoured names connected with evangelical principles have filled the pulpit of Trinity Church. Rev. Charles Simeon, Senior Fellow of King's College, whose monument in the chancel bears these remarkable words:—"Who determined, whether as the ground of his own hopes, or the subject of his preaching, to know nothing save Christ and Him crucified." Revs. Canon Clayton and Henry Martyn complete a wonderful and privileged list for one parish. The Hall adjoining the church, where many meetings of a religious character are now held, was recently built to the memory of Henry Martyn, and is called after his name.

Many of us remember with pleasure the happy Saturday afternoons of prayer held last summer by the members of the C.I.M. at their house in Chesterton, and the interesting speakers there present on each occasion. We are expecting that these will shortly be resumed.

QUEEN'S COLLEGE,

though one of the smaller Colleges up here, has a long list of missionaries among its former members. As early as 1796 it gave India a missionary, Rev. C. Buchanan, D.D., author of "An Apology for Promoting Christianity in India;" also in 1808, Rev. Thomas Thomason, a Fellow of the College, and curate to Rev. C. Simeon. He died on the mission-field, after contributing that immense boon to subsequent missionaries, a translation of the Old Testament into Hindustani. The following names, with their spheres of work, occur among the missionary alumni of Queen's College:—Rev. R. Taylor (New Zealand, 1836); Rev. H. Whitley (Ceylon, 1854); Rev. G. Ensor (Japan, 1868); Rev. J. B. Brandram (Japan, 1884); Rev. C. H. Gill (N. India, 1887); Rev. J. Hind (Japan, 1889); Rev. A. N. Storrs (S. India, 1889); Rev. T. Skelton, Fellow of the College (N. India, 1856); Rev. J. C. Whitley (N. India, 1862); Rev. W. Relton (Madras, 1881); Rev. W. Hope Gill (China Inland Mission, 1885).

The work in the College itself consists of the Wednesday evening prayer-meeting, which is well attended, and the College Bible-reading on Saturday evening, taking a more sociable form. In the summer an open-air service on Sunday afternoons is undertaken at Ditton village. Though this College is unable to support entirely a London mission of its own, the members help by subscriptions the work carried on in Rotherhithe.

GIRLS' GUILD OF GOOD LIFE.

In a tastefully prepared little booklet entitled "Worth it All," Mrs. J. T. Rae, the honorary president of the Hoxton Hall Girls' Guild of Good Life tells a strange, true story of wrong-doing and ultimate reclamation. An account is also given of the operations of the Guild, in endeavouring to influence the future wives and mothers of England in the direction of leading lives of Christian usefulness. The little book is quite unlike a "cut-and-dried" report, and impresses one with the fact that the whole undertaking which Mrs. Rae controls is one of practical philanthropy; copies may be obtained from the National Temperance League Depôt, 33, Paternoster-row, E.C., price one penny.

The Guild was "formed for the cultivation of such habits and graces as tend to the building up of a pure and happy home life—the basis of national greatness." The numerical strength of the Guild has increased year by year, from a nucleus of 56 members at the commencement, to a total of 1207 in good standing in the past session. There is an average attendance of three hundred girls, and neither dancing nor acting have been found necessary to attract them. The various departments of useful work, including dress-making and plain sewing, wool-work and stocking-knitting have been much appreciated by the girls, who have also much enjoyed the music, games, painting, and magazines provided for their amusement and instruction; as many as two hundred girls belong to the Free Library. The varied agencies, well organised by responsible superintendents, do not admit of specification here. Among the appeals made, in addition to that for increased financial help, is one for additions to the little band of sympathetic regular workers which exists at present. Here indeed is a work claiming the attention of noble women. These girls yearn for sympathy, and an affecting instance of this is given by Mrs. Rae.

The annual meeting of the Guild was held in Hoxton Hall on Tuesday evening, April 22. Among the speakers who gave the girls some healthy advice was Mr. Montagu Williams, the London magistrate. He began by telling them of his success as a barrister; how in the midst of it he was told that he had contracted a malignant throat disease, and how since that period he had been unable to speak except in a whisper. Then he asked them to learn from his story that misfortunes were not confined to one class. He knew the poor suffered greatly, but, anxious as he was to help those who came before him at Worship-street, he found they would not co-operate with him. He did not believe that a magistrate's only office was to punish. Mr. Williams concluded by asking the girls very carefully to attend to all that was said to them by the ladies. He had found lady workers in the East-end among the most useful of his helpers, and he was sure their example would be of lasting benefit.

Addresses were also given by Miss Orme, Mr. Josiah Nix, Mr. W. I. Palmer, J.P., and Mr. William Noble. Miss Palmer and Miss Watts kindly sang to the girls during the evening.

THE BLIND.—The thirty-fourth anniversary of the Day of Special Prayer and Thanksgiving on behalf of the Blind, observed by those friends who take an interest in Dr. Moon's system of embossed reading, will take place on Sunday next, May 4. Pastors are earnestly requested to ask the united prayers of their congregations.

IT IS ENOUGH.

It is enough; to know
That Thou my life dost plan;
My ways are in thy hands,
Who loved ere life began.

It is enough, my Lord;
The sorrow has no thorn;
However long the way,
I cannot be forlorn.

It is enough; thy love
Doth bear the load for me;
The morrow brings no cares,
For all is ruled by Thee.

It is enough; when death
Shall come with velvet tread,
The pain is soothed by Thee
Who suffered and wast dead.

It is enough; to clasp
The handrail of thy will,
And down the winding stairs
To step by step fulfil.

Though dark and long it seem,
And I know not the way—
It is enough; it leads
Into the perfect day.

Apostolic v. Present-Day Preaching.

Upon this subject we have received several letters. One correspondent thinks that present-day preaching fails because "Jesus" is not coupled with "the resurrection." In this he is doubtless right. The resurrection was more prominent in the preaching of the Apostles than many make it to-day. But our correspondent bases upon this statement his plea for preaching "the coming of the Lord Jesus, the resurrection of sleeping believers, and our gathering together unto Him." He overlooks the fact that "the resurrection" which the Apostles preached was the assertion of the fact of our Lord's resurrection. It was this which provoked the hostility of men; and, to the Apostle Paul, our resurrection was by no means the only, nor even the most important, truth arising from it.

Another correspondent thinks that the great difference lies in failing to put repentance and baptism in the position which they occupied in the New Testament. In the words of Peter (Acts ii. 38), in the case of the Philippian jailor (Acts xvi. 31-33), and in Paul's quotation of the words of Ananias (xxii. 16), he sees a close connection between baptism and forgiveness. And he asks "By what authority do we to-day proclaim remission of sins on any other condition than those announced by our Lord's Apostles?"

Many will grant his Scriptural statements, which, in two cases at least, do connect baptism with remission of sins; but his inference is open to question. That only the baptized have remission of sins is as unscriptural as the neglect of baptism altogether. We must beware lest in avoiding one evil we fall into another.

SPANISH EVANGELISATION SOCIETY.—An expansion of missionary work in Spain has just taken place under this Society. This is by the recent appointment of a godly and experienced missionary, who knows the language, to labour in the towns and villages of the Vega of Granada, where many of the people appear to be stretching forth their hands to God. This preparedness of the people to receive the Gospel has arisen from the evangelical work which has proceeded from the village of Escornaz, in the Vega, where the Society has an evangelical school, and where the veteran Alhama, of Granada, the fellow-prisoner of Matamoros, has during many past years held occasional evangelistic services; also through the labours of the colporteur of the Scottish Bible Society. Particulars are given in the April number of "Times of Refreshing in Spain," of which a free copy can be sent to any party, upon application to Mrs. Robert Peddie, secretary of the Spanish Evangelisation Society, 8, Granville-terrace, Edinburgh.

Gathered Gold.

Religion is the best armour a man can have, but it is the worst cloak.—Bunyan.

No power, no decree, human or Divine, no amnesty, can actually alienate from a man his property in a crime he has perpetrated.

Isaac Taylor.

In speaking on some Scriptures, I am so fearful that I dare not speak further than the very text doth, as it were, lead me by the hand.

Bishop Ridley.

Some people do not like to hear much about repentance; but I think it is so necessary that, if I should die in the pulpit, I wish to die preaching repentance, and, if out of it, practising it.—Philip Henry.

I would rather have more of the mind that was in Christ; more of a meek, quiet, resigned, peaceful, and loving disposition, than to enjoy the greatest measure of sensible comfort, if the consequence (as perhaps it would) should be spiritual pride, self-sufficiency, and a want of that tenderness to others which becomes one who has reason to style himself "the chief of sinners."—John Newton.

Let my Lord Jesus, since He willeth to do so, weave my bit and span-length of time, with white and black, with the Bridegroom's coming and his sad departure, as warp and woof in one web; and let the rose be neighboured with the thorn; yet hope that maketh not ashamed hath written a letter to the mourners in Zion that it shall not be long so. When we are over the water, Christ shall cry, "Down crosses and up heaven for evermore."—Samuel Rutherford.

True grace is a growing principle. The Christian grows in discernment; a child may play with a serpent; but the man gets as far from it as he can; a child may taste poison; but the man will not suffer a speck of poison near him. He grows in humility; the blade shoots up boldly, and the young ear keeps erect with confidence; but the full corn in the ear inclines itself toward the earth, not because it is feebler, but because it is matured.

EVANGELISATION SOCIETY FOR LIVERPOOL AND NEIGHBOURHOOD. — The fourteenth annual report tells of earnest work attended by much blessing. The Society works in harmony with the churches, and, in response to numerous invitations to hold meetings, Mr. Lydiatt and a staff of evangelistic workers were kept fully occupied during the year. In the face of the appalling statement that, out of a population of 600,000, only 50,000 are to be found in the places of worship on Lord's Day morning, or, during the day, morning and evening services, only 75,000, the pressing need for such an organisation as this will at once be evident. Communications for Mr. Lydiatt should be addressed to 3, Hackin's Hey, Liverpool.

THE STARVATION RECORD OF EAST LONDON still keeps up. Another case has been added to the list. It is a woman this time, the wife of a docker. Mrs. Day was found dead on the floor of her room; and the doctor told the coroner that death was due to chronic bronchitis, brought on by continual semi-starvation. That is bad enough, but these examples of actual death from starvation are a very small part, and by no means the worst part, of the sufferings of the poor. The most pitiable thing is the lives that men live, and not the deaths they die. Lives continually on the verge of such deaths, of which we hear nothing except in the case of a tragic ending—these are the real problems for a society that calls itself civilised and is the wealthiest in the world.—Pall Mall Gazette.

ORPHANS OF SCOTTISH SAILORS.

At the first annual meeting of the Sailors' Orphan Society of Scotland, held in Glasgow last week, Mr. R. H. Hunter reported that a quiet and effective work had been going on during the year. The Society receives needy orphans of seamen from all parts of Scotland. Representatives or committees have been appointed in some of the chief ports around the coast, and it is intended to have a complete network of these local agents. As showing the need of such an institution, Mr. Hunter stated that upwards of 4000 British sailors annually die, or are lost, in very many cases leaving wives and children without any provision. The main desire is to assist children in their own homes where possible. If needful, Christian homes would be sought for them till they could provide for themselves. Since its commencement sixty-four children had been admitted, and these are being cared for by the Society. Gifts for the support of the work have been received from all classes of people, and it is gratifying to find officers of ships taking a personal interest in the work. It is desired to raise a fund of £100,000 to be invested for the maintenance of the Society's operations.

Mr. Alex. Allan and Mr. Peter Denny, as shipowners, expressed the warmest interest in the Society's work; as also did other friends who spoke.

HULL.—Dr. Elder Cumming, of Glasgow, paid a visit to this town on April 22, and held two successful and profitable meetings in the public rooms. The meetings showed that Hull is ripe for a Convention, and it is to be hoped that arrangements may be made to bring Keswick nearer to Hull.

CRIME IN ENGLAND AND WALES.—Mr. G. Grosvenor, of the Home Office, read a paper at the Royal School of Mines, before members of the Royal Statistical Society, on "Statistics of the Abatement in Crime in England and Wales during the twenty years ended 1887-88." The decrease in the number of criminals in 1888, as compared with 1869, was equal to 30,689, or 35·1 per cent. During the twenty years under review nearly 90,000 juveniles passed through reformatory and industrial schools, the large majority of whom had doubtless been saved from the contamination of a criminal life. The abatement in crime was shown to be in great part due to accurate knowledge on the part of the several police forces of the kingdom of thieves at large and of the houses they frequented. The Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society and kindred institutions were also credited with valuable aid towards the reduction in crime. A comparison of the numbers of criminals with the population in the twenty years—increased by nearly six and a half millions—showed a remarkable diminution in crime. Mr. Monro, the Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police, said, in his opinion, the provisions of the law for the supervision of habitual criminals had largely tended to the decrease of crime.

A PLEA FOR JEWESSES. — Mrs. John Wilkinson has issued a "Plea for Middle and Higher Class Jewesses." Urging ladies privately to interest themselves in the matter, she states that in the neighbourhood of Mildmay a good degree of success has attended kindly visitation. Two ladies "sent in their cards, introduced themselves as living near, and, after a little general conversation, said they were much interested in the Jewish people, and glad to make their acquaintance on account of having received the Scriptures from the Jews. This invariably led to a conversation, in which, by quoting Messianic passages from the Old Testament, they tried to prove that the Messiah was to come to suffer before coming to reign. In further interviews they were enabled to point out how all that was said of a suffering Messiah was fulfilled in Jesus, and that this same Jesus will indeed come again to reign over his Jewish people in Jerusalem. The need of a sense of forgiven sin, and of a God and Father upon whom they could roll life's burdens, was, of course, brought home; and in no case were these ladies rudely treated." Tracts suitable for leaving with Jewish ladies may be had from Mildmay Mission to the Jews' Book Store, 60, Newington Green, London, N.

MR. F. S. ARNOT'S MISSION.

Further news has come to hand from Mr. F. S. Arnot's party. Frightened by the passing of thirty Portuguese soldiers through his territory, following rapidly upon the increase of the number of missionaries, the chief of the Bihé district had arranged that all the latter, both American and English, should be plundered and ordered to leave. The well-known traveller and trader, Senhor Porto, exerted himself, however, on their behalf, detaining and calming the envoys sent to plunder. Two of the American missionaries and three of Mr. Arnot's party paid a visit to the chief at his capital, and left with the assurance of his goodwill.

The chief of the division of Bihé in which Mr. Arnot's party is staying was indignant at the hostile action of his superior. Both he and his people expressed their wish to defend them. All are of course thankful that danger has been avoided.

There are encouraging openings for medical work. A painful affection of the chief's arm having been relieved, he daily sends others for treatment. Two days' journey to the north-east is the country of an interesting people who appear to be superior to their neighbours in agriculture and industry. They grow enormous quantities of corn, rear large herds of cattle, and manufacture iron agricultural implements. Unlike surrounding tribes, they do not go outside their country to trade in rubber or engage themselves as carriers, but sell much of their produce to those around.

FACTORY LADS IN KENTISH TOWN.

A most excellent and much-needed work among the factory lads of this district is carried on at 331, Kentish Town-road, N., in connection with the Home and Institute conducted by Mr. and Mrs. Markham. For over a year and a half it has been a centre of much blessing and help to this class, of whom there are many, employed in the numerous piano and other factories of the neighbourhood. At the Institute a pleasant and safe place of evening resort is provided. There are meetings, classes, and lectures of various kinds, and everything is done that Christian ingenuity can suggest to interest the lads in the highest things. Some two hundred lads take advantage of these opportunities, and some have shown evidences of a new life.

The Home is specially designed for those boys who are orphans, or away from home; though in some cases lads whose home surroundings are not favourable have been sheltered and helped. There are at present seven lads in the Home. Every endeavour is made to get such friendless youths placed where they can learn a useful trade, so that they may look forward to some better position than can be gained by the unskilled labourer. Mr. and Mrs. Markham throw their whole heart and all their spare time into the care of the work, and they are well rewarded by seeing their youthful clients influenced for good and helped on in life. Their efforts are very highly commended by Mr. George Hatton and other friends who testify to the zeal and success with which the Institution is conducted, as well as the need that exists.

PRAGUE, BOHEMIA.—Pastor Adolf writes:—The Y.M.C.A. here needs a house, and gifts from Christian friends are welcome. This year has been a blessed one. We believe that a little band have been brought to Christ. God has manifested his grace in some in a wonderful manner. Fourteen of them became acquainted with the Bible only in their later years of life, being formerly Romish. The work is encouraging, in spite of peculiar difficulties. I am pastor of a small congregation connected with the American Board. Our meetings are full. Every Sunday some new people come to listen to the Gospel. Thirty members have been added this year.

For the Young.

WHAT NELL'S PENCIL DID.

LITTLE NELL was the child of poor parents. She was delicate, and kept very much to herself, when the other children were romping and racing about the street in which they lived; but give her a slate or a pencil, and she was quite happy. She did not often get a pencil, however—a stump now and then from a more fortunate child would make her feel rich as long as it lasted. She would sit in a corner for hours, copying letters and words out of the spelling primer, and teaching herself, before she ever was sent to school.

One day a lady called, and asked that Nell might come to Sunday-school. After some demur, because her mother said her clothes were too shabby, she was sent. The good news came with power to Nell's heart. She took it all in. Jesus Christ, the Son of God, had come from heaven to die for her. Doubt or fear never crossed her mind from the moment she understood this. She believed with all her heart and soul—believed and loved—for love must follow such belief. She grew very gentle and obedient. Even the father, who took little heed of his children, noticed it, and wondered a little what had come over Nell; she was so bright and so helpful. Though she had always been quiet, she used never to think of anything, but sitting with her slate or her picture-book, amusing herself.

One Saturday night when he came home with his week's wages he pulled out of his pocket a long smooth lead pencil. "There, Nell!" he said, popping it down, "what do you think of that for a present?" What did she think of it? How her eyes lighted and her cheeks flushed with rapture. She never had had such a pencil.

The joy of her new possession had not faded in the least when next day Nell went to Sunday-school. But she forgot it for a while listening to her teacher. For nothing was so dear now to her as the verses and hymns that told of Jesus and his love, of heaven and its glories. At the close the teacher told them a little of China and its great population. She had often done so before, for from among them a girl had gone out to tell the "old story" that was so new to the dwellers in that land. She wrote constantly to Nell's teacher, so this little touch of personal interest had made China a familiar sound. Nell had gone to Sunday-school too lately to know this lady, but she always felt as if she did, and she dearly liked the bits from her letters, and the stories about the Chinese.

This day the teacher told them she was sending to the lady in China a box of things that would be useful to her Chinese friends and their children. She asked any child who cared to do so to send something, however small, "for Jesus' sake." "The tiniest thing you send for Him, He will not forget or overlook. He will use it."

I do not know what the other children thought or did; but I know that Nell went home filled with the thought of what she could do. Think as she might, it seemed to her that she had nothing to give. She cried herself to sleep, because she had not anything for the Lord Jesus, who had given her so much.

The box was to go on Thursday, and the evening before there was a meeting at which a missionary was to speak, and the children from the Sunday-school were asked to tea at the school-house. They all came, and among them Nell, clutching her precious pencil. When the box was placed on the table for all who liked to put in their offerings, she crept up, and dropped it in. She had given her all.

A few months later, a lady with a very tired face sat in a bamboo grove, writing diligently in a terra-cotta copy book, such as schoolboys have, with a long shining cedar pencil. She was preparing notes for an address to be given that evening. She was tired, because she met so much discouragement. She had come to that strange land to tell of Jesus, and scarcely anyone would listen. One or two, perhaps, cared to listen; but she could not feel sure of a real impression having been made on anyone. "If I had made friends with one family, even," she thought, "but they all hold aloof, as if they suspected me; yet what motive can they ascribe for my thus coming among strangers? Perhaps I might have done more good at home."

A large tear dropped heavily on the paper—another, and another. But the Master was very near, and saw how tired his worker was. Ashamed of her weakness, she wiped away her tears; she would think no more of that far-off home. She had come to tell the ignorant, and those "out of the way," of home, and rest, and refuge—of Jesus; for that name summed up this and much more, and was she going to faint now, because she found unwilling hearers? What had her Master found?

She began to write again. She was using little Nell's pencil. It was the only thing in the box she had kept for herself, and she had only kept it because it was useless as a gift. The Chinese do not use pencils. She grew absorbed in her work. It was not easy to think in Chinese, to be sure that she was making her meaning plain. She forgot everything but her anxiety to be a faithful messenger. As she warmed to the subject, her pencil flew over the paper.

A rustling sound attracted her attention several times. At last she looked up. A group of children had stolen in, and were watching intently the movements of her pencil. With their almond eyes and tawny skins, and their curious unchildlike faces, they were yet as eager to see this wonder as ever were the noisier children of our English cities. Even fear of the foreigner was lost sight of. The lady smiled pleasantly, and, taking a sheet of paper, drew a little sketch of the scene before her. Exclamations came from the children's lips, and they drew closer. They began to beg for the pencil. "But I cannot give it to you all," she objected. That was a difficulty—they were silent and looked disappointed. A thought struck her. "Look," she cried, "it is long. I will cut it into as many pieces as I can, and give you each a piece as far as it will go, but on one condition—you must promise to bring me to see your mothers; you must ask your mothers to invite me to your own homes."

The bargain was quickly struck, and the pencil cut and distributed. It went the further because some were members of the same home, and one piece sufficed. They dispersed in great contentment. The little Chinese children kept their promises; to each home Miss Campbell was asked. And the invitation, given first for the children's sake, was renewed for her own. That lead pencil was her means of entry to twelve houses. In many she found friends; in all she delivered her message. The day cometh that will declare the results.

This is what little Nell's pencil did, and I cannot help believing that in heaven she will meet some of those children to whom it brought the good tidings that Jesus died for them.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., May 4, Gal. iii. 1—14; Mon., May 5, Gal. iv. 1—16; Tues., May 6, Gal. v. 1—13; Wed., May 7, Gal. v. 14—26; Thurs., May 8, Gal. vi. 1—18; Fri., May 9, Eph. i. 1—14; Sat., May 10, Eph. i. 15—23.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. H. Hutchinson, St. Leonards, to May 5. Messrs. Hankinson and Hutchinson, Corn Exchange, Hereford, May 10—19; Ross, May 20, 21. Mr. H. Hutchinson, Pershore, May 22; Reading, May 23; Rev. W. S. Standen and Mr. H. Hutchinson, Emmanuel Church, Wimbledon, May 26 to June 3. Rev. J. Outram, Kenley, May 19—22. Mr. E. Arrowsmith, Cambridge, May 2—9; Oxford, May 10—15.

A MISSION IN ST. LUKE'S.

THE old building of the Leysian Branch of the London Wesleyan Mission in Whitecross-street having proved too small, another edifice, more capable of meeting the enlarged requirements, has been erected in Errol-street, at a cost of £9000, most of which has already been raised. The basement of the new headquarters contains a drill-room, a kitchen, and the heating appliances. On the ground floor there are a small hall, a girls' parlour, a medical department and infirmary, and a coffee-bar. The first floor is taken up with the large hall; upstairs there are chambers for resident missionaries, &c. Besides a regular organisation for in-door and out-door temperance and evangelistic work, there are in connection with this effort a medical mission, a clothing club, a circulating library, and an orchestral band.

On the occasion of the formal opening on Wednesday, April 23, a series of meetings was held. In the smaller hall, during the early part of the day, there was a ladies' sale of work; and a religious service was conducted by Dr. Allon. In the evening there was animpor tant meeting in the larger hall, attended by many persons of prominence in the Wesleyan body. The Old Leysian Boys, by whom the Whitecross Mission was begun and sustained, were warmly congratulated by Sir ROBERT N. FOWLER; he thanked God that it had been put into their hearts to provide means so well calculated to bring the poor within the elevating and purifying influence of the Gospel.

Rev. C. H. KELLY, President of the Wesleyan Conference, heartily commended the work of the Old Leysians. The time had long gone by when students could be expelled from college for pursuing purely Scriptural methods, as they were at one time at Oxford. Nor was it necessary to explain there, as it had to be explained to the Shah of Persia when on a visit to this country, that the population of between four and five millions of London were not kept in order by a meagre police force but by a more powerful moral force. The more that agencies of this kind were multiplied, not only throughout the Metropolis, but throughout the country, the more would moral force increase, and the better and stronger would England become.

Mr. T. I. JARROTT showed how great was the necessity of the Mission. Many of the people in its immediate neighbourhood had not only a severe struggle against poverty, but were deplorably ignorant regarding the most elementary spiritual things. The medical mission, under the unselfish direction of Dr. Griffith, had already proved of incalculable value. The open-air services were greatly appreciated.

Rev. HUGH PRICE HUGHES felt assured that the Leysian Mission would continue to be a success, because it was the outcome of an intensely spiritual movement. He strongly advocated a cordial reception of strangers at places where the Gospel was preached, and concluded by a characteristic appeal for most liberal pecuniary support to the old Leysian endeavours. Mr. W. A. M'ARTHUR, M.P., spoke briefly on the expediency of associating with the methods of propagating religion, what may be directly profitable to the body as well as good for the soul.

HASTINGS.—A time of much blessing has been experienced at the Y.M.C.A. here, in connection with mission services for the children, by Mr. Hewlett. The praise meeting at the close revealed that young and old alike had shared in the times of refreshing. There have been some very definite and hopeful cases of conversion, and much brotherly unity and interest were shown by ministerial friends and other workers.

Rev. W. S. Wright, Vicar of New Catton, Norwich, would be glad to know of any retired tradesman or pensioner, a godly Churchman, who would help him in his parochial work in return for a comfortable house, rent free.

Obituary.

MR. HANDEL COSSHAM, M.P.

THIS respected gentleman died rather suddenly on Wednesday afternoon last week. He spent the morning, as usual, reading and writing in the library of the House of Commons. Being seized with faintness, he was attended by Dr. Bond, divisional surgeon of police, and afterwards removed to the National Liberal Club, where he had rooms. Medical help was unavailing, and in a short time Mr. Cossham expired, from the effects of heart disease.

The only son of Mr. Jesse Cossham, of Bristol, the deceased was born at Thornbury, near that city, in 1824. As a large colliery proprietor, he was well to do. Before entering Parliament, he took a prominent part in local affairs, being twice mayor of Bath. He was a Congregationalist, and for forty years conducted a Bible-class at Weston Park, to the members of which he gave a month ago some "Personal Recollections of the Last Sixty Years." Sir Wilfrid Lawson had no more thorough-going supporter, and his voice was often heard on Peace Society platforms. Mr. Cossham's last appearance in public in the neighbourhood of Bristol was on Sunday, April 20, when he preached at Warmley Tower Wesleyan Chapel, delivering a fifty minutes' discourse, and mentioning that it was probably the last time he would have the opportunity of addressing the congregation.

MR. HARLEY MASON.

We regret to announce the death on Sunday last of Mr. Harley Mason, whose serious illness was referred to in our columns a few weeks ago. Mr. Mason was born at Woofferton, in Herefordshire in 1817. He was from childhood conscientious and devout, and at the age of seventeen was truly converted to God, chiefly through the instrumentality of his pious sisters. From that time he devoted his entire life to the service of God, and became an earnest worker in the Sunday-school, while he also took part in preaching the Gospel in various parts of his native county.

In 1849 Mr. Mason came to London to enter upon a career of usefulness in connection with the Young Men's Christian Association, and for thirty-three years, as librarian and assistant secretary, devoted himself to the advancement of its various efforts on behalf of young men, taking an active part in the foundation of the Central Association, in Aldersgate-street.

In the midst of these labours, Mr. Mason found time to care also for the young women employed in houses of business, for whom he originated, and for twelve years conducted, a Sunday afternoon Bible-class, at a time when no Young Women's Christian Association was in existence, and when but little attention had been directed to the spiritual needs of young women in business. Mr. Mason may thus be justly regarded as one of the pioneers of the Young Women's Christian Association.

Another good work carried on by Mr. Mason was a Gospel service in the neighbourhood of his own residence at Upper Holloway, where there was at that time a lack of evangelical ministry. He procured a small building near the Archway Tavern, and having fitted it up, largely with his own hands, gathered a congregation and preached the Gospel for many months until other places of worship grew up in the neighbourhood.

During Mr. Moody's visit to London in 1875, Mr. Mason was an active member of his Committee, and subsequently took charge for some years of the Noon Prayer-meeting at Moorgate Hall.

In 1882, Mr. Mason retired from his official connection with the Y.M.C.A., but its work still engaged his warmest sympathies, although advancing years and failing health prevented him from active labours in its behalf.

Early in March last, Mr. Mason was seized with an attack of paralysis, and, although hopes were at first entertained of his recovery, his strength gradually sank, and after severe sufferings, most patiently borne, he fell gently asleep in Jesus, in the midst of his sorrowing family, on Sunday afternoon.

All who ever had the privilege of knowing Mr. Mason were drawn to him by his kindness of heart and his ready sympathy for others, whose needs he ever put before his own, and none can recall one hasty word or one selfish action; while those who knew him best and longest cherish his memory as that of one in whom dwelt, in no ordinary degree, the Spirit of Christ.

The funeral will take place at Hammersmith Cemetery, Fulham Palace-road, this day (Friday) at 3 p.m.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mrs. Horton and Miss Parker have been evangelising in the Wesleyan Church at Broadstairs. Some have been won for Christ and much blessing experienced.

Mr. John Wills has concluded a fifteen days' mission at the Lewes Y.M.C.A. Many professed conversions have taken place, and the meetings were well attended.

Peterhead, N.B.—We are having times of refreshing in connection with the Gospel work at Topping's Hall Mission. Two pilgrim sisters of the Faith Mission are visiting the people in their homes and conducting meetings; the Lord blesses the simple and faithful preaching of the Gospel. A visit from Mr. J. Climie was also made a blessing to some. W. S.

Mr. J. P. Gibbens, of the Evangelisation Society, has conducted the third annual mission at Purton Room, near Berkeley. There has been an increased interest at each successive mission, and the word has been proclaimed with much spiritual power and blessing. The classes for whom these missions are held are those who seldom hear the Gospel, and these have been attracted nearly every night. J. WINTER.

Ireland.—The ordinary meetings of the Belfast Methodist Mission still continue to attract large audiences, and conversions are frequent. Mr. J. H. Crawford, of the Irish Evangelisation Society, has just concluded a fortnight's series of successful Gospel services in the Presbyterian Church, Ennis, co. Clare; and an interesting and practical address on "The Forward Movement in England," was delivered by Rev. J. E. Clapham, of London, to a large audience in Belfast on Monday evening week.

Alderton, Suffolk.—There has been a gracious outpouring of the Spirit upon this village in connection with the work of the Congregational Church. Since the dawn of 1890 a goodly number have professed conversion, and many more are anxious about eternal things; some of the number have been notorious characters. Nearly every convert has given up the pipe, because they say it is a bad example to set to the young. The pastor, Rev. R. C. Paynter, can praise God for a goodly band of men who go into the open air, and also visit the hamlets all around to tell of the Christ.

Mr. G. R. Cairns has been holding a series of mission services in Manchester in connection with "The Business Young Ladies' Association." Mr. Cairns has been wonderfully used of God in winning souls in various missions conducted by him in Manchester during the last six months. The meetings were attended by increasing numbers, and many were brought to a decision for Christ each evening. His effective singing not only attracted many, but also helped to wing home the Gospel message. H. M. JONES, Director and Lady Missioner.

Mr. John Stanger, of London, has completed a most successful mission in the Congregational Church, Needham Market, assisted by the pastor, Rev. W. Henry Bradford. The interest taken in the mission was very great; sometimes as many as 800 assembled to listen to the earnest, pithy, loving addresses delivered. In concluding the mission, the pastor said that it was but the inauguration of a "forward movement," by which it was hoped that the church membership (now number 140) would be doubled. Although the actual mission is closed, mission services are being carried on by the pastor each Sunday evening.

Liverpool Y.M.C.A.—Dr. H. Grattan Guinness conducted a short mission for young men at this Association last week, holding two services each day—afternoons for Christians, and evenings for young men. The mission occupied four days only, but they were eventful days. The large hall was crowded in every part each night. Large numbers were evidently much impressed, and 140 enrolled their names as inquirers. A member of the Y.M.C.A., who placed an invitation card in the hands of each young man in his establishment, was rewarded by the conversion of his own son. Another member was similarly rewarded by bringing to the meetings a young man who had recently taken a situation in the city. As a result of Dr. Guinness's visit we intend sending out and supporting one or two missionaries in the foreign field. THOMAS JAMESON, General Secretary.

Rev. Newman Hall has been on a short evangelising tour. He preached successively at Tiverton, Torquay, Tenby, and Swansea.

Canning Town.—Mrs. Walker, the "Yorkshire Nightingale," has been singing the Gospel during a week's special services at the People's Mission Hall, Custom-street. The poorest in the neighbourhood have been gathered in; many have been rescued from the bondage of sin, and are rejoicing in the Saviour's love; others have taken the pledge and donned the blue ribbon. Mrs. Walker is continuing the special effort, and God is blessing her abundantly.

Mr. D. L. Moody has closed his present efforts in the central part of New York. The attendance (says The New York Observer) was as great as ever, and the interest unabated. The results of his unflagging efforts in that part of the city, in so many directions, have been visibly great. He spoke to as many as four different audiences in one day in various churches, to large gatherings of boys and postal employés as well as young men. Several hundreds have openly confessed Christ, and many have experienced a revival of vital godliness which has greatly blessed them and the churches to which they belong. Mr. Moody will close his work in New York with meetings to be held below Fourteenth-street. Twenty churches will unite in the work, and there will be four groups of five churches in each. The services will begin April 22.

MR. RUTLING, one of the first party of Jubilee Singers, is now in London, and may be communicated with, care of Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton, 27, Paternoster-row.

BANBURY.—Rev. F. B. Meyer recently visited this place, and delivered addresses on the privileges of the Christian calling. A correspondent, in reporting the matter, says:—"We thank God for sending his servant to us, and trust that the blessing which attended the meetings is but the droppings of a mighty shower to be poured out during an eight days' mission (May 4 to 11) to be held in the Grimsbury Hall, conducted by Mr. Charles Inglis, for which we ask earnest prayers."

SEAMEN'S CHRISTIAN FRIEND SOCIETY.—A lecture in the interests of the above Society was given on Tuesday last by Rev. J. Jackson Wray to a very large and appreciative audience, at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile-end. The chairman, Mr. T. A. Denny, spoke of the importance of mission work among seamen, and Mr. W. H. Seagram bore personal testimony to the usefulness of this Society's work, and expressed regret that it was burdened with a debt of nearly £800. Revs. Joseph Fletcher and G. J. Hill also took part in the proceedings.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on the following:—Special services at the Baptist Chapel, Waltham Abbey, by Mr. Opie Rodway, commencing May 3.——A fortnight's mission by Mr. W. D. Dunn, in the Exchange Hall, Hawick, commencing May 3.——Meetings at Richmond on Sundays, Tuesdays, and Thursdays in May, conducted by Mr. Herbert R. Francis.——Special evangelistic services, conducted by Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Harrison, at the "Welcome," Cross-Key-square, Little Britain, E.C., May 5 to 9.——The opening services at Grimsbury Hall, Banbury, conducted by Mr. C. Inglis, May 4 to 11.——A mission at Union Rooms, Marple, Cheshire, to be conducted by Mr. G. R. Cairns.——Village evangelistic work in and around Banbury, by Messrs. Newell and Hall.——PRAISE for many loving mercies during Lord Radstock's tour in India; and for many tokens of gracious work there and in Italy.

KILBURN HOUSE OF REST.—To aid the funds for the new Home for Aged Workers, a sale of useful and fancy articles took place last week in the Kilburn Town Hall. The sale was opened by Dr. Monro Gibson, who said there was no need for him to commend the work which Miss Mason was carrying on to the friends before him; he was sure Christ would look with especial favour on the House of Rest. But associated with rest was toil; and all who wished to give rest to others must toil, perhaps suffer; and, though this institution was called a House of Rest, he thought anyone who would "run the concern" for a month would find it a house of labour. The friends who toiled found happiness in sanctified labour; but there was sanctification of gold as well as sanctification of hearts, and he hoped there would be sanctification of gold in this bazaar. £140 was realised during the two days, but a number of articles are left, of which Miss Mason would be glad to dispose.

In Eastern Lands— Home Again.*

BY GAWIN KIRKHAM.

THE scholar and the Christian are alike interested in Greece. The former remembers its history, its mythology, and its literature. He visits the Temples of Jupiter, of Bacchus, and especially that of Minerva, which crowns the Acropolis, and the hill from which Demosthenes declaimed, to familiarise his eyes with objects with which his imagination has long been familiar. The Christian also visits these places, not so much to admire them as to grieve over the misplaced energies of former ages which often found an outlet in deifying debasing passions. Who can contemplate the ruins of the Theatre of Bacchus, constructed to seat 30,000 persons, without feelings of sadness? I sat in one of the finely-carved marble seats, as fresh as when hewn more than 2000 years ago, and tried to picture the unhallowed rites which the advent of Christianity made impossible. May I confess to

on visiting Mar's Hill? It is to this memorable spot that the Christian visitor turns by an undying instinct, because it is so indelibly associated in his memory with the early triumphs of the Gospel. But what is there to be seen? A bare rugged rock, with but few traces of the workman's hammer, on the one hand, and almost forsaken by vegetation on the other. On the adjoining eminence, high above him, stands the Temple of Minerva, one of the most remarkable ruins in the world, and still, after the lapse of ages, enabling the beholder to picture its former glory; while here there is nothing to attract but the remembrance of a wonderful address by a tent-maker, when he boldly declared to his philosophic audience THE UNKNOWN GOD as the Creator, the Preserver, and the Judge of the world. The effect of that sermon is felt to the ends of the earth to this day; and I realised, as many a one has done, a thrill of joy as I recited it to our little party, on the self-same spot. Of this place we may say, as Cowper does of the Gospel:—

> It stands like the Cerulean arch we see,
> Majestic in its own simplicity.

Next in importance to Mar's Hill, in my estimation, was a visit to the site of the old amphitheatre, where St. Paul would watch the Grecian games, and gain his fitness to write afterwards of the Christian race. The old seats are all gone, but the form remains, and the imagination can easily people it as in days gone by.

THE GREEK CHURCH.

It is sad to know that the present form of Christianity in Greece is "another Gospel," and not the one Saul and his fellow-labourers planted here with such infinite pains. Christ was then the Alpha and the Omega; now He is hid by the Greek Church under superstitious forms and ceremonies. Many of the priests are intensely ignorant, for a man who can read and write will be ordained on the petition of a dozen people who request that he may be their village priest. In the churches there is usually a high pulpit, but it is only used for reading the Gospels, as there is practically no preaching, and consequently no public instruction of the people in the things of God. So it is "like priest, like people"—both are ignorant; and a further outcome is bigotry and opposition to those who seek to bring a purer faith to the people.

But a spirit of inquiry is abroad, and in two interviews I had with Dr. M. D. Kalopothakes, of Athens, I gathered that the country just now is in a hopeful state. The seed is taking root, and there are indications of a harvest before long. Thirty-two years ago the agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society dared not exhibit a copy of the Scriptures in his window; and when Dr. Kalopothakes took over the agency soon after, the sign-board announcing Bibles for sale was broken and torn down repeatedly. These acts were always regarded as being due to the opposition of the priests. Now there are eight or ten colporteurs employed, who every year sell from 8000 to 10,000 copies of the Scriptures, though as yet this is done at a considerable loss to the Bible Society. The Religious Tract Society also makes an annual grant, and a considerable number of tracts are circulated throughout the country. The colporteurs are also preachers, and conduct religious services. At the Piræus, which is the port of Athens, and connected with it by a railway, a Rest has been established, and a Bible-woman employed, who visits among the people.

OPEN-AIR PREACHING.

I specially asked the good Doctor, under whose direction all this work is carried on, whether there was any open-air preaching practised or allowed. He said there was no law against it, but it had not yet been attempted, as he feared fanaticism might create disturbance, and so mar the work already begun. But both he and his excellent wife feel that the time has now come when bolder things may be done, and he contemplates a missionary journey soon, when he proposes to try this Apostolic method, of which so notable an example as Mar's Hill is constantly before him. He says the great want of the country is native evangelists; and he begs the prayers of Christians in other parts of the world that these may speedily be raised up and equipped for the good work which awaits them.

On landing at Corfu on Easter Sunday morning, I had the opportunity of witnessing a street procession. It was in honour of St. Spiro, the patron saint of the island, and always takes place on Palm Sunday, the Greek Church being a week later than the Latin in celebrating that festival. The Church and the State were here in full accord, for the troops lined the streets, and a military band preceded the procession. A bishop and numerous priests, robed in all the colours of the rainbow, were the most prominent figures. Priests and people alike carried large lighted candles, while half a dozen men carried as many huge wax candles, each as heavy as its bearer could well lift. But the chief object was the body of the Saint who lived 1500 years ago, and was now borne in a glass case, under a canopy held by six sailors. As it was carried by, the people in the crowded streets and crowded windows uncovered their heads, and crossed themselves repeatedly. But when the religious ceremony was over, business was resumed, and the town held high festival, from which all Sabbatic rest was excluded. The island itself was charming in its spring garb and glowing sun, and seemed a desirable place for those who seek health or recreation in a foreign clime.

SAILORS AT NAPLES.

At Naples I was shown round by Mr. Burrowes, of the Sailors' Rest, and had the pleasure of addressing a body of sailors who had been fetched from their ship in his mission boat. But why should he and his devoted wife be compelled to carry on their work in such limited premises? These places ought to be of the brightest kind, to compete with the attractions held out by the world, the flesh and the devil, to entrap our honest tars. Will not someone with consecrated wealth aid in securing larger premises? Mr. Burrowes has lately returned from the East, where he has been in the interests of the Sailors' Rest Aid Society.

In Rome I saw much, but the traces of St. Paul interested me most. The Catacombs also are full of teaching as to the faith of the early Christians. There are plenty of English Protestant Churches to choose from in spending a Sunday there, but I was drawn to Rev. James Wall's Church for the Italians, where, after morning service, nearly the whole congregation, numbering about 125, celebrated the Lord's Supper. In the afternoon I went to the Scotch Church, and heard Dr. Gray, the minister, lecture on the Lord's Supper as illustrated by the Church of the Catacombs. In the evening I attended a prayer-meeting held at Dr. Young's. Its object was to plead for a blessing on meetings for the deepening of spiritual life. The English tourists go freely to the Romish churches, and sometimes end by becoming perverts. Many of them also devote Sunday to sight-seeing, as if it were an ordinary day. In this respect I wish they would set a better example.

Now, thank God, I am home again, after wandering for ninety-two days in Eastern lands, and journeying more than 7700 miles. In addition to seeing much of the Lord's work in nature and grace, it was my privilege to address twenty-eight meetings, and to have my addresses translated into six languages.

MR. KIRKHAM'S WELCOME HOME

at Exeter Hall on Monday evening was extremely hearty, and showed to demonstration his great popularity among his fellow preachers and other friends. Dr. Tyler's opening prayer was full of warmth and thankfulness at the safe return of the traveller. As chairman, Mr. George Williams acquitted himself with even more than his usual happiness; much cheering greeted his presentation of the goodly volume, "Palestine Illustrated," to the guest of the evening. Sir Douglas Fox, in some well-chosen words of eulogy of the Open-air Mission and its veteran secretary, offered a welcome to Mr. Kirkham on behalf of the open-air preachers; their hearty applause proved that the welcome was anything but a formal one.

The rest of the time was given up to Mr. Kirkham, who compressed into an hour's delightful talk an outline sketch of his long journey of 7700 miles, extending over ninety days. Recent issues of this paper have contained many of his interesting experiences, especially those relating to mission efforts in places visited. His address on Monday evening was cast in a lighter vein, mixing up bits of travel, serious and humorous, with descriptions of places, impressions of the people, and illustrations throwing corroborative light on the Sacred Record. Having followed largely in the track of Paul from Jerusalem to Rome, a good deal was said by Mr. Kirkham about the space that the great Apostle to the Gentiles fills in associations clustering around the Mediterranean and the Adriatic Seas.

The Palestinian part of the journey was, of course, specially attractive, and was made deeply interesting as well as instructive. Jaffa, Jerusalem, Bethany, Bethlehem, Jordan, Sychar, Nazareth, Damascus, and many other places of immortal memory, were "fixed" in the mind of the listener by a few fresh and graphic touches of description. Mr. Kirkham waxed pathetic over the way in which so many of the scenes of our Saviour's ministry have been turned into show-places by the tawdry embellishments of the Romish and Greek communities. He lamented, too, the neglect of mission work so often shown by English tourists and travellers in the Holy Land.

We hope Mr. Kirkham will, ere long, find the needed leisure to throw his notes and impressions into popular book form. They would make very excellent and useful reading, not only for preachers, but for all lovers of the Land and the Book.

MISS RYE'S WORK AMONGST BLIND CHILDREN.—A bazaar, to aid in raising £1500 for the purchase of larger premises for Miss Rye's well-known Home for Blind Children, is to be held on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday next, at the Morley Hall, Triangle, Hackney. The bazaar will be opened on Tuesday, at 3 p.m., by Lady Randolph Churchill.

* Pressure on our space at this period of the year compels us to omit a communication from Mr. Kirkham, describing his visit to Asia Minor. The missions in the country to which he refers are tolerably well known to our readers.

REV. W. H. BARLOW, B.D.,

Vicar of Islington.

THE subject of our sketch this week is a clergyman of a type which we sincerely wish had many more representatives than it actually has. Uncompromising fidelity to truth is not always found in combination with true Christian love; neither is it too common to find culture and influence subservient to spiritual teaching and example.

WILLIAM HAGGER BARLOW is the son of the late Rev. Henry Barlow, for twenty-six years vicar of Pitsmoor, Sheffield. Enjoying Christian privileges from his earliest days, he was educated at Sheffield Collegiate School, under Rev. Dr. G. A. Jacob, to whose wholesome training may be attributed, under God, the firm attachment to Protestant and evangelical principles which has characterised Mr. Barlow's lengthened ministry. Proceeding to Cambridge, the young man became a scholar and exhibitioner of St. John's College, where he had a distinguished career. He graduated M.A. in 1860, and fifteen years later took the degree of Bachelor of Divinity.

Having entered the ministry of the Church of England, Mr. Barlow's first curacy was that of St. James's, Bristol. There he remained for nearly three years, until 1861, when he was appointed the first incumbent of St. Bartholomew's Church in the same city. In his new position, as well as during the period of his curacy, Mr. Barlow threw himself heartily into every good work that came in his way, and thus gained for himself the esteem and goodwill of all classes of Christian people. In June, 1871, he read an important paper on "Diocesan Mission Boards" before the members of the Bristol Clerical and Lay Association for the maintenance of Evangelical Principles. Therein he expressed himself as strongly opposed to the formation of the proposed "Boards." He was very clear as to the character and policy of the C.M.S. He said:—

> The confidence of the evangelical section of our Church is strong, and deservedly strong, in the principles and practices of the Church Missionary Society. A public religious society, more than any other institution, depends for its success, humanly speaking, on the confidence placed in its principles and management by its friends throughout the land. Any suspicion of wavering from its principles would be fatal to its prosperity. The Society has never been anxious to win public favour, otherwise than as it may have deserved it by its steady upholding of evangelical truth, and by waiting patiently for the blessing of God. All we ask for is to be allowed to go on as we are."

These were utterances carrying with them the concurrence of a large number of the members of the C.M.S. The very general esteem in which Mr. Barlow was held in Bristol was manifested in a marked manner when, in 1873, he removed to Oxford. On that occasion he was presented with an illuminated address and several substantial tokens of affection. The address not only acknowledged the diligence of Mr. Barlow in all ordinary parochial work; but also spoke of him as one who had been "induced to take an active part in the local management of many important societies instituted for the glory of God and the well-being of man."

From 1873 to 1875 Mr. Barlow was rector of St. Ebbe's, Oxford, during which period on Sunday evenings, in term time, he conducted a Greek Testament class for undergraduates. This class was largely attended, especially by men preparing for the ministry of the Church of England. On his leaving Oxford the members presented him with a handsome album filled with large views of the city and neighbourhood.

The next seven years of Mr. Barlow's life were spent as Principal of the well-known Church Missionary College, Islington. The duties were onerous, and he discharged them in the fear of God. While so engaged, he gave special attention to the subject of preparation for the ministry. On this topic he read a paper before the Church Congress at Swansea, in which he suggested that three or four years ought to intervene between entrance upon the first and second stages of the ministry, and that if, after three or more years' experience, a deacon gives no proof of possessing the requisite gifts for pastoral work, he might retire, without stigma, to some other profession. He urged the great importance of the study of Christian evidences in ministerial training, holding that > If all believers should be ready to give a reason for the hope that is in them, the Christian minister should especially be able to do this. In a sifting, searching, restless age, when the tendency to call no man master is pushed very far, an acquaintance with the defence of the citadel must be part of the equipment of the Christian soldier.

On Mr. Barlow's resignation of the Principalship of the College in 1882, the Committee of the Society, assisted by the students and others, caused his portrait, painted by Williams, to be hung in the College Hall, as a token of their esteem. Mr. Barlow left Islington to become vicar of St. James's, Clapham, and there he remained until 1886. The sphere was, in several respects, a trying one; debt impeded the work, and there was dissension among the people. The parish underwent great changes, however. In 1886, peace and goodwill reigned over a united congregation, and every pecuniary embarrassment was removed. Amongst the societies assisted by the congregation were the Church Missionary Society, British and Foreign Bible Society, Church Pastoral Aid Society, Irish Church Missions to Roman Catholics, Colonial and Continental Church Society, and the London City Mission. In the year when Mr. Barlow became Vicar, only £177 was collected for the Church Missionary Society, but in 1885, the amount reached was the handsome sum of £569. In 1884 Mr. Barlow was again a selected reader at the Church Congress—held that year at Carlisle. His paper had for its subject the Church Missionary Society, of which he spoke in terms of praise, because it had not shrunk from setting forth its desire that a "friendly intercourse should be maintained with other Protestant societies engaged in the same benevolent design of propagating the Gospel of Jesus Christ."

Entering upon work at Islington, Mr. Barlow took up the strings of endeavour which had, during many years, been in the industrious hands of Prebendary Wilson. The two clergymen resembled each other in devotion to the truth and earnestness in making it known. The many Church agencies and parish institutions have been rapidly developed during Mr. Barlow's ministry, some devoted workers having rallied to his standard. Cultivating friendly relations with all who love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, he has admirers and acquaintances belonging to various denominations. Mr. Barlow has frequently taken part in the Mildmay Conference, and is in the habit of attending, like his sainted predecessor, to offer the opening prayer. As convener of the Islington Clerical Meeting, he is beloved by the people of his large parish, and highly esteemed by a wide circle of brethren in the ministry.

Mr. Barlow is rural dean, examining chaplain to the Bishop of Liverpool, and a member of the clerical sub-committee of the Church Missionary Society for the selection of candidates. He is also connected with the governing bodies of several important training institutions. We wish there were many more clergymen of the same sort. We can but trust that his life will long be spared and his influence exerted in the interest of evangelical doctrine and Protestant principles in the Church of England.

MEDICAL MISSIONS.

THE medical mission work of Dr. Marcus Eustace in Persia has excited considerable interest in the large circle of his friends in Dublin. Moreover, his appeal for funds with which to erect a hospital at Julfa, Ispahan, has, we rejoice to learn, brought into existence an earnest home effort on behalf of medical missions in general. Some leading medical men have united to form a Medical Missions Aid Society for Ireland, to co-operate with the Church Missionary Society, but to render direct assistance to work all over the world.

A few days ago, at a meeting in the Litton Hall, Leeson Park, Dublin, the Society was inaugurated. The Bishop of Cashel presided, and bespoke the hearty support of those who knew Dr. Eustace. Addresses were delivered by the Bishop of Ossory, Dr. Barton, Rev. J. Redman, Professor Haughton, and others. The rules of the new Society state its object as:—"To aid directly, by grants of money, instruments, or books, by sending trained nurses, or in other ways, medical missions in all parts of the world, but specially and primarily those under the Church Missionary Society." A goodly sum of money has been subscribed to start the work, of which Mrs. Marcus Eustace, 34, Leeson Park, Dublin, is one of the hon. secretaries.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.

SIR,—Permit me to ask your readers for free grants of Gospel tracts, or for a donation in aid of their purchase. With the advent of spring we receive many applications for supplies by our members, of whom there are now more than a thousand. These tracts are needed, not only for ordinary open-air services, but for use by our agents at races, fairs, and other special gatherings, where the printed page largely takes the place of the spoken word. Our circulation of tracts, books, and cards last year was 1,225,057, of which 903,093 were given to us by 115 donors; and the total circulation since the formation of the Mission is 22,808,429. The number of races, fairs, and other special gatherings visited by our agents last year was 620.—Yours faithfully,

GAWIN KIRKHAM, Secretary.

Open-Air Mission Office, 14, Duke-street, Adelphi, W.C.

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.

A LARGE company assembled at Grosvenor House, on Friday afternoon, by invitation of the Duke and Duchess of Westminster, to listen to Mr. John Kirk's account of the Christlike work which he directs. Cheer and gloom were mingled in his story of nearly four thousand voluntary helpers in sympathetic touch with over fifty thousand of London's poorest children and as many parents, who are helped and uplifted in multifarious ways, which make real to them the love of God—by feeding, clothing, fortnightly holidays, as well as by industrial, recreative and religious agencies. Yet there are large needy areas untouched for lack of men and means, and many children in suspense as to whether they will be included in the coming summer's fortnight of bliss.

The DUKE OF WESTMINSTER said continuance and increase of the late Lord Shaftesbury's work was a necessity of London's growth. Doubtless, the remarkable diminution of juvenile crime is, in some measure, due to such efforts. Legislation is projected in the directions of saving young offenders, and preventing indigent or immoral parents from demanding possession, from mercenary motives, of children voluntarily yielded for adoption.

Earl COMPTON had seen something of the work, and congratulated Mr. Kirk on his report. Christians must give the waifs of town life a better chance. The painful revelations of the Budget show the importance of temperance teaching for the young. This work of imparting real religion, excellent education, and wholesome recreation is deserving of more support, sympathy, co-operation, and encouragement.

Canon FLEMING said voluntarily supported organisations such as this, which transform the helpless and tempted ones of our streets into godly, useful members of society, are amongst the brightest ornaments of our land.

The Ragged School Union has a circle of friends much wider than the metropolis. The advantages of their Holiday Home at Thursley Common are well known to the people of Godalming. Last week a drawing-room meeting was held there, at Llanoway House. Interesting information was given on the subject of holidays for the very poor children of London, by Rev. Trevor Fielder, vicar of St. Andrew's, Lambeth, Rev. J. Crichton, and Mr. John Kirk, secretary of the Union.

LADS' REST, DULWICH.—Through the kindness of Lady West a meeting was held last week at Chesterfield, Upper Norwood, on behalf of the Home for Lads, 69, Park-road, West Dulwich. Accounts were given of the object and need of the work by General Graydon, Rev. W. Fuller Gooch, and Mr. W. H. Dalton, the hon. director. A collection resulted in over £16 being added to the funds of the Home.

THE CHICAGO BIBLE INSTITUTE.

THE attempt to combine practical Christian work with Bible study in the training of the students at the Bible Institute is meeting with great success both in the women's and in the men's departments. Every student is engaged in active work. Several of the young ladies and quite a number of the men already receive remuneration from various societies. The superintendent of one of the denominational city missionary societies, that has in its employ several of the men, has spoken on different public occasions in the highest terms of their work, and is negotiating to employ more as soon as they can be had. The call for men to work outside the city has been so pressing that nine of the men have already entered the field, most of them with the hope of returning when someone else can be found to occupy their places. The work of the students both in the city and out of it, has resulted in many marked and interesting conversions.

Mr. C. L. Kirk, one of the students, at a recent gathering of the ladies and gentlemen of the two departments, said: In looking over the register I find about fifty names recorded from many States and territories. Vermont has here shaken hands with California. Maine has here extended a hearty welcome to old Virginia, and the Indian Territory; while England, Ireland, Scotland, and Canada, have rivalled each other in sending us these noble men. We find a very interesting study in looking up the different vocations in life from which God called these boys. For instance, I find among the number the carpenter, the bricklayer, the machinist, the blacksmith, the farmer, the back-woodsman, the commercial traveller, the railroad man, the business man, the book-keeper, the clerk, the barber, the contractor, the ship owner, the printer, the medical student, the dentist, the painter, the theological student, the policeman, the saloon keeper, the college boy, the association secretary, the Sunday-school missionary, the evangelist, the local preacher, the ordained minister. In fact it seems that God in calling together his children, to fit them for his service, has searched almost every avenue in life; and uppermost in the minds of all these boys that God has called, and who form this department, there seems to have been, and is yet but one thought: How can we best fit ourselves for the work to which our Heavenly Father may see fit to assign us?

Many very interesting and touching incidents connected with house-to-house visitation have been met with.

THE CHRISTIAN MISSION POOR LADS' SELF-HELP, BIRMINGHAM, has been established four years. Temporal lodgings are given to starving lads, for whom work is found, so that they may help themselves. Many have thus been rescued from a life of crime. Poverty-stricken homes have been visited by the missionary, Mr. J. S. Best, and others, who have been privileged to preach the Gospel to many who have long lived in sin and indifference. Mr. Best's address is 45, Franklin-street, Winson-green, Birmingham.

MR. STEPHEN BURROWES, at a meeting a few days ago of members of the Naples branch of the International Purity League, rendered a report of his recent special mission to the East. From personal observation, and from letters received, he showed that a moral plague is spreading to many lands through traffic in corrupting pictures and literature, and the opium, gambling, and drinking vices of Egypt. The civil authorities, directors of customs, and missions have given hearty support to efforts for the suppression of the evils, and these efforts have already taken shape in a line of action which the Executive has at last adopted. Earnest men at Port Said, Alexandria, and Constantinople continue to do their utmost to effect the confiscation of vile articles to traffic. The aim, however, is total prohibition, and for the attainment of this the prayers and sympathy of the Christian public are much desired.

"MAY MEETINGS."

STRANGERS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

THE Lord Mayor presided over the meeting of this Society last week at the Mansion House. The Society, said his Lordship, endeavours to aid the sick and distressed of London, and to lead wrongdoers into ways of purity and goodness. No relief is granted until full investigation is made by visitors. The visitors, who give their services gratuitously, number 242. During the past year 3407 cases were relieved, at an expenditure of £1060; but many necessitous cases had to be passed over.

While advocating the claims of the Society's work, Rev. C. H. Kelly, President of the Wesleyan Conference, deprecated indiscriminate almsgiving. Mr. W. A. M'Arthur, M.P., contended that the idea of looking to Parliament, to political agitation, or to Socialism, for panaceas for the abolition of the woes of the poor, was chimerical. He maintained that only through organisations like the Strangers' Friend Society could poverty, misery, and sin be effectively combated. Rev. F. B. Meyer, in pleading for increased funds, drew a vivid picture of the isolation of the stranger sick and poor in a crowded city like London. As the "red cross" band in the battle of life, Christians must not abandon the wounded and fallen to perish, but must minister to the afflicted and the impoverished. Mr. W. C. Collins gave the pleasing information that during the past year the Society had not been imposed upon in a single instance. Over £360 were subscribed at the meeting.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.

THE thirtieth anniversary, on Tuesday week, in Exeter Hall, was preceded by a Conference of workers in the afternoon, under the presidency of Mr. J. H. Lydall. Two papers were read. The first, prepared by Mr. E. W. Thomas, and read by Mr. Hughes, went into the history of the Society. Rev. George W. M'Cree, of the Borough, said a strong word about the wicked influence exerted by the theatres of the day, in which young performers are found saying the most objectionable things. He recommended that a deputation of Christians should go to the Lord Chamberlain to bring under his notice the impurities with which plays abounded, and which were presumed, at least, to have received his licence.

In the evening Mr. George Williams presided. Mr. J. H. L. Christien presented the report, and stated that eighty-four meetings had been held in town and country, and that the income was £1825. By way of encouragement not to give up the most hardened, he told an incident with which he had lately become acquainted. There had been brought from the Strand into one of their meetings a young woman of so hardened a character that her case might have been pronounced to be hopeless. She gave a good deal of trouble in the Home to which she was sent, and in return much pains were taken with her, apparently without making the least impression. She left at last, and the workers were inclined to feel that they had laboured in vain, and spent their strength for nought. By and by they heard of her again, and found she was married, and living respectably. No doubt many found it hard to go about this blessed work of seeking and saving. But every worker should remember that every lost woman saved is another crown to cast at the Redeemer's feet.

Rev. Dr. Tyler, who was evidently suffering from indisposition, soon forgot all about it, and spoke with great effect upon the Bible view of sin, remarking that to think of it as the abominable thing which God hates ought ever to furnish the strongest motive to the Christian to take part in this work.

Mr. E. W. Thomas spoke of the mischief wrought by a fallen woman. There was not a more mischievous sinner than she who lived only to sin and to tempt others to sin. The meeting was further addressed by Rev. J. H. Berguer and Rev. W. Mowll, who adverted to the vicious novels got hold of by servants, who in this respect, however, followed only too closely the example of their mistresses. Mr. G. Williams offered earnest prayer on behalf of the reclaimed, and of the workers who, by the Divine blessing, had led them from their sinful course.

ZENANA BIBLE & MEDICAL MISSION

THE work of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, otherwise known as the Indian Female Normal School and Instruction Society, is of unquestioned importance. Going into the homes of India, and spreading light as to life and godliness among the women, the workers exercise an influence for good which could not otherwise be brought to bear upon the dark and superstitious millions of the great Empire. The Society has 28 stations, and employs 60 European missionaries and Eurasian assistants, 124 native Christian teachers, nurses, &c., and 58 Bible-women. There are 63 schools, with 2379 pupils; and 4 Normal schools, with 130 students training for mission work. The missionaries and Bible-women have access to 2569 Zenanas and private houses, with 1829 pupils under Christian instruction. The Bible-women also visit periodically 405 villages. During last year, at the Society's hospitals and the dispensaries at Lucknow and Benares, 18,782 attendances of 5663 patients were recorded.

These facts and figures represent a vast amount of labour. They should commend the Society to the earnest support of the friends of India, and especially to the lively interest of those who feel for the woes of downtrodden womankind. We rejoice to report that the work is securing new sympathisers. A recent accession is the Princess Mary Adelaide, Duchess of Teck, who has accepted the presidency. Her Royal Highness attended the annual meeting, which was held on Tuesday last week, in Princes Hall, Piccadilly, Lord Kinnaird in the chair. Mr. W. T. Paton, the treasurer, in a brief statement, showed the reality of the work. The income last year was £13,054, being an increase over the preceding year of £1477. It is proposed to extend the medical department of the work by building hospitals at Patna, and in North Ceylon. Mr. Paton had the hearty concurrence of the meeting when he expressed the opinion that if the Society had done nothing else, the establishment of four Mission hospitals was sufficient return for the money, time, and labour hitherto expended.

In the course of a brief address, Lord Kinnaird showed what great cause there is for thankfulness and hope as to the operations of the Mission. A year ago, curtailment seemed inevitable, but donations came in which bridged over the difficulty. The natives are so eager to hear the Gospel, that there is, to-day, danger of the missionary ladies being over-worked. Rev. W. Gray, of the C.M.S., in a kindly address, referred to the heartiness with which the Mission co-operates with other Protestant societies. He pointed out that as North-West India is the centre of religious superstition, it ought to be one of the principal fields of labour for Christ. The people have seen Christianity exemplified in the lives of devoted Lieutenant-Governors, missionaries, and others, but yet the great cities of the country are, as it were, walled up to heaven against the religion of Jesus Christ. These walls, however, will fall as surely as those of Jericho fell.

Two ladies also delivered addesses. One of them, Miss Sorabji, B.A., depicted "Scenes from Indian Life." The darkness of the people in general, and the griefs of the women in particular, were shown to appeal strongly for the dissemination of Gospel light and liberty. Having referred to the intellectual activity of the present day, the lady insisted upon the necessity of a Missionary College and a special mission to the Parsees. The last speaker, Miss M. Leitch, called upon ladies to consecrate themselves to Christian effort abroad. Answering the common objection, "I have not the requisite ability," she said, "You will be better than no one; it comes to this—if people who are willing do not, passing over the question of ability, go and shine for Jesus in the villages of India, there will be nobody." The Mission wants to send out twenty new missionaries this year; and those who cannot go should, Miss Leitch contended, make it possible for others to go who can, if only to live for Christ in surroundings of spiritual darkness.

At the close of the meeting the Duchess of Teck informed Miss Sorabji that she would report to the Queen the deeply interesting character of the work. A collection realised £1104—a good beginning of the £20,000 which the Society is anxious to raise this year.

MR. SPURGEON'S COLLEGE.

THE chief feature of the meetings last week was the prominence given to the infallible and inspired character of Holy Scripture. By more than one speaker attention was called and stress laid on this fact. "The Conference this year," said one, "will be known in time to come as the Bible Conference"; and, indeed, on every ground the title will be admitted to be a just one.

As in the old, so in the new constitution of the Conference, the staple dish was the President's Address. The subject was chosen, as Mr. Spurgeon facetiously observed, on such lines as would enable him to say a little about everything. He wanted to speak not to the times, but for the times; and, therefore, he divided his theme as follows; (1) Our Lord's position to us; (2) Our position to Him; (3) Our position individually.

Under the first head, Mr. Spurgeon pointed out that the place assigned to Christ Himself must ever be the supreme, all-commanding factor. If there is error as it concerns Christ's person, everything else is out of course; just as in astronomy all depends on where you put the sun. Amplifying this thought, we were reminded that Christ is, first and foremost, to be regarded as our Sacrifice and Sin-bearer. Many nowadays have no grip of this, and are in a worse position than the late F. W. Robertson, of Brighton, who was of opinion that "Christ did something or other which, in some way or other, had something to do with our salvation."

It was also worthy of remark, said the President, that those who wanted the shadow rather than the substance of the atonement were equally averse to Justification by faith only. In fact, modern thought was an attempt to take away grace, and substitute merit. It was the old battle between the truth of God and the devil's lie. Christ our Sacrifice, Christ our Atonement, Christ our Righteousness—these are doctrines which it is ours to preach, because we know no other, and they are endeared to us more than life itself. Our adversaries affect to pity us as if we preached in chains, but the chains are chains of love. We do not preach as if in servile bondage, for the truth we preach is that which makes us free.

With equal skill and cogency Mr. Spurgeon enlarged on Christ's relation to us as sole Mediator and High Priest, pouring out vessels of holy invective on Sacramentarianism and priestly pretension. He then proceeded to deal with Christ as infallible Teacher through the Word, commenting at considerable length on the fatuity of the endeavours of certain good but mistaken men to deepen spiritual life while making light of agreement in the truth. Hearty plaudits greeted the sentiment, "I don't understand people saying, 'I am loyal to Christ,' while at the same time with them the word He has spoken is immaterial. Unless we receive Christ's word we do not receive Christ." It is as if one were to say, "They have poisoned the children's bread," and the reply were, "My dear brother, I am sorry to hear it; I will open the window and give them some fresh air." Fresh air is good, but no less is it incumbent to see that the children's bread be not poisoned.

Mr. Spurgeon next alluded to the position of Christ as sole Lawgiver and Ruler, and to the impiety of those who usurp Christ's prerogative in this respect, and claim the name "Apostolic" for systems of their own invention. That "Apostolic Warfare" was in Mr. Spurgeon's mind at this stage of his address was evident to most of his hearers. But space fails us even to indicate the varied points enumerated. Let it suffice to state that with the utmost vigour Mr. Spurgeon insisted on the Gospel of the grace of God winning its own way. It is no triumph of the Gospel if auxiliaries be brought in to win the battle for it.

To many the most noteworthy feature in Mr. Spurgeon's varied and powerful address was the unmistakable deliverance which it contained on the subject of Christ's Second Coming. "I believe," he said, "it is near. There are signs which tell me that He is not far off. When you see the farmer tearing down the gates and destroying the hedges, you say: 'That old fellow's lease is up.' So now the devil is busy doing all the mischief he can, but he knows he has had notice to quit, and that his time is short."

In the evening of the same day (Tuesday, April 22) a meeting was held at the Stockwell Orphanage, Mr. Spurgeon presiding, when addresses were given by a number of brethren from foreign fields of labour; the proceedings were agreeably interspersed by the sweet singing of Mr. J. Manton Smith and a choir of the orphan children.

On Wednesday, April 23, the brethren met at the College at 11 a.m., and, after a season of earnest prayer, Pastor T. L. Edwards, from Stockton-on-Tees, read a paper on "His Powerful Word," which was followed by a paper from Pastor A. McCaig, from Ireland, on "Verbal Inspiration Vindicated." Both papers were exceedingly well received, and, while very different in form, were in substance one. In the open conference that followed, no discordant note was struck, but all felt that, while theories of inspiration were vain, the fact of inspiration as an all-pervasive element in the Word was certain.

The usual meeting of subscribers to the College was held in the evening, when, after a racy speech from the President, and a few words from the chairman, Mr. George Williams, several brethren, labourers in foreign fields, gave brief addresses. Pastor Bunning, of Western Melbourne, Australia, after an absence of eighteen years from England, in a speech characterised by much tenderness of feeling, interwove memories of the old country with the more recent experiences of the new, and touched all hearts by the loving tribute he paid to the memory of the late Pastor Burton, recently deceased, of Dalston Junction. Our old friend Rev. C. W. Gregory, whom we remember in former days as a fellow minister in Lancashire, gave a record of successful work in South California. Evidently from our brother's pushing manner and beaming countenance, he has had much to encourage him in that famed land of gold.

An interesting diversion was made in the meeting by the appearance of Dr. Churcher, medical missionary from Tangier, who in Moorish costume told of his difficulties and encouragements as a witness for Christ, in the midst of a rabid Mohammedan people. The large faith of the man, even more than his words, took hold of the audience. Two missionaries from China then followed, Mr. E. H. Edwards, M.B., C.M., medical missionary, and Pastor Joshua Turner. It was cheering to hear from the lips of these men the triumphs of faith wrought in China, both in soul-winning and in martyr testimony, in the face of much opposition. Pastor Potter, missionary at Agra, India, and well known to many in the audience, in an able and fervent speech, pled the cause of India; while our young brother Phillips, from the Congo, told of the signal success which had rested on his labours at St. Salvador.

At the call of the Chairman, Sir J. H. Kennaway, M.P., rose, and, in a short speech, expressed his confidence in the work done by the Pastors' College men, and urgently called on all who held the common faith to stand shoulder to shoulder. Rev. C. J. Goodhart, at Mr. Spurgeon's request, spoke a few closing words, showing why, as a "Churchman," he felt it to be his duty and privilege to support Mr. Spurgeon's College.

At the supper which followed, the large amount of £2700 was contributed to the funds of the institution.

On the following day (Thursday), after a season of prayer, Professor Gracey, who is greatly beloved, read an elaborate paper on 1 Thess. i., showing that in Paul's earliest Epistle all the distinctive doctrines of our faith were assumed by the Apostle as well-known axioms in the Church of Christ then existing. Pastor F. E. Marsh, from Sunderland, then read a paper on "Our Continual Need of the Holy Spirit." This paper we should like to descant upon, but may not now. Pastor G. D. Hooper followed with a forceful paper on "The Word in Relation to our Work." At this meeting most touching reference was made to the kindness of Mrs. Spurgeon, which, not only in the Conference gift, but through the Book Fund, and in many other ways, finds practical expression.

In the evening, as might be expected, an enthusiastic meeting was held in the Tabernacle, which was thronged, the speakers being mostly brethren from distant fields.

Next day (Friday) was held the closing meeting of the present Conference. Pastor J. E. Martin read a paper on "The Word in Relation to our Inner Life," after which the President preached with great power on Gal. i. 11. The Communion and Farewell followed. For its testimony to the living Word, and for the glow of its missionary fervour, the Conference this year, it is believed, surpasses all predecessors.

A BAPTIST PASTOR.

YOUNG ABSTAINERS' UNION.

THE object of this Union is to foster the principles of Gospel temperance amongst the children of the upper and middle classes of society, who are very already unreached by the ordinary Bands of Hope and similar agencies. The tenth anniversary meeting was held in the Lower Exeter Hall on Wednesday evening last week. The secretary (Miss L. E. Andrews) in her report reviewed the work of the Union during the past decade, and remarked upon the gratifying progress that has been made. During the past year there has been a nett increase in the membership of 180, which brings the total number of members up to about 8000. The work of the Union is forwarded chiefly through the medium of drawing-room and other meetings, and of these a considerable number have been held in connection with the branches in different parts of the country. In such effort as this there is necessarily little emphatic evidence of immediate results, but the many workers patiently ply their toil with the confidence that present seed-sowing will cause good fruit to spring up in future years.

Sir Arthur Blackwood, who presided, referred to the Union as filling a needed place in the temperance army, and emphasised the importance of its work. Alluding to Mr. Goschen's recent Budget speech, and to the alarming increase in the consumption of drink, he called for increased energy in prosecuting this preventive work among the young. Rev. E. A. Stuart prefaced a helpful address to the young people by a few remarks to the parents. He reminded them that the taste for alcohol was not natural, and they should be trained to "look upon it as a bad thing." He heartily approved the principle of abstinence for the sake of others, but this should not be made too prominent in dealing with children, because it had the tendency to make them think that for this reason they were denying themselves of something that was nice; it should be impressed upon them that alcoholic drinks are themselves distasteful and harmful.

Mr. A. C. P. Coote and Mr. J. H. Raper having spoken briefly, Mr. Joshua Rowntree, M.P., delivered an address, in which he reminded them that it could not be by legislation merely that the country was to be purified from the drink evil; there must be a sound and healthy public opinion upon the subject, such as that which this Union seeks to foster. Miss Leitch appealed for complete consecration to Christ, and urged upon the workers the glory of God as the motive for all effort.

Y.W.C. ASSOCIATION.

THE anniversary gatherings of this Association were held in London last week, the great meeting in Exeter Hall being preceded by a two days' Conference. On Tuesday evening Lady Barbery, London president of the Association, presided at the opening meeting in Morley Hall, 316, Regent-street, and opened the subject, "Christ our Life" (John i. 4) to a full hall of attentive listeners. Miss Faulkner gave a vivacious account of her travels in the principal cities of Australia. Anxious relatives, she remarked, must not suppose that there is any virtue for advanced consumptives in touching the shores of that colony. There is a demand for domestic servants, especially at Rockhampton, but few openings for educated service. Emigrants should be fortified by solid Christian principle, and prepared for hard work. Australasia has thirty-six Y.W.C.A. branches in full operation, but there is room for more, particularly in comparatively small places. Miss Blanche Pigott, with intense fervour and animation, traced the spiritual teachings of King Hiram's dealings with Solomon (1 Kings v. 10-12).

On Tuesday morning a devotional meeting was held under the direction of Miss Wingfield Digby, followed by a meeting for the consideration of CHRIST OUR INSPIRATION.

The Marchioness of Tavistock presided, and said that Christ's earth life is our pattern of dependence upon and surrender to the Father. Prayer for guidance must be supplemented by an open heart for Divine impressions. Plans first made and then offered to God for blessing often lead to merely human work. Mrs. Bannister spoke of the eye filled by Christ and the heart indwelt by Him as a constraining power. If He is ever before the eye of faith, there will be no stopping short in the Christian life; but the eternal life implanted at conversion will have free course. We talk of possessing eternal life; does the eternal life possess us? We may come short of marvellous possibilities, through not breathing out what God has breathed into us. Miss Beatrice Allen remarked that, when God inspires spiritual desires, He intends to satisfy them. Believers are saved to serve. Miss Blanche Pigott said it is well when souls say, not "What a beautiful channel," but "I have drank of the water of life." The offerings teach that intellect, heart, outward walk, riches of this life, must all be laid upon God's altar. A holy God and a needy world would consume the whole of such a sacrifice, were it really laid on the altar. "I can do all things through Christ" is no worn-out saying.

Mrs. Edward Trotter said that God's inspiration cannot be received without recaptivity on the part of his servants. Unless human plans be based upon God's purposes, they come to nothing. In order to be in the line of God's will, it is absolutely necessary to be alone with Christ in stillness of heart, whether there be outward quiet or not.

The afternoon meeting, presided over by Lady Forester, was very crowded, and an overflow meeting was held in the reading-room, under the direction of Mrs. Hatt Noble.

CHRIST OUR EXAMPLE

was well illustrated in interesting reports read by various ladies, respecting the Association's work at the recent Paris Exhibition, and among travellers, teachers, juniors, post-office employés, hospital nurses, factory girls, and colonists; also utilising the time and talents of young ladies who have leisure and desire to employ it in their Master's service. Miss Sorabji, an Indian lady, ably advocated the claims of her country-women, and referred with gratitude to the benefits of the female hospital at Lucknow, established in memory of the late Dowager Lady Kinnaird. Miss Denny pointed out the necessity of Christian influence in meeting women's mental as well as spiritual needs.

The day closed with a conversazione, at the residence of Mr. and Miss Denny, by their kind invitation, with addresses by Revs. Barnes Lawrence, C. Fox, and others.

On Thursday morning members assembled at a communion service in All Souls' Church, Langham-place, when an address was given by Rev. M. Washington. Lady Carbery presided over the subsequent meeting at Morley Hall, the subject being CHRIST OUR KING.

Miss Faulkner gave details of work amongst colonists, Maoris, and mulattos; also news concerning Miss Trotter's mission in Algiers. There is a reflex blessing from taking interest in God's work abroad. Those unable to learn foreign languages may do effective colonial work. The Hon. Miss G. Kinnaird commended to increased support the Loving Service League in its work among Indian women. Miss Sorabji besought sympathy for her country-women by contrasting their condition with the spiritual privileges of their English sisters. Indian children, too, are influenced for God through the mission schools connected with the Y.W.C.A. work in that country. A Parsee father, whose other sons had all proved worthless, determined to try the effect of Christianity upon his boy of three years old, who was accordingly taken into the mission school and joined the Scripture Union. But the time came when the pupil must attend the Parsee temple, and his father burned the lad's Bible before his eyes. When the young disciple was afterwards found alone, disconsolately writing out texts, he said: "You have taken away my Bible, and I fear I shall forget all I know of it, unless I write down as much as I can." The father was so affected that he bought his son another copy of his favourite book.

Miss Smith warmly advocated the claims of the London Association's Foreign Missionary Department. Lady Carbery spoke of God's present invisible reign; the symbolism of fire—spreading and ascending, lighting and warming—which is connected with God's immediate presence; and the purification for work and for the glory of God which results from the spiritual furnace through which believers are called to pass.

The afternoon meeting, conducted by the Countess of Harrowby, on the subject of "Christ our Head" (Phil. ii. 10), was devoted to the reading of reports concerning work in the four quarters of London, in various counties of England, in Scotland and Ireland, and amongst "girls abroad and foreigners abroad." Mrs. Carus-Wilson mentioned startling facts concerning women's "rush to alcohol," as revealed by the Budget, and made an earnest and stirring appeal for both personal example and combined action against the terrible evil.

THE ANNUAL MASS MEETING was held at Exeter Hall in the evening, Lord Kinnaird in the chair, supported by a large number of influential ladies and gentlemen. The chairman bore testimony to the practical character of the work and workers, and urged the necessity for increasing the number of country holiday homes for the many weary women workers of this great city. An abstract of the report was read by Mr. W. T. Paton, the main features being general growth of the Association, extension to new departments of work, but a financial deficit. The office of President of the London Association, vacant since the lamented death of the late Dowager Lady Kinnaird, has been accepted by Lady Carbery, who has already shown a warm and practical interest in the work. The total number of members in London is now 16,643. The evening educational classes, held at twenty of the London Institutes, have made considerable progress. The Factory Helpers' Union and Travellers' Aid, commenced as departments of the Association's work, have become self-supporting Societies, and are doing valuable work, one among factory girls, the other in protection to female travellers. The increasing Junior Branches prove useful in bringing very young girls under the beneficent influence of the Association.

Rev. E. A. Stuart referred to the constant emigration of young women from the country into cities, the multiplication of large businesses, and the consequent lack of family life among the employées. It is estimated that there are in London 56,000 young women from Devon alone, and 105,000 from the eastern counties. Saturday to Monday home visits put business girls outside ministerial influence, but they find true friends in the Association superintendents. He fully believed that the keystone of England's greatness is the hearthstone. "That our daughters may be as corner-stones, polished after the similitude of a palace," they must know Him who is the chief corner-stone, a glorious uniting link between God and man. God intends women to be the corner-stone in the family and home, and so to preserve family life, love, and union. There would be fewer "fast" brothers, if there were more true sisters taking their stand by the cross, as did the brave women of old; so giving our young men the highest ideal of what woman is intended to be, not a toy to be played with and thrown away, but a true helpmeet for man. In many families the daughter has been the corner-stone, binding the family together, and linking it to God. There may be as much selfishness in a sister constantly going to a prayer-meeting, as in her brother going to his worldly amusements. It may be well to sometimes forego even religious pleasures in order to make the home happy. There is need for "polished" or self-denying, and "palace" or royal lives, which shall, in some degree, answer to God's high purpose for his creatures.

Rev. Pedr Williams said there is a splendid mission before the Association—the high national and social service of making, under God, valiant, pure, heroic, Christlike women of the many who, in this terrible Metropolis, are running a race without a goal, forgetful of the solemnity of life, eager only for "pleasure." The desirable thing for the young womanhood of to-day is loyalty to Christ and a sympathy for one's fellows which does not grow in sin-hardened soil, but is built on Godly personal character. He believed in sympathy; most of all in the sympathy of woman. It was only when Christ wept at the grave of Lazarus that the love of the Saviour was recognised by the Jews. What discourse and miracle could not do, the tear effected and will effect. Life is an opportunity for fidelity, and the vision of Jesus Christ is its inspiration. When God speaks, let us be silent; when He claims attention, let us listen; when He commands us to the battle, let us obey, cutting our way through frivolity, for our struggle is short and our triumph shall be eternal.

THE BAPTIST UNION.

There was a goodly assemblage of pastors and delegates in Bloomsbury Chapel, on Monday afternoon, at the opening meeting of the Baptist Union of Great Britain and Ireland. Rev. John Thomas Wigner introduced his successor, Rev. James Owen, of Swansea, who delivered a stirring and thoughtful address on "An Effective Ministry of the Word." Having indicated the place of preaching in the Church, and emphasised its importance, he maintained that only sympathy can bridge the gulf between the ministry and those who keep aloof from it. He said: The weakness of our ministry has been in proportion to the feebleness of the desire for the salvation of men. The Christian Church forgets the reason, and misses the end, of her existence, when she has not a passion for the salvation of men. She has too frequently lost sight of this in the care for other things. She has been busy discussing theological problems, answering objections, creed-patching, splitting hairs; speculating as to the height of the precipice and the nature of the rock, instead of helping the sufferer who has fallen; moralising upon the state of the country, the social anarchy, the danger of travelling between Jerusalem and Jericho, instead of befriending and helping the man who has been robbed and wounded, and is half dead on the wayside. The Church does not fulfil her mission when she does not seek to save.

Mr. Owen allowed that it is a noble thing to provide for the necessities of the poor and the sick, to work for the promotion of human happiness, and the redress of social wrongs; but he pointed out that this is not the first or main end of the Gospel ministry. First of all, save the man; all kinds of blessings for himself, for his home, for society, for the State, may flow out of that. The denomination has more ministers than charges; the need to-day is for more evangelists, who, pursuing their daily business, will render service in the Gospel. Here the speaker spoke out: "Are there not brethren who are eloquent in the political club, or in the friendly society, or in the County Council, or on the School Board, who give the use of their tongue freely to municipal or imperial politics, and yet who never speak for Christ, who are dumb in the church, dumb in the town, dumb in the villages, as far as the message of Christ is concerned! Would that this dumb spirit were expelled, and that they became evangelists! The history of the Christian Church in the New Testament, and of every religious reformation and revival, the spread of Methodism, the evangelistic services conducted by Messrs. Moody and Sankey, and even the success of the Salvation Army, go to prove that, if the non-pastors in our churches, who have the ability, would become fellow labourers in preaching the Word, it would be a blessing to themselves and to the kingdom of God.

After touching upon present-day questionings as to the Holy Scriptures, himself evincing a full faith in the inspired revelation, the speaker sought to stimulate his brethren to a preaching of Christ in all his fulness, and his atonement in all its mystery and power. He held that profound convictions and a fearless expression of them are necessary to an effective ministry, also that there must be enthusiasm. He said: Dry-as-dust may be a clever critic; he will never be an effective preacher. In connection with all religious reformations and revivals we read of overpowering excitement. When Luther, whose "words were half battles," protested against the errors of the Papacy; when Knox "declared the whole counsel of God"; when Whitefield preached to the crowd in Kingswood until "the tears shaped white gutters down the black faces of the colliers," there was passionate feeling, sometimes expressed in shouts of praise. We are not afraid of excitement in political meetings, or social reform meetings, or in business, but we are dreadfully suspicious of it in religion. I admit that there is danger and moral harm in the excitement which, though calling itself religious, has no apprehension of truth at the basis of it; but "a great truth, proved to be a great truth, and earnestly enforced because it is proved to be a great truth," must, as soon as it is apprehended, excite feeling, and that feeling cannot be stifled without loss of self-respect.

In conclusion, the speaker pointed out that in God there is all-sufficiency for effective ministerial work, and called upon his brethren to respond to the call for renewed consecration to Christ.

Colonel Griffin was elected vice-president for the ensuing year.

In the evening a Home Missionary meeting was held in the large hall of the Cannon-street Hotel, Professor Stuart, M.P., presiding. The report, read by Rev. Dr. Booth, showed that there are now eighty-six mission churches upon the list of the Council, and that the conjoined mission stations stand at forty. Sixty-five mission pastors are provided for the 126 churches and the stations. The figures as to membership, and the contributions of the mission churches to various funds, were in a high degree cheering, showing that the work done is thorough as well as extensive.

In the course of a hearty address the Chairman referred to the widening significance of the term "Mission" at the present day. In country districts, as well as large towns, the brawbacks to Christian effort are many and serious. In cities they include the drink traffic, vicious influences, underpaid and excessive work, and living in places that are totally unfit for human habitation. It is not sufficient for Christian people to condemn these evils; they must exert themselves to bring about a better state of things. Causes as well as effects must be dealt with, even as Christ went to the root of all evil. Mr. Stuart, in conclusion, called attention to three inequalities. There is a great inequality of recompense, the result, on the one hand, of inequality of ability, and, on the other hand, of inequality of opportunity. Having studied the question for a long time, he had come to the conclusion that inequality of men, so far as their ability is concerned, is as nothing in comparison with their inequality so far as opportunity is concerned. The removal of these evils, the lessening of the inequalities, are, he contended, part of the work set before Christian people to-day.

Rev. Philip Lewis, of Chipping Campden, spoke practically on "Rural Churches: Their Work, and the Conditions under which it is done," and Rev. C. W. Skemp, of Bradford, urged the claims of home mission work. The latter rejoiced to find that Christians are waking up to the fact that the Church is not a mere religious retreat from the world, but a missionary agency, going to the people, and calling upon them to make God their trust. The proceedings were stimulating throughout.

THE MISSIONS TO SEAMEN.

The Egyptian Hall of the Mansion House was filled to overflowing last Monday afternoon for the annual meeting of this Society. The report was read by Commander W. Dawson. The flag of the country, he said, too often disgraced by its sailors at foreign ports, is now frequently an emblem of Christian influence and high national character on the waters. Religious effort in the mercantile marine is, however, still essentially rescue work. There are twelve roadstead missions stationed around the coast for sending Christian workers to address the crews aboard ship. A quarter of a million men belong to fishing vessels, barges, and other small craft, and to them also it has been the effort of the Mission to bring the Gospel.

Complaint is made of the demoralising effect of compulsory Sunday labour on board British merchantmen in colonial and foreign harbours, and steps have been taken to remedy this. Last year 11,000 forcastles were supplied with boxes or bags containing wholesome reading matter.

The Duke of Edinburgh, who occupied the chair, spoke warmly of the Society. He said that the chaplains and readers had forty-two boats and other vessels to board ships and fishing craft at sea, and fifty-one churches and institutes for the exclusive use of seamen and their families. All denominations and nationalities found in British harbours on board ship were heartily ministered to by the agents of the Society. British crews were sometimes paid off from their ships at ports on the coasts of France, Belgium, and Holland, where they were soon deprived of their hard-won earnings by the sharks of all nations that infest these discharging ports. The Mission is striving to counteract this and other evils.

The Archbishop of Canterbury, in a speech of considerable length, reviewed the work of the Society, and commended it to hearty financial approval. Sir Robert N. Fowler, the Earl of Meath, Lord Brassey, Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, and Rev. T. S. Treanor, also spoke, urging the extension of the Society's work.

METHODIST FREE CHURCHES.

A crowded audience assembled in Exeter Hall on Monday evening for the Home and Foreign Mission anniversary of this Church. Rev. George Turner, missionary secretary, submitted his report. In Australia, he said, many converts had been made, and the reports from the districts of Victoria and New South Wales indicated many signs of progress. Jamaica district showed a reduction in membership, because one of the native missionaries had withdrawn with the members of his circuit; but the outlook for next year was very promising. West Africa has sent gratifying reports, while East Africa had furnished bad as well as good news. Rev. T. H. Carthew has had much to do in grappling with famine distress. China has had special manifestations of Divine power and blessing. Last year on the foreign and colonial stations there were 63 missionaries, 290 local preachers and native helpers, and 10,108 members, an increase in membership of 191. In the home and foreign churches combined they had 370 ministers in full work, 39 supernumeraries, 3356 local preachers, and 77,343 persons in church membership, or an increase of 557 in the entire church during the year.

Mr. Cross having spoken, Rev. R. Abercrombie, President, sketched the history of Protestant Missions, and their action and reaction on social and spiritual life. He concluded by making an earnest appeal for a living practical sympathy with mission work throughout the world. Rev. W. J. Townsend welcomed union, as by means of it the great work of evangelising the world could be all the better performed. The China Mission was represented by Rev. W. R. Sunman. Twenty-five years ago their missionaries entered China, and they had made already a notable number of converts. At present they had better machinery than ever before for entering the strongholds of heathenism; and he had every confidence that Christianity would prevail over polytheism. There was every encouragement to push the battle to the gate.

RICHARD WEAVER AT WOOD GREEN.

In the revival of 1859 and following years it was no uncommon thing to see a crowd half across the street waiting to go into the theatre on Sunday evening to hear the Gospel. I have been reminded of those times during the past week by a visit of my old friend Richard Weaver to Wood Green. On Sunday night the Gospel Hall was crowded out, a number of Christians meeting for prayer during the preaching. The Gospel had the same grip as of old; many wept, and some trembled who did not weep, as the question was urged, "How will ye do in the swelling of Jordan?" Sin and eternity, heaven and hell, were made real, and men and women, young and old, entered into the Kingdom of God. Prayer is fervently desired for increased power during the present week.

Personalia.

Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Dyer, of Bombay, are expected in England at the end of next month on a short visit.

H.M. the Queen, according to a London correspondent, is exceedingly annoyed by the Bishop of Lincoln's ritualism, and is resolved that no divine of similar tendencies shall be elevated to the bench.

Princess Bismarck is the subject of an article in Good Words, in which she is described as "a great and good woman," well suited to be the life's companion and counsellor of the man whose words swayed the destinies of Europe. "She is a representative of the best type of German Protestantism."

Miss Marsh (the well-known writer of the "Memoirs of Captain Hedley Vicars") and her sister, Mrs. Chalmers, both of whom have become quite blind, left last week for Germany with the object of undergoing operations which it is hoped may restore their sight. The prayers of our readers are asked that the means used may be blessed to this end.

Commander Lovett Cameron is said to be shocked at the report that an English Company in East Africa is compelled to use slave labour, on the ground that it can get no other. Free labour is to be had, says Commander Cameron. But whether or not, English employment of slave labour "under any circumstances whatever is indefensible."

Mr. Wm. Noble.—We have had the pleasure of a call in London from our friend, Mr. Wm. Noble, who is for the present residing in Great Malvern; and are extremely glad to hear that the physicians report favourable progress towards the recovery of health and strength. Mr. Noble hopes that before long he may be able to resume his Gospel temperance work.

Dr. Hodges, the new missionary bishop of Travancore and Cochin (says a contemporary), is evidently the right man for the post. After taking high honours at Oxford, he has been head of the night-school at Masulipatam and Principal of Trinity College, Kandy, so that he has had abundant experience in the East, and will not have to feel his way as to the habits, beliefs, and prejudices of those among whom he will labour.

Dr. T. L. Cuyler took a formal farewell of his Brooklyn pastorate at a reception meeting on April 16. Many well-known friends were present to show their esteem, and to wish him a further period of happy restful service. The Quaker poet Whittier and others wrote expressing their goodwill. On behalf of the church and congregation the Doctor was presented with £6000 as a mark of gratitude for faithful and efficient services rendered by him as their pastor. He will continue to reside at 176, Oxford-street, Brooklyn.

Mr. J. J. Atkinson.—It will be remembered that a special committee was appointed on Mr. Atkinson's retirement from the secretaryship of the Islington Y.M.C.A. to raise a fund for the purchase of an annuity of £120. We learn that the fund is not yet closed, and any friends of the Y.M.C.A. who have not yet responded to the appeal to join in this tribute of regard for an old and faithful servant of the Association may still do so. Contributions are received by Mr. G. J. Keele, 81, St. Paul's-road, Highbury, London, N.

Rev. J. B. Gribble, known to many of our readers for his labours on behalf of Australian aborigines, is about to proceed to the north of Queensland to seek the good of the natives of that part of the continent. Particulars have recently been made public of gross wrongs inflicted by the white settlers on these natives, and Mr. Gribble's soul is stirred with a desire to go and seek, if possible, the redressment of their wrongs. For this purpose he is giving up the church living at Temora, N.S.W., which he has held for two years.

Mrs. Booth's condition for the last week has remained much the same. During the early part of the week the nausea, heart-weakness, and prostration were so severe that the doctor considered any moment might bring a conclusion of her suffering. Then, through mercy, she rallied; but returning strength, as usual, brought back the dreadful pain. On Tuesday morning last she had a wonderful period of ease. Mrs. Booth sends thanks for sympathy and prayers to all her friends of The Christian.

Letters to the Editor.

THE PASTORAL EPISTLES.

DEAR SIR,—Mrs. Humphrey Ward's assertion that the "Pastoral Epistles" were not composed till the second century flatly contradicts the facts. Not only are the doctrines, the precepts, the form, the style Pauline, but also the phraseology. In the case of 2 Tim., no less than 200 words (out of a total of about 350) are to be found in those four Epistles (Romans, Galatians, 1 and 2 Corinthians) acknowledged even by Baur and Renan to be the genuine writings of St. Paul. The identical or similar phrases are nearly fifty in number; while there are fully eighty passages in 2 Tim. which find a parallel more or less striking in these Epistles, or else in the Acts of the Apostles. Indisputably 2 Tim. was written by the author of the Epistle to the Romans—that is, by St. Paul.

In the same way a careful analysis of the internal evidence proves beyond contradiction that the author of St. John's Gospel and the author of the Book of Revelation were one and the same person. Strauss says: "The sixth Emperor (Rev. xvii. 10) existing at the time of the composition of the Book of Revelation can be none other than the Emperor Galba, who reigned only from June, 68, to January, 69, A.D." Baur and other destructive critics recognise Revelation as the work of the Apostle John. Their admissions apply equally to the Fourth Gospel.

H. HEBER EVANS.

TRACT DISTRIBUTION.

MY DEAR SIR,—I observe with pleasure in the second paragraph of "Notes and Comments" in THE CHRISTIAN (April 25), a plea for tracts, indicating, as it does, that an army of workers are ready to advance the cause of the Lord Jesus Christ by their distribution.

The importance of the work wisely carried out is very great, and it would be well if many more were to engage in it.

My object in writing is to make known a plan that I have adopted, which has proved successful, and also provides the funds for a continuous supply.

At any open-air meeting that I attend, I take care to go well armed with some good stirring tracts, such as "Is the Bible Inspired?" "What Humanity gains from Belief?" "Is the Bible a True Book?" &c., and just before the conclusion of the meeting I announce that I have these for free distribution, sometimes giving short, pithy extracts which excite interest, stating the cost, and intimating that anyone wishing to contribute the smallest amount towards their gratuitous circulation can do so. At the close, I take my stand in the ring, and invite any who wish to come and get them. You are sure that in most cases they get into right hands, as very few but those who really want them will take the trouble to come for them. Of course a large number are given away gratuitously, while, on the other hand, many encourage the distribution by small donations, which have covered the cost.

If this plan were adopted generally, it would enable open-air workers to place in the hands of the careless and indifferent pamphlets which would be read with interest, but are too expensive to use for ordinary free distribution. While enabling many workers to provide a fund for their own supply.—Yours in Gospel service,

WALTER H. PRICE.

THREE DAYS' MISSIONS.—SIR,—There are churches that would not care to undertake in the summer a mission for so long a time as eight or ten days, yet that might be willing to have a brief series of special services, say, for three days. I would therefore suggest to pastors, mission preachers, and evangelists generally, and also to churches, the following programme for such a series, which I have found advantageous, and which I hope to repeat this year. Beginning on Saturday with a preliminary service, three can be held on Sunday, one on Monday afternoon, and another in the evening, thus making six in all. With proper preparation Godward and manward, I am convinced that such brief breaks in the ordinary methods of church work will be a success.

Yours faithfully,

Birmingham. J. F. T. HALLOWES.

A British Settlement.

BY ALFRED S. DYER.

THREE weeks just spent in investigation in Shanghai has deepened my impression of the importance of the Christian public of Great Britain having more information of what takes place in distant British settlements. The importance of such information is accentuated where a British community is in contact with, and in full view of, a great heathen people, to whom the home Churches, with zeal and self-sacrifice, are sending forth the glorious message of the Gospel.

The foreign settlement of Shanghai, initiated by British treaty, is locally termed the "model settlement," and is regarded as presenting to the Chinese Government and people an almost perfect illustration and masterpiece of Western Christian civilisation. This "model settlement," covering a space no larger than an ordinary English country town, contains 1060 licensed opium shops, several of which are capable of accommodating from 500 to 1000 persons. Adjacent to the opium shops are dens of moral leprosy. The latter places are as many in number as the opium shops. The female inmates of some of them are registered by the municipality, including little girls of fifteen years of age. If the last fact should be denied, I will give the names of girl-victims and the names of the municipal doctors by whom they have been surgically violated. For the security of other wicked men, the municipal council of the "model settlement" cause a photograph of each registered girl to be attached to her card. The card is signed by a municipal doctor, and is practically an authorisation or licence to sin.

The houses in which these Chinese slaves of European vileness reside are, many of them, open and public, and, in some cases, the whole side of a main street is occupied by them. In the Chinese city of Shanghai, which is, of course, beyond the limits and power of the British municipality, not one such den of infamy is publicly known. Sometimes carried out, and sometimes not, according to the character of the local administrator, Chinese law is severe upon the keepers and owners of houses used for immoral purposes. The owners are liable to from 80 to 100 blows with the bamboo, and to banishment for two or three years, and to forfeiture of the house. The punishment for the keeper of such a house is different in kind, but equally deterrent. He may be sentenced to 100 bamboo blows, and three months with a large board fastened round his neck, with his crime and sentence inscribed thereon, and ultimately to banishment to 3000 li (1000 miles) distant. If similar penalties were enforced in the "model settlement," a large proportion of its leading men would be in prison, or would leave China, for the country's good.

The small professing Christian community at Shanghai has not escaped the blight which such wickedness as has been described above necessarily engenders. But there is a Church within the Churches—a select few whose hearts are stirred within them as they behold the place of their habitation given over to abominations. Two years ago a few of these faithful men (supported by the prayers of some noble women), made a protest in the annual ratepayers' meeting, by whom the municipal council is elected. They were voted down. A fortnight ago the protest was bravely but ineffectually renewed. The resolutions then moved illustrate the illegality as well as the high-handed wickedness of the proceedings against which the protest was directed. The first recites that whereas the toleration and regulation of vice "are opposed alike to the principles of British and American common law, and to the law of God"; and whereas "it becomes the citizens of Great Britain and America in individual and corporate action to respect and not to violate the laws of the countries to which they belong, and under whose protection, practically and ultimately, they are residing in this settlement"; and whereas the keeping of bad houses "is an infraction of the covenant by which authorisation is granted (by the representatives of the Emperor of China) to build within this settlement houses or shops for the occupation of Chinese, or to lease or let the same"; therefore "resolved that the Municipal Council be, and is hereby, instructed to discontinue at once the toleration and regulation of prostitution, and to treat brothel-keeping as an unlawful occupation, convicted and condemned by the Christian religion, by all Chinese codes of morality, and by the jurisprudence of Great Britain and America, and as a dishonourable violation of a covenant with Chinese Imperial authority."

The second resolution reads thus: "Whereas the largely increasing opium traffic in the settlement is destructive to the welfare of the community, is calculated to produce the most serious moral and material results, and is prejudicial to foreign interests in China; therefore, resolved that the Municipal Council be, and is hereby, instructed to put an end to this traffic in the settlement, and to prohibit all opium shops and places for the sale of opium."

The answer of the Municipal Council to the incriminating charges of the resolutions, and especially of the first, was silence. The chairman of the council deprecated discussion, and so far as his side was concerned, there was none in the meeting. Nothing suits evil-doing better than silence and darkness.

The moral level of the "model settlement" was illustrated by the editor of the Shanghai North China Daily News on the day preceding the ratepayers' gathering, in an article in which the cue of silence was given. Of the resolutions he said:—"They are both evidently the work of some freshly imported fanaticism, and an attempt to advertise the superior morality of certain individuals*... The men who put their names to these resolutions must know that these cosmopolitan settlements are not governed by 'the principles of British and American common law and the law of God,' but by certain regulations and by-laws framed for the purpose and agreed to by the chief powers."

The shameless and contemptuous reference of Shanghai's representative newspaper to the law of God and the laws of Great Britain and America is scarcely accurate. No doubt the "model settlement" is not governed by the law of God so far as the will of the municipality is concerned; but God is not so easily bowed out of any place, however "model." In regard to human enactments, under the Foreign Jurisdiction Acts and various orders of the Queen in Council, British subjects anywhere are amenable to Britsh law.

Seeing that the settlement of Shanghai exists as the result of a British treaty, seeing that British law is administered there at British expense, and seeing that British ships of war maintained by British taxpayers, are sent to Shanghai for its defence, British Christians in the home land, and pre-eminently Christian jurists and statesmen, may usefully consider and inquire, on many grounds, how far British subjects at Shanghai are warranted in combining or conspiring to violate the principles of British law. Our Christian brethren in America may advantageously pursue a similar line of inquiry with reference to their countrymen.

For the sake and in the eternal interest of China's millions, and in support of the faithful few in Shanghai who pray to God day and night for the removal of the legalised iniquities which I have but faintly depicted, let the people of God in the home countries arise and stop the plague by thrusting themselves between the dead and the living.

* The resolutions were moved and seconded respectively by Mr. Samuel Dyer, now and for many years past the representative in Shanghai of the British and Foreign Bible Society; Rev. G. F. Fitch, of the Am. Pres. Mission, and Editor of The Chinese Recorder; Rev. Dr. Farnham, thirty years a missionary in China; and Rev. H. C. Hodges, Chaplain of the Eng. Episcopal Cathedral, Shanghai.

THE BELGIAN ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY gave a luncheon in honour of Mr. Stanley, and presented him with the diploma of an honorary member. Mr. Stanley expressed satisfaction with what Belgium had done for civilisation and for the suppression of the slave trade in Africa. He deprecated private enterprise for the suppression of the slave trade, and declared that the hunt after ivory was the greatest evil next to the slave trade.

THE EVANGELISTS' HOME, Highgate Lodge, Moseley-road, Birmingham, is an attempt to restore the missionary character of Primitive Methodism. The second published report shows that much good work has been done in this direction. Sanctified young men are not only trained for service, but are put into active work. Rev. J. H. Odell, the superintendent, is thus the director of an important undertaking, which, we are glad to find, has not only put new life into many a Primitive Methodist society, but also done much to stir up Christians in general in various parts of the country. The Home staff consists of thirty-four workers; there are associates at home and abroad including an evangelist in South Central Africa.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Archdeacon Blakeney, vicar of Sheffield, in acknowledgment of thirty years' labour, has been presented with a magnificent dessert service, subscribed for by the working classes of the town. The subscribers numbered several thousands, and included men and women of all creeds.

Signatures have been obtained from upwards of sixty towns in East, North, and West Yorkshire, and the North of England, to a memorial requesting the Archbishop of York to bring in a Bill substituting deprivation for imprisonment in cases of clergymen disobeying the courts in ritual causes.

The Bishop of Liverpool on Friday week opened a newly erected mission-room, which has been erected in the parish of St. Cyprian's, Edge Hill, Liverpool (Rev. R. C. Hodgins, vicar). In the course of an address Dr. Ryle said he took a very deep interest in every movement in the diocese for promoting the interests of true religion, and of all the movements that took place he believed there were none better than the building of mission-rooms in the large parishes.

A Sunday-school Conference was held in St. Peter's Schools, Levenshulme, Manchester, a few days ago, Prior to the meeting a service was held in the church, the sermon being preached by Archdeacon Howell, vicar of Wrexham. He dwelt upon the importance of Sunday-school work, and said he would entreat every Sunday-school teacher to aim at nothing less than clear evidence of the work of grace in the hearts and the lives of the children under their care.

The Archbishop of York on Monday week laid the memorial stone of a new church at Carbrook, Sheffield. The church will accommodate about 1000 people. In the evening at a public meeting the Archbishop spoke of the duty of parents towards their children, whose hearts would respond to the higher teachings of Christianity. He impressed upon all the importance of family prayer. The only social problem, he said, in which he took any interest was the welfare of the working-classes, whom he did not feel disposed to patronise or to advise, but for whom he prayed that they might have true light and knowledge, and that in them the spirit of justice and the spirit of love might prevail.

SALVATION ARMY.

It is proposed to publish "a saved ex-publicans' War Cry."

The Westminster Shelter receives about one hundred and fifty men every night.

A new site for barracks and shops at Sheffield has been purchased for £7500.

The Church council of Copenhagen are of opinion "that the coming of Salvationists in uniform to church cannot be tolerated!"

The attendance at the recent "Two days with God" at Manchester was very encouraging; the large Free Trade Hall was repeatedly filled.

The summer campaign throughout the villages of the home counties commences immediately. Blessing has resulted from this method in the past.

Five hundred distressing cases of semi-starvation at Sittingbourne, amongst the locked-out brickmakers, are being dealt with by the Army every day. Good wholesome food is being supplied, and the local funds are exhausted.

Commissioner Railton, on his way to Stuttgart, visited Stettin and Berlin. No beginning has yet been made in the capital of Germany; but in Stettin, without a hall or permission to sing much above a whisper, the corps has grown over two score strong, produced eleven men and women for the war, and gained a footing in a suburban town. On his way from Finland, Mr. Railton visited St. Petersburg, and conferred with several Christian brethren.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. G. S. Reaney closed his ministry at Cavendish Chapel, Manchester, on Sunday last.

Rev. T. Fison, for thirty-three years pastor of the Hendon Congregational Church, is relinquishing his pastorate immediately, owing to feeble health.

Rev. Dr. Nigel McNeill, of Caledonian-road Church, has accepted the pastorate of Bedford Church, Charrington-street, N.W., and intends to commence his ministry there on June 1.

The memorial-stone of new mission buildings which the members of Highbury Church, Bristol, are erecting in the poorest quarter of the city (St. Philip's), was laid a few days ago by Mr. J. S. Fry. The premises are to contain an assembly hall, a smaller hall for Bible-classes, &c., infant school, several class-rooms, &c.

A pleasant Sunday afternoon adult Bible-class, in connection with Bethnal Green-road Church (Rev. J. Stockwell Watts, pastor), has now 250 members. At a recent meeting, Mr. E. H. Pickersgill, M.P., delivered an address, urging the necessity for the application of Christian principles and the reaching after Christian ideals in all true reform, whether of the individual person, or the body politic.

About four months ago Rev. J. W. Gamble and a few friends opened a mission-hall in Norbiton in the midst of a district largely populated by working-men. The premises soon proving too small, Mr. Gamble purchased the freehold of a vacant mission station in Elm-road, and after some alterations the building, which seats 320 persons, has lately been opened. During the four months a church with eighty members has been constituted, and several agencies have been initiated.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Dublin Yearly Meeting met on Wednesday, and the Meeting of Ministers and Elders on Tuesday evening. Several American and English ministers were expected to attend.

Three able papers by President Trueblood on "Birthright Membership" have just appeared in The Christian Worker, and cannot but have an influence in the discussion of what is confessedly a difficult subject.

Samuel Morris and Thomas P. Cope, of Philadelphia, have recently been travelling in Munster. Foreign mission meetings have been held all over the province through the winter, and much interest has been evoked.

Many of the meetings within the compass of Iowa Yearly Meeting have now settled pastors, largely through the efforts of John Henry Douglas, and, recently, Ruth B. Ridges, a learned and eloquent converted Jewess, has thus become associated with the Passadena Meeting in California.

Frederick Sessions, after a four months' tour in India, is now on his way home. His letters, both to England and America, show wide and accurate observation, and a large grip of the great social and political questions that must soon be grappled with there, and his counsel at home must help in their solution. He comes home vid Egypt and the Continent.

Another able and earnest Friend, Henry Stanley Newman, who has travelled over much of America, and been greatly valued in his visitation of the churches there, is now on his way home. London Yearly Meetings, beginning on the 19th inst., will thus be enriched by their presence and increased experience.

METHODIST.

A "Methodist Council" for London has been formed, to advise as to evangelistic and church extension work in the Metropolis.

Rev. T. E. Westerdale, of Hampstead, is meeting with much success in his efforts to free the St. John's Wood Circuit of the incubus of debt.

It is expected that Rev. Dr. Moultón, principal of the Leys School, Cambridge, will be the President of the next Wesleyan Conference, which meets at Bristol in July.

In The Methodist Recorder, Rev. Edward Smith, of the Clerkenwell Mission, strongly complains of the "Competition for Saints," whereby one denomination or mission steals away those attached to other churches or centres of work.

Rev. W. N. Barleycorn, of Fernando Po, West Africa, has translated a selection of hymns into the Bubi language, for the use of the natives. The Primitive Methodist Missionary Committee have agreed to have the selection printed.

It is stated in Wesleyan circles that the Anglican Bishop of Waiapu, New Zealand, not only lent a building in his diocese for a Wesleyan popular preacher who was about to leave the colony, but also officiated with his chaplain at the service which preceded the sermon.

A new feature in connection with the West London Mission has been inaugurated. A friend who gave Mr. Nix £500 a short time ago has now presented him with a house in the country, suitable for a Convalescent Home for the poor of Soho. It has been given under the strict understanding that it is not to be managed by a committee, but by Mr. Nix himself. Mr. Nix has secured the services of a trained hospital nurse, and has already opened the Home, which is situated in the village of Bisley, in the midst of some of the most beautiful scenery of the Cotswold Hills.

BAPTIST.

Ferme-park Chapel, Hornsey, has now got a pastor, Rev. Charles Brown, late of Nailsworth, who commenced his ministry last Lord's Day. The membership of the church has increased to nearly 100 since the formation of the church in March, 1889.

In connection with South-street Church, Greenwich, there is a Sunday-school Christian Band with seventy-five members. A very successful meeting was held recently on the occasion of the first anniversary of the "Band." Addresses were delivered by Mr. T. Fisher, Mr. H. J. Smith, Mr. H. W. Pewtress, and Mr. Allsop.

At Duckpool-road Chapel, Newport, Mon., on Sunday, April 13, the pastor, Rev. A. T. Jones, preached a solemn sermon from Numb. xxxii. 23, and at the close several persons went into the vestry anxious about their souls. One case was that of a woman who had been a member of a church for two years, while still unconverted.

At the recent anniversary meeting of Kenyon Chapel, Brixton, an interesting statement was made respecting the work carried on under the auspices of the church, and Rev. J. Douglas was presented with a purse of gold from the members as a token of their gratitude for his service during the past five years. There are now more than 300 members and communicants in connection with the church.

The work started at Old Southgate, N., by Mr. C. Wickerson, six years ago, has been making good progress. At the recent anniversary meeting interesting reference was made to the success and blessing that have attended the labours of Mr. Wickerson. When he commenced the services were attended by a mere handful of people; now there is a regular attendance of some 150. There are frequent conversions, and new members are constantly added to the church. The iron hall, in which the services have been held, has become too small to accommodate the congregations, and an effort is being made to raise funds for the erection of a larger and permanent brick building.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The annual meetings of the English Presbyterian Synod, which are being held this year in St. George's Church, Liverpool, were commenced on Monday evening.

The English Presbyterian Church has now in China twenty ordained European missionaries, ten medical and sixteen lady missionaries, the number of communicants in connection with the church being 3572.

Intelligence has just been received of the sudden death of Mr. Robert Niven, in Belize, British Honduras, from yellow fever. Mr. Niven was a son of Rev. Robert Niven, Maryhill, Glasgow, formerly missionary to Caffraria, and a lifelong worker in the temperance cause. He was elder in the church at Highbury, and entered with great spirit into the mission work carried on at Hoxton in connection with Highbury congregation.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

The Hibernian branch of the Church Missionary Society has this year subscribed £2100 more than last year.

The annual meeting of the Belfast Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, which was held last week, was a very successful one.

The various Synods of the Presbyterian Church held their annual meetings last week, and encouraging reports of the state of religion within their bounds were presented to each.

The anniversaries of the Methodist Missionary Society, which have been held in about 200 centres throughout Ireland, have been more than usually successful; the collections have generally shown a considerable increase.

NOTES FROM WALES.

On Thursday last Rev. Newman Hall delivered an address on "Jerusalem" to a large audience at the Presbyterian Church, Swansea.

At the rooms of the Y.M.C.A., Swansea, on Wednesday last, a farewell meeting was held in connection with the departure of Mr. Alfred E. Green as a missionary to China.

On Saturday last a week's mission was commenced at All Saints' Church, Llanelly. The missioners are Revs. H. Guildford Sprigg, Canterbury, and Edward Morgan, vicar of Llanishen.

It was decided last week, at the Shrewsbury Conference of Welsh Nonconformists, that an Evangelical and Social Alliance be formed, and that a Nonconformist Congress be shortly held. Great unanimity prevailed at these large meetings.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

The death is reported of Rev. W. L. Macfarlane, of Lenzie, one of the authors of the volume entitled, "Scotch Sermons," which created so much controversy some years ago, on the ground that they contained heretical opinions.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes is to visit Edinburgh shortly. He will preach in Dr. Alexander Whyte's church in the afternoon on May 20, and in the evening will address a meeting in the Synod Hall. Mr. Hughes will visit Glasgow the following day.

The College Committee of the Free Church of Scotland, having considered the materials before them in connection with the Dods and Bruce cases, do not propose to take action before either of the presbyteries, and have resolved to make a special report on each case to the General Assembly.

Rev. R. Ballantine, of Peebles Free Church, has during the winter dispensed with the evening "sermon," and instead converted his whole congregation into a "Bible-class," a feature of which was young men reading out in church various selected chapters in the Bible. Some of the older members objected to dispensing with the sermon. A plebiscite was taken, and the church was practically unanimous in favour of the new plan.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At New York, Rev. J. S. Hamilton, late Presbyterian pastor at Banbridge and Dublin, aged forty-one years.—Alderman Thomas Minshall, twice Mayor of Oswestry, and a prominent member of the Congregational Church in that town.—Rev. W. J. Thornton, Congregational minister, Nairn, N.B.—Rev. Walter Smith, pastor of the Free Church, Half-Morton and Gretna, Dumfriesshire.—Rev. J. Haigh, Primitive Methodist minister, Sileby, Leicestershire.—Rev. John Cole, pastor of the Baptist Church at Cotton End, Bedford.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope many of our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes, which of course are entirely different from these.

SUNDAY, MAY 4.—Job XXXVII.

THIS chapter continues the theme already commenced (xxxvi. 26-33). From a consideration of the glory of God as appearing in his works, Elihu argues the necessity of submission to his will.

Concerning these natural phenomena, note (1) how Elihu connects them all with God. Whether it be the thunderstorm (1-5); the snow and rain (6-8); the frost (9, 10)—all are the work of God. He did not simply create all, then retire to a distance from his own handiwork; but He is immanent in all, so that Elihu's heart throbs (1), and speech seems inadequate (19).

See also (2) how incomprehensible these are to man. The works of God are wondrous (14), and man cannot understand them (5). The thought should reconcile us to what is difficult and mysterious in God's dealings with us. If objects so familiar present difficulties we cannot explain or comprehend, it is little wonder that we cannot make out all God does with his people.

Note further (3) that all things have a purpose. The lightning (xxxvi. 32) has a distinct mark. When man's labour must cease because of the elements (6, 7), it is in order that men may learn their dependence upon God. All things carry out God's purpose of correction or mercy (12, 13). And this is true of all the events of his Providence. He "wings an angel, and guides a sparrow." Everything fulfils his purpose. If you cannot see one, it is only because your eyes are dim (1 Cor. xiii. 12).

The lesson to Job is—trust a God whom you cannot understand (Isa. l. 10). Would a God that we could fully understand be worthy of our confidence?

MONDAY, MAY 5.—Job XXXVIII.

There was probably no opportunity for Job to reply to Elihu, if he had desired; for the whirlwind (1), out of which Jehovah spake, was that which Elihu had described. With this chapter Job gets what he has so earnestly and frequently asked for. God speaks, and effectively settles Job's doubts, and corrects his friends' mistakes (xlii. 7).

We are struck, first of all, with what God does not say. Hitherto the Book has been an argument; but there is an entire absence of argument from what God says. The fact is most significant and useful. Doubts concerning the mysteries of Providence are not to be settled by logic. We do not get rest by having the mysteries explained. The desire to know the ultimate purpose of everything is one which cannot be granted here. God may settle your difficulties by means entirely different from those you expect Him to use.

What God does say is equally remarkable. He causes a number of pictures to pass rapidly before the eye of his servant. These include the creation of the earth (4-7); the sea (8-11); light (12-15); the mysteries connected with death (16-18); the snow and rain (22-30), and the constellations of the heavens (31-35). At first sight these seem strange pictures with which to ease a troubled mind.

Still more strange is the form in which these pictures are presented. There is a tone of irony running through all that God says (4, 20, 21); while He seems also to be making the helplessness of Job as prominent as possible. Note the frequent questions, "Hast thou?" But there was a reason for all this. It turned Job's thought from himself to God. He became occupied with other mysteries than those connected with his own life. It showed him his inability to explain very ordinary and well-known facts, yet he had supposed himself capable of making a good cause against God! It revealed to him more fully what God was. And it is in this that we find rest, and learn to know ourselves. Learn the invaluable lesson. Not in the explanation of life's mysteries, but in a true acquaintance with God can we obtain "perfect peace."

TUESDAY, MAY 6.—Job XXXIX.

The last chapter closed with a reference to the lions and ravens (39-41), which are regarded as the objects of God's care. There was consolation in the thought. He who hears the raven's cry will not be unmindful of man.

In this chapter these graphic pictures are continued. The wild goat (1-5) is the object of Divine care. The wild ass (5-8) and the wild ox (10-12, R.V.) exult in their own freedom, and are not controlled by man. The ostrich (13-18), so destitute of wisdom (17), yet so swift before her pursuers (18). The horse (19-25), whose description is one of the most remarkable in all literature. And last the hawk (26), and the eagle (27-30).

These pictures are intended further to remind Job of his own ignorance and impotence. There were very many things he did not know (1-3), and great things he could not control. But he was now in contact with God, by whom all these things were made and cared for. Their power, which Job could not restrain, was a faint reflection of the power of God who made them. And it was this God whom he had desired to meet, before whom he had resolved to argue his case, and whom he had condemned by his persistent vindication of himself. There could be no better method of silencing Job's complaints than such a revelation of God.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 7.—Job XL.

For a brief space the panorama is interrupted that Job may have opportunity to reply (1, 2). How eagerly he had longed for this (xxiii. 3-7). But the form in which the challenge is given convinces him of sin (R.V.); and instead of filling "his mouth with arguments," Job can only humble himself in the dust before God (3, 4). It is good to hear Job making this confession. It is the first step back to full blessing. We must descend in order to be truly exalted (Phil. ii. 5-11).

But Job's lesson is as yet only partially learned. He must be still further humbled by a knowledge of himself, and, in order to this, he has a further revelation of God to him. The searching question (8) goes home to Job, and shows what his self-justification really meant. Don't repeat his sin. Without murmuring accept of God's dealings with you. Hold fast to the truth that God's ways are right, when, in your judgment, they seem most wrong. You know Him as He reveals Himself, and every complaint will be silenced.

As showing the folly and guilt of Job's self-vindication, God again places in contrast the weakness and insignificance of man with Divine might and majesty. Was Job equal to God (9-14)? Only his equal can fully understand Him. Consent to the fact that God is infinite in wisdom and power, then it will be clear that no man can make out the work He does (Eccles. iii. 11).

Behemoth (15-24) is the hippopotamus. The description is very striking. Note that this creature is described as having been made "with Job" (15), and that it is called "chief of the ways of God" (19). Both statements are calculated to reprove the pride that seeks to understand God, and even presumes to condemn Him.

THURSDAY, MAY 8.—Job XLI.

Leviathan, so graphically described in this chapter, is the crocodile. It is a creature of such ferocity that it cannot be tamed (1-6). Its closely fitting scales render its body impenetrable by arrow or spear (7, 15-17, 26-29). Its jaws are terrible with rows of teeth (13-14), not concealed by lips.

With the description of this terrible creature, God's message to Job concludes. He has offered no explanation of the difficulty which had distressed Job, and which Job's friends had so confidently, yet so unjustly explained. Yet He has said just what Job needed. He has spoken not to the intellect, but to the heart. His own greatness, and wisdom, and power so impress Job that he could not repeat what he had said before, nor retain the thoughts he had cherished. No one who has a right conception of God can ever cherish a hard thought of Him.

The fact that God does not explain Job's difficulty reminds us that He wants our confidence. If we saw the reason for everything clearly, there would be no room for faith. Even if we were capable of knowing all mysteries, it is doubtful whether at present it would be to our advantage. It is not in knowing, but in trusting, that we find rest.

FRIDAY, MAY 9.—Job XLII.

At last Job finds his true position (1-6). His answer to the Lord is very different from that which he had expected it would be. He retracts all his words of self-vindication, all his charges of cruelty made against God, all his implied condemnation of God. Instead of this, he takes the lowest possible position before Him, justifies God, and pronounces condemnation upon himself. He has been led to this by "seeing God" (5, 6). Not personally (John i. 18), but as revealed in his works. Such contact with God always produces the same result (Isa. vi.).

Yet Job did not by this confession cast away his integrity. He did not now—and could not—plead guilty to the charges his cruel friends had made against him. His uprightness, his perfection, had come into contact with God. And before Him, not only our conscious sin, but our holy things are impure (Exod. xxviii. 36-38), our obedience needs the sprinkling of the atoning blood (1 Pet. i. 2). If men knew God more they would be less ready to proclaim their own sinlessness.

The three friends heard Job's confession, yet they heard also God's judgment of their utterances. It was right for Job to condemn himself, but it was not right for them to pronounce him guilty (7-9). They were made to retract their words by being accepted through Job's offering and prayer. A false judgment, even when uttered, as theirs was, in perfect sincerity, is very offensive to God. "Judge not" (Matt. vii. 1, 2).

It is important to remember that Job's return to his former prosperity began with his prayer for his friends (10). This is God's witness to the value of intercessory prayer; and especially of prayer for those who have treated us unkindly. The many cruel things they had said Job must fully forgive before he can pray for them. If there are any towards whom your feeling is such that you cannot pray for them, you are guilty before God, and cannot know the fulness of the blessing of the Gospel (Matt. v. 23).

The blessing of Job afterwards exceeded that which he formerly possessed (10-17). He has humbled himself, and so is exalted. The valley of humiliation is still the valley of blessing. You cannot lose anything by lowly submission to the appointments of God (1 Pet. v. 5, 6). The patient endurance of trial is followed by unspeakable blessing (1 Pet. i. 6, 7).

So the Book closes. Satan's slander is disproved; Job's friends are corrected; Job's righteousness is vindicated as against their false charges; yet his sin is humbly acknowledged; double blessing is restored to him; his example is made a blessing to all ages; and God is glorified.

[For Introduction to the Book of Psalms, see page 9.]

SATURDAY, MAY 10.—Psalm I.

This Psalm, like a sign-post, points the way to blessedness. The opening word may be read, "Oh! the blessedness!" In this exclamation is embodied the experience of a life, ratified and sealed by the Holy Spirit. The Psalter begins with the same message as the Sermon on the Mount. Religious life is the blessed life, and blessedness is more than happiness. Beneath the lintel of this benediction we pass into the temple of praise.

BLESSEDNESS IS TO BE OBTAINED IN TWO WAYS.—(1) Negatively.—Avoid the company of the irreligious. You must mix with them in daily business, but do not choose their society. When let go from necessary engagements, make for the people of God (Acts iv. 23).

(2) Positively.—We cannot live on negations, and if we withdraw ourselves from the society of evil men, we must enter the circle of prophets and kings, psalmists and historians, who are ever waiting to greet us with their holiest, noblest thoughts, within the circle of sacred Scripture. It is not enough to read the Bible as a duty, we must come to it with delight. And this is possible on these conditions—give yourself up to it; eschew light and foolish literature, which cloys the appetite; ever open the Book in happy fellowship with its Author. Nor is it enough to read it cursorily and forget it; we must meditate, until, by the process of spiritual digestion, it is assimilated (Jas. i. 25). Better one verse really masticated than a whole chapter bolted.

THE REWARDS OF THE BLESSED MAN (3).—He shall be under Divine culture, planted (Ps. xcii. 13); within reach of perennial supplies, planted by rivers (John vii. 38); prepared against any demand or emergency, fruit in season; unfading beauty and freshness, a spiritual evergreen; and prosperity even in this world, because his life is ordered by discretion and obedience to Divine principles. Joseph realised this picture (Gen. xxxix. 3, 4).

THE CONTRAST TO THE BLESSED MAN (4).—It might be rendered, Not so the ungodly, not so. As to their career, all that has been said of the righteous is to be reversed. They go from bad to worse in their choice of company, beginning with the ungodly and ending with the scornful; and from walking, they pass to standing and sitting, which gives the idea of permanence and of settled enjoyment. As to their nature, they are as chaff, which is like wheat, and yet utterly worthless. As to their doom, they shall be forgotten on earth, leaving no trace, taking no root; and in the other world they shall be for ever excluded from the festal hosts of the redeemed (Matt. xiii. 30; Rev. xxi. 27).

THE COMFORTS OF THE BLESSED MAN.—God knows his way, though dark and difficult. Nothing is hidden from Him who bottles our tears, and He will not let us be overpressed. And, though the ungodly may appear to prosper at his expense, it shall be only for a moment, ultimately it shall perish (Ps. xxxvii.). Wherefore, rest in the Lord. Your blessedness is better than the ill-gotten gains of the ungodly, and will last longer!

Sunday Afternoon, May 11.

FEEDING THE MULTITUDE.

LUKE ix. 10-17.—GOLDEN TEXT: JOHN vi. 35.

THE Bethsaida near to which this miracle was performed was called Bethsaida-Julius, and was situated on the north-eastern shore of the Lake of Galilee. The Bethsaida to which, after the miracle, the disciples were sent (Mark vi. 45), was on the western shore, probably a little south of Capernaum. Comp. John vi. 16, 17.

To this desert place Jesus went "privately" (10). Both He and his disciples needed rest (Mark vi. 31, 32). How really human He was; and how tenderly considerate for his disciples. But He could not be hid (11). Enthusiasm for Him was about at its height, evidence of which is found in the people's desire to make Him King (John vi.). Yet this enthusiasm for Him did not constitute the people his disciples. They would gladly crown as King one who could perform such a miracle as this to meet the needs of the body; but were unwilling to acknowledge a soul-hunger which only He could satisfy (John vi. 26, 27).

This eagerness of the crowd interrupted the rest which Jesus sought with his disciples, yet He received them warmly, and in compassion He taught them, and healed their sick (11). Their desire afterwards to make Him King proved how little they understood his preaching of the kingdom of God.

The Golden Text suggests in what way the incident can be profitably used. It is a picture of what Jesus is still doing among men.

(1) The people's need (2).—Every detail helps to set forth the deep spiritual need of men. They wanted bread. Men can do without luxuries, but bread is essential to their life. So do all need Christ, and only He can satisfy their hunger (John vi. 35). He is as necessary for the soul as bread is for the body. "Desert place" which produced nothing for the satisfaction of their hunger. The world is just as unable to provide anything for the satisfaction of the soul. Its pleasures and its sins only increase the hunger. How many have found it so! The best the world can give cannot ease a troubled conscience, or bind up a broken heart. Mark adds, "time is far passed" (vi. 35). An added feature that has special application to some. The day in which provision can be secured is almost passed. This is certain of the aged; it is possible even of the young.

The disciples were powerless.—They could pity, but they had no supply large enough to meet the need; nor had they money enough to purchase a supply. Two hundred pence (Mark vi. 37) was considerably more than that little company possessed. In those days—and in these—money did not measure the power of the Church of Christ. In their helplessness the disciples could only say "Send them away." Thus helpless are the best of men to meet the soul's need. Neither parents nor teachers can provide bread for the soul.

(2) The miraculous supply.—Jesus felt a certain measure of responsibility for the people's position. It was their desire to follow Him that led them into such need. He undertakes fully for all those who follow Him in the true sense (Matt. vi. 33). The miracle recalls one in 2 Kings iv. 42-44. If the disciples had remembered this they might have looked for something similar then.

The preparations for the feast.—These include: (1) A strange command (13).—The disciples, who said, "Send them away," were now told to "Give them to eat."

It was a command they were clearly powerless to obey. So are many of Jesus' commands to us. The power for obedience comes from Him as we yield ourselves to obey. The disciples met the command in the wrong way. They numbered their few loaves and fishes, and estimated how far these would go among such a multitude. Their mistake was in not asking how much Jesus could do with them. He can make very little accomplish very great result. An ox-goad, broken pitchers, a sling and stone—these are weapons with which He can do wonders. (2) The arrangement of the guests (14).—Mark says they were in ranks by hundreds and fifties (vi. 40)—probably fifty rows of a hundred men in each. The women and children were by themselves according to Oriental usage. This arrangement gave order to the feast. It was not a scramble, in which the weak were set aside by the strong. This plan tested the faith both of the disciples and of the people. Of what use thus to arrange the guests, if there is no anticipation of a feast? The disciples had to obey in faith, not knowing what Jesus would do. And the multitude had to wait in faith. If they saw only the loaves and fishes they would not expect to have their hunger satisfied.

The feast itself (16-17).—It was provided from the disciples' store. Why not set aside their little, and create enough for the people's need? It was as easy to do the one as the other. But He makes use of what they have, as He made use of the rod of Moses (Exod. iv. 1-5), and of the boat of Simon (v. 1-3). "He blessed."—All the Evangelists take note of this. It was an expression of thanksgiving (John), and a prayer for blessing. It is an excellent method thus to sanctify every repast. The humblest meal becomes a feast when thus blessed. "He gave."—The word is imperfect, and means, "He gave and kept on giving."—Godet. The amount did not diminish in his hands. So long as there were any to be fed there was bread for them. With what a feeling of wonder and thanksgiving must the people have received their portion. Of Himself—the Bread of Life—it is also true that, though He has satisfied the hunger of many, He has lost none of his sufficiency. He used the disciples.—There was much they could not do; but they are not, therefore, set aside as useless. It is his to perform the miracle, but theirs to distribute the bread. So does He make use of his people still. His disciples are the members of his body, through whom He imparts blessing to men. The result was beyond what they had dared to expect (17). Not only are the multitude satisfied, but the store of the disciples is greatly increased. One basket would have held all they had at the first; it takes twelve to hold the fragments after the people have been fed. The best way to use everything we have is to put it into the hands of Jesus. We lose by keeping; we find by giving up for Jesus' sake.

DONATIONS
RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT TO MONDAY, APRIL 28, 1890.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

Give immediate effect to the alteration of the Tea Duty by reducing all their prices

2d. PER LB.

The CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER said—

"Now if Tea were sold, as it should be sold, to the consumer "at something like the cost price, it would at once appear what "an enormous relief 2d. in the pound would be. But the relief "is concealed by the fact that the middleman walks away with "a large proportion of the price paid by the working classes "for their Tea. Will it be believed that in many villages the "working classes pay as much as 2s., 2s. 6d., and 3s. for the "Tea which practically, with all costs included, does not cost "more than 11d. or 1s., and which many people in good "circumstances buy at 1s. 6d."

Avoid the middle profits by buying direct from the Importers.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

(THIRTY-THIRD SERIES.)

CONSUMPTION—CASE of MR. J. PEEL, of GOMERSAL.

This patient resides at Victoria-road, Gomersal, near Leeds. He applied to me two winters ago, through seeing a notice of my treatment in The Christian Age.

Five years previous to this he had an attack of inflammation of the lungs. This was repeated in the following year. These attacks left the patient in a permanently weak condition. This weakness increased, and symptoms became very serious at the time he wrote to me. The cough was troublesome, the expectoration yellow and green, severe pains in the chest, loss of flesh in every part of the body, increasing weakness, sore throat, and expectoration tinged with blood. The doctor now reported that Consumption had decidedly set in.

I sent him medicine and advice, and prescriptions for liniment, a tonic, and gargle, &c.; and was pleased to hear of some little improvement in the course of a month. "Cough quieter, appetite better, sleeping better, and not so weak."

The next letter reported that he had walked out for the first time, and that he was much stronger—a little troubled with indigestion (for which I advised).

Three months after commencing my treatment, he writes: "I continue to improve in the most satisfactory manner. I cannot speak too highly of your treatment."

In another month he writes: "I have gained two stones in weight since commencing your treatment."

Six months after the time that he first wrote to me he resumed work. "I am happy to say I feel no worse for it. I fully maintain my strength."

January 20, 1889, he says: "I feel perfectly strong. I will continue your medicine, as you advise, until after Spring."

I heard from this patient on January 2, this year. He writes: "With greatest pleasure I desire to add my testimony to the value of your medicine. Since I commenced work again, I have continued without interruption, as friends and neighbours can verify. With many thanks for your great courtesy and kindness to me, yours truly, JOSEPH PEEL. You can make my case known if you think proper."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

FORCES ABROAD.

India and Ceylon, 74 Corps, 371 Officers; South Africa, 56 Corps, 160 Officers; St. Helena, 1 Corps, 2 Officers; South America, 2 Corps, 4 Officers; United States, 360 Corps, 989 Officers; Canada, 315 Corps, 924 Officers; Australia, 255 Corps, 787 Officers; New Zealand, 63 Corps, 180 Officers; Holland and Belgium, 34 Corps, 122 Officers; Sweden and Norway, 127 Corps, 372 Officers; Germany, 8 Corps, 37 Officers; France and Switzerland, 99 Corps, 288 Officers; Denmark, 25 Corps, 77 Officers. Total:—1,419 Corps, 4,313 Officers.

OUR HEATHEN CRUSADE.

God is using the Salvation Army to carry salvation to the 1,000 million Heathen of the world, including Hindoos, Mahommedans, and Buddhists of Asia, to the Fetish Worshippers and Cannibals of Africa, to the Red Indians of America and the Maoris of New Zealand. The foundations have been laid for a work that promises ere long to eclipse our most brilliant victories in Christian lands.

Already India and Africa alone have 125 Corps and 41 Outposts, worked by 445 Officers, with 70 Cadets in training, and during the most recent soul-saving effort in India no less than 2,169 professed salvation, of whom 90½ per cent. were natives, and the remaining 9½ per cent. consisted in equal proportions of Europeans and Indian-born Eurasians. From among the 90½ per cent. natives, only 13 per cent. were nominal Protestant Christians, and 3½ per cent. Roman Catholics, the other 74 per cent. consisting of Hindus, Buddhists, and Mahommedans.

Pressing calls pour in upon us from other countries. South America has just been entered. Pernambuco, Brazil, and Demerara have sent for us. Land has been bought, and a barracks built for us in Burmah. China and Japan are impatiently waiting our arrival. Everywhere we see before us "an open door" to the heathen, and "no man can shut it."

Weighted as we are with a sense of responsibility to succour the needy, alleviate the distressed, and multiply efforts for the deliverance of the masses of every nation from misery here and hereafter by the Gospel of the Grace of God, we turn once more to our friends who have nobly helped us in the past, also to those who have not yet shared with us in the responsibilities of this great work, but who love our Lord, and look for His appearing.

Dear Reader, will you help us to Train Officers for Foreign Service; meet their Travelling Expenses, Passage Money, and Outfit; provide for the Invalided and Breakdowns in the War; send Grants to Poor Countries and Comrades; organise Rescue and Shelter Homes; help forward the Prison Gate Operations in Bombay and Colombo; and further the Heathen Crusade by Preaching the Wonderful Salvation of Jesus Christ Everywhere.

£5,000 IS WANTED IMMEDIATELY.

NOW IS THE TIME TO HELP.

Cheques made payable to WILLIAM BOOTH, and crossed "City Bank"; or Postal or Post Office Orders will be gratefully received by the Secretary, 101, Queen Victoria Street, London, E.C.

CHRISTIAN LITERATURE in the MISSION FIELD.

AMONG the most potent influences exerted at the present time in the various Mission Fields of the World must be counted that of the CHRISTIAN PRESS.

In addition to their ordinary work, many Missionaries have earnestly devoted their energies towards the production of a Literature, the power of which is already telling in a wonderful manner.

THE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY

has borne a large share of the work. That which has been done is, however, very little compared with what must be done. As converts increase, and Missions extend, books, Christian in tone, and tracts full of GOSPEL TRUTH must be provided.

Special Attention is called to the Following Facts:—

THE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY proclaims the Gospel of the Grace of God in 199 languages. It was founded 90 years ago with the object of spreading the news of God's love at Home and in Foreign lands.

It is supported by, and aids Christians of all Evangelical Denominations. Circulated over 77 millions of publications last year, of which more than 25 millions and a half were tracts, granted free or at greatly reduced price.

Does not expend one shilling of its subscriptions or donations on management or other expenses.

Uses all its Missionary Funds for the object for which they are subscribed, but pays all its expenses out of Trade Funds.

Required each working day of last year for its Missionary work, nearly £142 2s. 6d., or £852 15s. per week.

Has aided in printing the Pilgrim's Progress in 85 languages.

Has published its New Testament Commentary in eleven languages—Chinese, Arabic, Syriac, Mahrati, Bengali, Tamil, Canarese, Hindí, Urdu, Singhalese, and Karen.

Distributes packets of healthy interesting literature to almost all the Emigrant families leaving the ports of the United Kingdom.

Provides for a very large distribution of Books and Tracts for Sailors of all nationalities.

Grants Tracts for Distribution at greatly reduced prices, and in many cases free.

Has issued 45,605 libraries, varying from 25 to 500 volumes, since 1832, either at very reduced rates, or for very poor districts free.

Helps all the Missionary Societies in their work of providing Gospel literature in their fields of work, but is able to do only a tithe of what is needed through want of funds.

Maintains in all its publications a testimony to Evangelical Truth.

A subscription of 10s. 6d. or upwards constitutes membership in the Society; a sum of £10 10s. constitutes Life-membership. All subscribers receive copies of the new tracts and other small publications; in this way alone 11,000 distributors are helped.

Subscriptions may be sent to the Secretaries, Rev. LEWIS BORRETT WHITE, D.D., and Rev. S. G. GREEN, D.D., 56, Paternoster-row, London, E.C.

THE NINETY-FIRST ANNUAL MEETING will be held at EXETER HALL, on FRIDAY, MAY 9, at seven o'clock. Please send post-card for Reserved Seat Tickets.

Visitors to London during the May Meetings are requested to call at THE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY'S DEPÔTS, 65, ST. PAUL'S CHURCHYARD (opposite the Northern Entrance to the Cathedral), and 164, PICCADILLY, W.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we shall give portrait and sketch of the late Mr. A. M. Mackay, of Uganda, Central Africa.

The British Government are surely ill-advised in again raising the question of compensation to publicans for the withdrawal of their licences, if the public interest should require the curtailment of the liquor traffic. The proposal, when mooted two years ago, was hailed with such a storm of popular remonstrance that it had to be dropped. We cannot see that it is less iniquitous now; and, if it is persisted in, we can but hope that the tide of indignant protest will again rise to such a height as to submerge it out of existence.

The House of Lords' Committee on "Sweating" have at length made public their Report and the conclusions at which they have arrived. These may briefly be stated in its final paragraph:—

> We cannot conclude without expressing our earnest hope that the exposure of the evils which have been brought to our notice will induce capitalists to pay closer attention to the conditions under which the labour which supplies them with goods is conducted. When legislation has reached the limit up to which it is effective, the real amelioration of conditions must be due to increased sense of responsibility in the employer, and improved habits in the employed. We have reason to think that the present inquiry itself has not been without moral effect. And we believe that public attention and public judgment can effectually check operations in which little regard is shown to the welfare of workpeople, and to the quality of production; and can also strongly second the zealous and judicious efforts now being made to encourage thrift, promote temperance, improve dwellings, and raise the tone of living.

Legislation, as we have frequently remarked, may do something to abate certain phases of the evil, but its power, after all, is but partial. In commenting on the Report, The Daily News says that "we must moralise trade, or perish." This points to the true and effective solution of all social problems—that capitalists and toilers alike shall endeavour to do unto others as they would that others should do to them.

Though there may be nothing positively new to be said upon the betting and gambling mania, we heartily endorse the protest made by Canon Watson at the recent meeting of the Central Council of Diocesan Conferences, against some of the latest developments of this evil. Moreover, the spirit of heartless speculation has invaded commerce, for much of the business done in the produce markets is little better than mere gambling upon the future prices of tea, sugar, and the necessaries of life. The remedy for this widespread disease must be sought in the individual, and reform must work by way of leaven. At the same time the titled and wealthy classes ought to throw their powerful influence and example into the right scale. Much might be accomplished if the daily press would cease to publish betting intelligence.

The colliery owners and the miners of Cumberland have formed a Board of Conciliation and Arbitration for the consideration and settlement of questions affecting wages and other trade matters. This example might be followed in other localities. The golden rule of Christ is meant to apply as forcibly to the regulation of the conduct of workman as to that of employers. Recent strikes in Ireland have shown that little regard is paid to the interests of the community at large. This action is a grave mistake. There is as much objection to tyranny on the one side as upon the other.

Mr. Huxley has joined hands with Mr. Froude in denouncing the persecuting spirit of the Church of Rome. In an article on "Government" in the current Nineteenth Century, the eminent scientist declares that "the Holy Office" of the Romish Church has degraded itself to depths never reached even by pagan governors; he continues:—

> The doctrine that the authority of the State extends to men's beliefs as well as to their actions, and that the power of the State ought to be used for the promotion of orthodoxy and the extermination of heterodoxy is, in fact, a necessary corollary of Romanism; which, however disguised by prudence when the Papacy is weak, is sure to re-appear when it is strong enough to dispense with hypocrisy.

These are cutting words, but no impartial historian can deny their truth, and they have all the greater weight as coming from a man who is certainly not prejudiced in favour of Protestantism.

We have before called attention to the revolt of trustworthy scientific leaders against speculations that would banish the Creator from the Universe. An illustration of this strong reaction was given at the Victoria Institute on Monday evening last week. A paper was read by Professor Hull, H.M. Director of the Geological Survey of Ireland, on "Theistic Arguments drawn from Natural Phenomena." It was a strong and thoroughly Christian defence of the old view of scientific students as to the agency of God in the origin of life, the appearance of man, and in all the processes of nature. Good and wise men expected this reaction, and its setting in is one of the best signs of the times.

Rev. George Fry, Rector of All Saints', Manchester, writes to The Dublin Daily Express to controvert some statements respecting the persecution of Lutherans in the Baltic provinces. He gives a more hopeful view of religious toleration in Russia, and states that there are in Russia 8,000,000 Dissenters from the Established Church who are in the full enjoyment of toleration. He adds:—

> In St. Petersburg and Moscow there are laymen, devout members of the Orthodox Church, who, having resided in London for some little time, have imbibed a truly missionary spirit from the earnest work which they had witnessed in East London parishes, and returned to their homes determined, for Christ's sake, to win the thoughtless and heedless to his fold. The wonderful work accomplished by an overlooker of a mill in the lowest quarter of St. Petersburg I shall never forget. Hundreds of workmen have abandoned their careless lives, and are doing their utmost to raise funds to build a church, the mission-room being too small for their numbers.

Mademoiselle d'Aubigné, daughter of the historian of the Reformation, gives in The Free Church Monthly a very interesting account, after a personal visit, of the mining districts of Belgium. It would be difficult to find a more urgent field for evangelistic labour. Rome has lost its hold over the miners. Materialism has come in its place. Morals are very low. Young girls work long hours in the pits. On the other hand, there is unlimited religious liberty. The Belgian Missionary Church, with very limited resources, is working bravely in the region. Families are converted; the power of the Gospel is seen in whole villages; colporteurs are selling the Scriptures widely, and converts are themselves missionaries. Few scenes of Christian activity in Europe demand greater sympathy and prayer.

In the April number of The Missionary Review of the World, Rev. D. L. Leonard has a striking paper, under the heading "Babylon is Falling," in which it is shown that the laws against Mormonism were never so actively enforced, or so successful, as they are at the present time. This is something to be thankful for, and we trust the energetic effort to suppress a vile evil may be continued while the evil exists.

The report of the fifth Indian Congress, held at Bombay in December last, bears interesting evidence of the activity of the people of our Eastern Empire. The discussion on the excise system showed a wholesome determination to deal with the great drink evil. One of the speakers, Rev. Thomas Evans, Baptist missionary, thus described the fearful progress of the traffic:

> Under the Mohammedan rule the excise revenue of India was not twenty lakhs of rupees, and then it was imposed as a fine, as a restriction to try and keep the people from drinking. When the King of Oudh was lord and master in his country, there was no grog-shop in Lucknow or within ten miles of the city; but now we have over one hundred grog-shops in Lucknow under British rule. When King Theebaw, of Burmah, was sitting upon his throne, there was not a grog-shop in Upper Burmah; but the English have taken possession of the country, and last year the excise revenue in Upper Burmah was over two lakhs. When the Honourable East India Company came to an end in 1858, the revenue from the excise of India was 50 lakhs of rupees; to-day it is 500 lakhs of rupees.

The speakers gave the Government credit for having done something of late to reduce the dimensions of the evil; and we are glad to say that the Congress agreed to a resolution expressing an earnest hope that no time will be lost in dealing with the excise question in the sense advocated by temperance reformers. Copies of the report (price 1s.) may be had from the Offices of the British Committee of the Indian National Congress, 25, Craven-street, Charing Cross.

In a recent letter to The Morning Post, Mr. W. Burdett Coutts defends the Imperial British East Africa Company from the charges with respect to the employment and encouragement of slave labour which were brought against it in the recent debate in the House of Commons. The writer says that the Company "desire and are determined eventually to effect its abolition." After recounting the freeing of sixteen hundred slaves two years ago by compensation to their owners at the rate of fifty shillings per head, he explains how the Company, refusing to conform to the baneful custom of the country by employing slave-labour in their works, have adopted the plan of enabling the slaves to work out their freedom. Such a peaceful and legitimate policy as this, which arouses no hostility from the native tribes, is preferable, we judge, to forcible repression.

As we go to press we have received an important letter, which will appear in our next issue, from Rev. Dr. Kerr Cross, of Livingstonia, in which he combats the position taken by Captain Hore in his articles on Nyassaland that have appeared in our last two issues. Dr. Cross has only recently returned from Nyassaland for a brief visit to this country.

Rev. Benjamin Waugh's paper on "Baby Farming," in the current Contemporary Review, reveals practices of cupidity and inhumanity in the slow murder of helpless little children, which are well-nigh incredible. The National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children have done well in instituting these difficult investigations into practices of which the country could otherwise have had no conception. The matter is one that demands the instant attention of legislators; while the very strongest expression of public opinion on the part of humane persons should sustain Parliamentary action.

The same Review has an article on Monte Carlo, entitled, "A Poisoned Paradise." It gives hope that in the lowering of what was called respectability and refinement, and deterioration to yet lower depths of depravity, the pest-house of evil may be working out its own destruction. "When revelry," says the writer, "exceeds the bounds of licence then comes the ruin. Already the 'writing is on the wall.'"

THE STRANGERS' REST, RATCLIFF HIGHWAY.—Dr. H. Sinclair Paterson delivered an inspiring address at the monthly meeting of workers, on Friday evening last. He based his remarks on Rom. xii. 1, 2, and those who heard were much profited by the practical character of the teaching presented. As usual, the hon. secretary, Mr. J. T. Isaac, called for more volunteers in the varied operations of which the Rest is a centre. A letter was read from Miss Steadman, now in China, formerly a labourer at the Rest. She rejoiced to report blessing upon her endeavours in China. After twelve months' study of the language, she is now able to speak a little to the people, and she said that her first address to them was founded upon John iii. 16.

MOHAMMEDANISM.—Mr. Kirkham writes:—I am painfully impressed with the dominance of Mohammedanism in Eastern lands. In Constantinople it is impossible to turn the eyes in any direction without seeing mosques and minarets. There are hundreds of them. Without music or choirs they retain their hold of the people. As the "Christianity" is of a corrupt and formal kind, the people are not likely to be favourably impressed by it. As I gazed upon the city when the domes and minarets stood out against the afterglow of a magnificent sunset, and the moon began to exert her power, I felt ready to weep as Jesus did over Jerusalem on the first memorable Palm Sunday, and prayed earnestly that the Crescent might wane, and the glorious Cross of Christ take its place all over the Mohammedan world.

Holiness taught in God's Word

FROM "THE UPPER" INSTEAD OF FROM "THE UNDER" SIDE.

BY REV. ALEXANDER M. CRAWFURD,
Minister of Brownfield Chapel, Glasgow.

WE are all familiar with the teaching of "Self-Surrender" and "Self-Emptying," &c. The objection has been brought against this teaching that the conscience, always more or less legal, is continually urging forward the believer (as well as the unbeliever) to self-effort, i.e., to do something, as the condition on which blessing, in one form or another, is to be obtained—in a word, if thou do this, thou shalt have life, or have it more abundantly.

Now I am free to confess that when among the firstfruits of Glasgow, I received the blessing eight years ago, in the Queen's Rooms—Mr. Bowker in the chair—it was not through the teaching of self-surrender and self-emptying from the under side, but through Christ presenting Himself to me as the Crucified One, dead, risen, and sitting in glory. My surrender was not an effort of the flesh, through the action of a legal conscience urging me forward to make it as the condition of blessing, but it was Christ presenting Himself before the heart, and the compellings of his Divine grace constraining me, breaking me up, and breaking me down—in a word, overwhelming me with his love that gave all, and did all that could be given or could be done.

Thus, were I asked to preach sanctification or holiness to believers, I would avoid the legalism that teaches self-surrender and self-emptying from the under side, and begin with saints as with sinners, from the upper side by the presentation of God delivering up his own dear Son to be lifted up upon that cross; keep them gazing at that spectacle of overwhelming and all-subduing love until they were broken up and broken down, and then I believe that, like the tree bringing forth spontaneously, the fruit would appear in a life yielded unto God.

"When ye were the servants of sin, ye were free from righteousness. What fruit had ye then in those things whereof ye are now ashamed? for the end of those things is death. But now being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness [without effort], and the end everlasting life" (Rom. vi. 20-22). "Yield [without effort] yourselves unto God, as those that are alive from the dead" (vi. 13).

There is a sphere of death environed by the horizon of death, in which all men are in the first man Adam, to begin with. But there is a sphere of life in Christ Jesus above and beyond. How am I to be delivered from the sphere of death, where Satan, and sin, and the world, and hell, and death, and the law, have and hold the dominion over me, and translated into a spiritual sphere, viz., in Christ Jesus alive from among the dead, where neither Satan, nor the world, nor hell, nor death, nor the law, nor sin, shall have dominion over me, where neither the one nor the other can have any kingship or lordship over me? The cross of our Lord Jesus Christ is the answer. Christ crucified carries me, crucified with Himself, and all the hosts of the redeemed, in his (Luke ix. 31) exodus of death and resurrection out from among the dead into the sphere of "alive to God in Christ Jesus!" even as Moses, in his exodus out of Egypt, carried with him the hosts of Israel redeemed by the blood of the slain lamb, out of the sphere of bondage to Pharaoh, taskmasters, burdens, and iron furnaces, into a sphere on the resurrection side of the Red Sea, where they were free to yield themselves servants to Jehovah, their God, in singing, sacrificing, and serving Him.

On Giving to Missions.

BY REV. DR. LANDELS.

[From a missionary sermon at Camden-road Baptist Church.]

CHRISTIANS, to whom God has given plentiful means, do not know their privileges unless they use them for blessing their fellow men. Is it not a matter of devout thankfulness that the Lord not only puts upon his people the unspeakable honour of being associated with Him in his great work, but gives a call to us to make our possessions conducive to the highest good? Let the rich use what they have as He intends it to be used, and they will have reason to bless Him for it all; let them employ it in doing good for their fellows, and they will transmute it into blessing; and in the after ages they will find they have made to themselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness, and, as Paul says, laid up a good deposit for the time to come.

I know many men think otherwise. They will place their money in the bank, invest it in houses or lands, improve their style of living, lay it up for their old age, or keep it for their families. If they give it to the cause of Christ they have no hope of seeing it again, but if they save it they are sure to have it; if it is placed in the bank they are sure to have it at any time; if it is expended on an improved style of living they will enjoy its advantages every day; if it is saved for themselves or their families they will know of the good of it by and by. Will they? Is it quite certain that they had better dispose of it thus than give a reasonable proportion to the cause of Christ? that they had better hoard it up or squander it for selfish ends than devote it to benevolent purposes? Have you never seen hoarded riches become a curse to their possessor? Have you never seen an improved style of living bring an increase of care, and rob the individuals of the quiet enjoyment which attended their humbler mode of living?

Have you never known families utterly ruined for time and for eternity by the prospect of inheriting their father's hoarded wealth? Have you never known men make extravagant provision for their old age which they did not live to enjoy? Yesterday, as they sat surrounded by their possessions, you might have pronounced them happy; but they are dead to-day. Where now is their hoarded property? Had they employed a proper portion of it in doing good, would they not have been richer men: would not their death-bed reflections have been more consoling, if, instead of unavailing regrets, they had died with the assurance that they had a good deposit laid up for the time to come, that there were those left behind who would bless their memory, and those gone before who were indebted to them for their eternal joy? Which do you think was the wisest use of it? How would you wish you had employed yours when your dying hour comes? Remember the words of the Lord Jesus: "It is more blessed to give than to receive." Remember, "The liberal soul shall be made fat, and he that watereth shall be watered himself."

In the Furnace.

IT was a sweet hour away from the busy world. We passed into the little cottage with its tidy garden, the door opened by the Christian nurse whose happy face was a meet welcome to that hallowed sick-chamber. There he lay, a unique trophy of God's saving and sanctifying grace. The writer had the rare privilege of celebrating this beloved saint's "Jubilee of Suffering" with a number of other friends, most of whom were aged pilgrims. One had attained his fiftieth year in the eldership of the church, and another (since gone home) his forty-fourth in the same office. This memorable gathering in the little room was presided over by the honoured author of "The Life of Duncan Mathieson." The exercises consisted of the reading of the Word, with praise and prayer to the faithful covenant God of his people.

Now in his fifty-fourth year of suffering, our beloved friend, James T——, of Dundee, still lies upon that bed preaching the glorious power of Christ, and the all-sufficiency of his grace, even by his face, which is lit up by more than earthly radiance, and by his joyful acceptance of his Father's will. Many a time by that bedside have we had our fears rebuked and our faith strengthened at seasons when his pains were severe, and yet not a murmur escaped his lips. Rarely indeed does he speak of himself or his health, except a word or two in reply to an inquiry.

There were three of us on the occasion of a late visit. We found the well-worn Bible lying as usual open upon the bed, and, after a brief greeting, at once the dear sufferer launched out into the precious flow of the Word. At the weekly meeting held in this sick-room, a godly minister had lately been speaking from John xv., dwelling especially on verses 9, 10, "Continue ye in my love," and James had been evidently feasting. He said, quaintly: "When I was a laddie, my mither made me take her washing tub that had become 'gizzened' (i.e., dry and leaky) by the drought, and put it right down into the burn amongst the water, and to let it stay there. By so doing the wood swelled and the tub was tightened up so that it could be used. And that's just like us. Our human nature got such a fall in Adam that it's just like a gizzened tub, not fit for use. And it's only when it gets into the love of God and keeps there that it is right. That is wonderful love. Paul speaks about it in Eph. iii. 18, 19, 'To know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge.' There was no contradiction there. We think of Ps. xxxiv. 8, 'O taste and see that the Lord is good.' Here we have the taste, in heaven the feast. If you taste honey, other things seem tasteless; so, if we taste the love of Christ, the world's sweets appear tasteless things. Some get a taste of this, and yet spit it out again, and it does them no good. This was the case with Herod, who heard John gladly and did many things, and yet he took off the Baptist's head."

In this connection the dear sufferer dwelt on that precious word, 2 Thess. iii. 5: "And the Lord direct your hearts into the love of God and into the patience of Christ," preferring the marginal rendering as quoted. Speaking of the presence of sin in the believer, he said that, though Dagon fell before the ark, the stump was left. The root of the matter was in Job, though his trials brought out the corruptions that were in him. A believer might backslide very far, but the Lord would find him. A golden sovereign was still a sovereign though it was down in the gutter and the stamp all covered with dirt. There's a difference between God's quickening presence and his comforting presence. For various reasons He may hide his face from us, yet He never leaves; and He often gives us a kid that we may make merry with our friends."

Whether our dear friend noticed anything that seemed to indicate to him that we wished to bring our visit to a close, we were uncertain; but he said: "A dear minister was seeing me, and he seemed very hurried. I said to him, 'Your Master was never in a hurry, and yet He finished the work that He came to do.'" We read Isa. xxv., xxvi., our friend giving sweet comments as we went along about Jesus and his love. He said, "I have been praying too for Mr. Spurgeon, that the Lord would uphold him in the noble stand that he is taking for the truth of the Gospel." Ah, we thought, it is through the prayers of such winnowed saints as this that the honoured and beloved pastor of the Tabernacle has such power with God and with man. We had a precious season of prayer together, and then bade our beloved brother adieu. May God abundantly water him and all his afflicted children as they so blessedly water others from their beds of suffering.

A Letter from John Berridge.

The following quaint but characteristic letter of John Berridge will no doubt be of interest to our readers. It is preserved in a manuscript at Everton Vicarage, Bedfordshire, the scene of the labours of this servant of Jesus Christ. Writing to the Countess of Huntingdon, to acknowledge the receipt of a communication, he says:—

"I WISH you had sent along with it a few minutes of your life of faith; you might have taught me whilst you were clothing others; for indeed I am one of those strange folks who set up for journeymen without knowing their business, and offer many precious wares for sale without understanding their full value. I have got a Master too, a most extraordinary person, whom I am supposed to be very well acquainted with because He employs me as a riding pedlar to serve near forty shops in the county, besides my own parish; yet I know much less of Him than I do of his wares. Often is my tongue describing Him as the fairest of men, while my heart is painting Him as the Witch of Endor; and many big words have I spoken to his credit; yea, I am often beseeching others to trust Him with their all whilst my own heart has been afraid of trusting Him with a single groat.

"Neither, madam, is that all. Such a profound ignoramus am I, that I know nothing of myself as I ought to know. I have often mistaken rank pride for deep humility, and working of self-love for love of Jesus. When my Master first lured me into his service He kept a brave table, and was wondrous free of his liquor; scarce a meal passed without roast meat and claret; then my heart said I love Jesus, and was ready to boast of it too. But at length He ordered his table to be spread from above, and water out of the rock. This my saucy stomach would not brook, my heart thought it pernicious fare, and my tongue said it was light food. Now my love for Jesus disappeared, and I followed Him for the loaves and fishes, and, like a true worldling, loved Him for his larder better than his person.

"Presently my heart detected me in a very dirty trick, which discovered the busy pride and amazing impudence of my heart. Hitherto I had been a stranger to the luxury my Master gives his servants; only I knew He had many rarities, such as pearls and diamonds, and plenty to dispose of. Accordingly, I begged a bracelet of Him, a necklace, earrings, nose-bob, and other pretty things, which He readily parted with, being of a most exceeding generous nature; and will it not amaze you to hear I had the vanity to fix these odd ornaments about my old face, intending to make a birthday suit to appear in at court! Well, to be sure, whilst I was thus busy about mending my old rags, &c., in comes my Master, and gives me a sudden look which went to the very heart of me, and said in an angry tone: 'Varlet, follow Me!' I arose and followed Him, trembling, whilst He led me to the house of correction, where He first set my feet in stocks, and stripped me of my ornaments. He then took his afflictive rods, and laid upon me very stoutly till I cried for mercy; but He declared He would not lay aside the rod till He had scourged every rag from my back; and, indeed, He was as good as his word.

"Think then how amazed and confounded I must be to stand naked before Him, and especially when I saw myself a leper, with an Ethiopian skin, which the rags had hitherto concealed from sight. I kept on my legs, though overwhelmed with shame, till at length, being almost choked with the dust and stench that came out of my rags in beating, I fell down at my Master's feet. Immediately the rod dropt from his hands, his countenance softened, and with a still small voice He bade me look up. I did, and then I got a first sight of his robe, the garment of salvation. Truly, madam, it was a lovely sight, a charming robe, reaching from the shoulders down to the feet, well adapted for covering and defence, yea, excellent for beauty and for glory. There, Prodigal Jack, He said, put this on thy back, and then thou mayst shame even an angel. It was wrought with my own hand, and dyed in my own blood; wear it, and then embrace Me. I thanked Him, and bowed. But, madam, I must tell you, though I do not wish you to be my confidante, when my Master opened his robe, He gave me a hasty glance of his person; it was divinely sweet and glorious, and withal, so exceedingly human, that I feel in love, and now would you think it of me, an old fool as I am, and as swarthy as a negro, nothing would content me but a wedding. Nay, I often propose it to my Master, who sometimes replies When you can leave all others, I will take you.

"The other day, having asked Him when He would take me to his bosom, He answered, When I could humbly lie at his feet. Then He has graciously promised to set open his larder and cellar, and to keep them open for me. I am now removed out of the Book of Proverbs, which I have long studied, into the Book of Canticles, but am got no further than the first chapter, verse two, 'Let Him kiss me with the kisses of his mouth.' I seem to want now nothing but a close communion with Him—with the dear Redeemer. The world at times strives to divert my attention from the chief object of my affections; but my soul is panting after Him—yea, my heart and my flesh cry out for the living God. Come, Lord Jesus! Come quickly! The Lord strengthen your Union and Communion with the Prince of Peace. Amen.

"JOHN BERRIDGE, Everton.

"To Selina, Countess of Huntingdon."

The inscription upon the tombstone of John Berridge's grave speaks the truth he loved to preach:—

"Here lie the earthly remains of John Berridge, late Vicar of Everton, and an itinerant Servant of JESUS CHRIST, who loved his Master and his work, and after running on his Errands many Years was called up to wait on Him above. Reader, art thou born again? No Salvation without a new Birth.

I was born in sin, Feby., 1716.

Remained ignorant of my fallen State till 1730.

Lived proudly on Faith and Works for Salvation till 1754.

Admitted to Everton Vicarage, 1755.

Fled to Jesus alone for refuge, 1756.

Fell asleep in Christ, Jany. 22nd, 1793."

MR. EDWARD CLEAVER NEWBERY, with whose evangelistic work in Bordighera, Italy, our readers are familiar, was married on Thursday May 1, at St. George's, Hanover-square, to Mary Emily, daughter of J. Andrews, Esq., The Knoll, South Stoke, Bath.

The Red Testament.

BY REV. JAMES WELLS, GLASGOW.*

JOHN'S conversion produced a sensation. He was a wonder to his neighbours, and most of all to his fellow-workmen. He was no half man on the side of Christ, and he had plenty of courage. After, as before his conversion, he had the will-power of three or four men, and he seemed not to know what fear was.

His great powers of resolution were tested. He had a fierce struggle, he told me, with the drink. So very sensitive was he to the smell of whiskey that he fancied that it was sometimes sprinkled in front of the doors of the public-houses. He had "fits" of temptation, when his whole body grew restless and itched with the old thirst, and he trembled lest the accursed craving should master him. At such a time he dared not pass a whiskey shop, and sometimes when in perfect health he lay in bed all day rather than run the risk. When his child died his lady visitor presented him with a large type red-edged New Testament. For brevity's sake I have called it "The Red Testament," describing the whole by its most conspicuous part.

It bore the inscription—

"Presented to
"John S.
"By a Friend.
"'The just shall live by faith.'—Rom. i. 17."

That book was his companion for the remaining twenty-five years of his life. It was always under his arm as he went to church, prayer-meeting, or the homes of the outcast. It was to him more than his crucifix is to the Romanist. It carried with it a better benediction than the Pope can bestow. It was his talisman, literally, "a lamp unto his feet, and a light unto his path." From it he read every night as long as he lived, and from it his wife read to him as he entered the last valley. It was in my hands to-day (Sept. 10, 1889), more than nine-and-twenty years after the day when I first saw it. It is now the most notable heir-loom of the family.

John had his Red Testament carefully covered with stout black morocco. He told the story of the book to the man who covered it, and laid hold of him in his own masterful way, and won him for Christ. They became bosom friends for life.

The new spiritual instincts of John and his wife, as well as the happy home mission work around them, fostered in this pair a desire to serve Christ among the poor. John wished to give to misery more than a tear. A few doors off, a lonely unfortunate, whose exceptional beauty had been the occasion of her ruin, lay a-dying in uttermost need. John's wife timidly entered the foul room, and found, upon a little straw, a wasted form on her knees, with hands clasped in prayer. "Oh," she said, in heart-melting tones, "I am praying to God to send me some friend. Are you that friend?" "Yes," was the reply. Annie was soon placed on a comfortable bed and tasted the sweetness of ministering Christian love. During the remaining six weeks of her life John, every day, sent her from his own plate a part of his dinner; and right glad was he to lead her to the Saviour of "the woman who was a sinner." John also took to tract distributing. One day he said to a ploughman in the suburbs, "Will you take a tract?" "Oh, I dinna objec' to a bit word frae the deevil," he replied. "I have the very article you want," said John, as he handed him a tract with the heading, "A Voice from Hell." John had a little tent in the works where he sharpened the workmen's tools. He soon made his tent a pulpit, for he covered it within and without with his favourite texts.

John used to speak of these days of his first love and service as the days of heaven on earth He often contrasted them with the old drinking days. The difference between the two helped him to grasp the difference between hell and heaven. He felt that he had been in both.

John believed that at least a part of his debt to Christ should be paid to such outcasts as he himself had been. His way was to attach himself to the very wildest men he knew and do his utmost to win them. He urged them to become total abstainers at once, but always told them that that was but a stepping-stone to living faith in Christ. He retained his lion-like courage. His individuality was sanctified, not surrendered. He clave unto drunkards who were in danger of destruction, and sometimes when appealing to them he burst into tears. Some of them wept with him. He always gave them "Scripture" for it out of the "Red Testament," in the most direct and apostolic fashion. He had a real power of magnetic speech. "John can speak in a rale gran' way," said one to me: "it's juist fine to hear him." His rescuing zeal was not a thing of fits and sallies: it remained with him to the last. An old fellow-workman, hearing of his illness, came from Edinburgh to Glasgow to thank John for having rescued him. On the funeral day, two fellow-workmen claimed it as their right to carry John's body from the house to the hearse, and from the hearse to the grave—the one at the head the other at the feet. They had both been very wild men, and had both been plucked by John out of the fire, and ever after they had been his bosom-friends.

Some four years after his conversion he removed to Glasgow, and for many years I was his pastor. A most regular and attentive worshipper was he, with wife and children and Red New Testament.

I well remember visiting John one evening; it would be some ten years after his conversion. He was not then in a mean garret, with two or three ramshackle chairs, one of them doing duty as a table. He could not say with Heine—

I have two rooms: the one
I die in, and the grave.

We were in his sitting-room, which was well furnished with mahogany chairs, table, and sofa. All this came from his having no share in the upkeep of the publican's riding horse. His wife and two well-dressed children were present. The Red Testament was lying on the centre of the table, as it ever lay at the centre of his whole life. He always had it in a handy place, as it was his favourite starting-point in approaching his neighbours. It was a fine feature in John that he cherished the sweetest and most vivid memories of bygone days. To speak of them did good to him, and also to another.

"Mr. Wells, do you know that book?" he said, with a triumphant gesture, as he lifted the Red Testament.

"Yes, John, I have seen that book before."

"Well I would not part with it for its weight in gold. That's the book on which God the Holy Ghost taught me to read. No one else could have done it. My wife can tell you that I began on that book like a little child, with a, b, ab. It was desperate work, but by the grace of God I mastered it. I never rested till I could read that book for myself."

Over the mantelpiece, in the place of honour, there hung an old-fashioned framed photo of the lady who had bent over his dying child and given him the Red Testament. The book and the picture were his two household gods. He unhooked the photo and held it at arm's length, so that the gaslight fell full upon it. He then took out his handkerchief, gently wiped the dust off the glass, surveyed the picture admiringly, and said: "Mr. Wells, if there's a true Christian on earth, that's one. Since the old days when you first knew me, I have prayed every day that God would bless her. She is one of the best friends I ever had."

One wonders that our poets and painters do not choose home mission scenes. What a splendid subject for a masterpiece was that big man, out of whom many devils had been cast, gazing with grateful emotion upon the image of the lady who had helped to draw him out of the very jaws of destruction! Where can genius find material more apt for its creations? Under heaven, where can you find incidents surrounded with a deeper pathos or a nobler human interest? It is a pity that the fine arts are so seldom wedded to the finest; for the finest of all arts are those by which the unfading beauties of holiness are transferred to hearts and lives once deeply defiled. Successful home mission work supplies some of the grandest sights on our little planet.

* FROM RESCUERS AND RESCUED: Experiences among the City Poor (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton). A singularly admirable collection of narratives of home mission work. The style is graphic, and the incidents are genuine examples of Gospel triumphs among the lowest of the low. Workers in our city slums will be greatly encouraged by these recitals.

A TOUR THROUGH PORTUGAL.

THREE evangelists, one of them a Hebrew Christian, recently made a tour through Portugal. Their journal contains frequent allusion to the many natural beauties of the country the population of which lies crushed under the yoke of Rome. We make the following extracts from the journal: Romanism has ruined Portugal, and is responsible for the degradation which prevails on every hand. Yet the people have a deep yearning for something higher than they experience. They want to know the truth, but are afraid to seek it even in the night, after the manner of Nicodemus, for the Jesuits work at night as well as by day. When, however, the Gospel is placed before them, how their hearts yearn to have it!

During a railway journey we left the train at the stations and offered New Testaments and Gospels for sale; free distribution is not allowed. How eagerly the people would have bought copies were it not for fear of the priests! Some, however, did make purchases. In a waiting-saloon we met a ticket seller, who is, indeed, as a light in a dark place. He shines brightly for Christ. During the entire week we never met another evangelical Christian, although we talked to everyone we came across! In railway carriages, men who had received tracts bought copies of the Scriptures eagerly, even the servant of a priest stealthily procuring the Gospel of John while his master's attention was diverted from him.

In Portugal the Jews are called "New Christians." On an omnibus we met one of them, who told us that his people do not understand Hebrew. At first this man would not acknowledge his unbelief in Romish superstition; but he nodded assent to religious questions to which he would not say "Yes." After a while, on being assured of our sincerity, as well as our dislike of Jesuitism, he opened to us his heart, telling us how the Jews have continually to act the hypocrite. The man seemed bewildered when we spoke to him of Jesus, the Messiah promised to Israel, and the Light of the world. "Why," he said, "the priest always tells me the Pope is God; that if we want anything we must ask the Virgin Mary; and that we cannot possibly come to Christ." The man heard the Gospel gladly, and said he would look into it for himself.

The Jews of Portugal, in order to avoid persecution, and for the sake of business, confess themselves members of the Church of Rome, although they long for something above the hypocrisy of their lives. They seem to have a desire to know the God their forefathers worshipped. In a gambling hall a Jesuit watched us keenly. He instigated little boys to tear up our tracts. A chance was once given us of getting into prison; the priests carried the host before our hotel, so that if we did not take off our hats we should be prosecuted. We took the precaution of closing the windows and letting down the blinds, and while the procession passed we prayed the only true God to open the eyes of the poor people.

Mr. H. M. Stanley.

THIS intrepid traveller is now paying the penalty of success; he is being lionised and fêted to an extent that might almost make him wish he were back again in the silent wilds of Africa. He has shown such signal qualities, however, in the face of difficult circumstances, that we doubt not he will escape scatheless from the Capuan Valley of feasting and of laudation that he is now passing through. In his address at the great reception in St. James' Hall last week, a very excellent impression was made by the chivalrous tribute he paid to the devotion and zeal of his European helpers in the recent expedition. A correspondent of The Liverpool Mercury gives an extremely interesting account of a half-hour's interview he had with Mr. Stanley, "the Napoleon of Africa," on Saturday last. We quote some portions of it, and feel sure that the facts stated will to most people place the character of the great explorer in a new and deeply interesting light:—

"We may let Stanley go out of sight for a little after this splendid fêting is over, but with the assurance that ere long he will turn up again to execute some great work for the development of Africa. He has neither engaged himself to serve the British Company there nor to become governor of the Congo Free State, but he is in close contact with those who direct these great enterprises. We talked of the great waterway that runs through the length of the Dark Continent from Cairo to Kilimane, and he said: 'You are unquestionably right in thinking that a line at right angles to that waterway, striking it in the middle near the Equator, a line from Mombasa to Kavirondo, is the thing to develop Central Africa and kill the slave trade.' The probabilities of such a road being soon made are, he agreed with me in thinking, considerably increased by the fact of Jackson's caravan having reached Uganda, and by the mission of Sir Francis de Winton, who will be at Mombasa before the end of June. Mr. Stanley is not in any panic about the German aggression. More than boastful words and more than armed men are required for success in Africa...

"We talked mostly of Stanley's first visit to Uganda in the days of King 'Mtesa. 'Did you translate the Gospel of Luke for 'Mtesa into Swahili?' 'Yes, in a rough way. It was put on big leaves half an inch thick, and filled some twenty of these leaves. I made also in the same fashion an outline of the whole Bible story.' 'That is a very interesting fact,' I said. 'Few people know the great explorer anticipated the missionaries in the matter of translation. What has become of these documents, do you know?' They were burned in one of the revolutions that followed 'Mtesa's death, being in a house where he had many curious things gathered.' But the fact remains as shedding an important light on a character which has other elements in it than heroism and resolution.

"'Is it true, as I have been told,' I asked, 'that once on the deck of a Congo steamer you said to one sitting by you, "If Livingstone were here before us just now, I would pour all my honours at his feet, and say, There, old man, they are all yours; I owe them all to you?"' 'Yes, yes,' said Stanley, and I fancied the steadfast eyes were moist; 'that is all true.'

"If you ask me the general impression left on me by this interview, I must answer that I felt I was dealing with a really great man—one who is distinguished by genuine kingly qualities—the same quiet, self-possessed, courteous man this morning that I saw last night surrounded by birth and intellect. I have called him a Napoleon, but that must be qualified by an important addition: A Napoleon with a conscience. His officers—two of whom, Captain Nelson and Mr. Jephson, I met shortly before—know how admirably he can rule men, not merely by the force of brain and will which the 'little Corsican corporal' had, but with a high and steadfast regard to justice and to duty. I took leave of Stanley, venturing to assure him that thousands thank God that the future of Africa is in the hands of one who has already set before its darkling inhabitants the inspiring light of a high moral example. For, whatever may be the particular development in the near future, it is certain that if Stanley lives he will go back; and when he does his personality must be the most potent factor in the whole of the Dark Continent."

DR. PENTECOST'S INDIAN TOUR.

As we have already intimated, this evangelist has received invitations to spend some time in India, and, feeling them to be a call from God, he intends leaving England soon in order to arrange for the return of a widowed daughter from the Pacific Coast to her parental home in New York. He will come back to England in the autumn, previous to departure for India, and will probably begin his work in Calcutta.

With the view of bringing him into communication with friends at home and abroad who sympathise with his project, several meetings have been recently held. One took place last Saturday afternoon, opened by Lord Kinnaird, at the residence of Mr. E. M. Denny. Dr. Pentecost said the main point in his plan was a vigorous assault in each of the principal cities upon the ungodliness, selfishness, and proud reserve which prevail largely among Anglo-Indians, as the surest and most practical means of removing a serious obstacle to conversion among the educated natives.

The Free and Established Churches of Scotland and the American Board of Foreign Missions have passed minutes recommending the scheme to the co-operation of their missionaries, and special prayer-meetings have been organised in Edinburgh and Glasgow. Dr. Pentecost hopes many ladies and gentlemen may be moved of God to assist in work proposed in no disparagement of corporate or individual effort past or present.

Mr. Stock, of the Church Missionary Society, and Mr. Fordyce, of the Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society, expressed, on behalf of their associations, warm fellowship with a worker evidently well qualified for concentrated and continued spiritual action upon the great Indian centres of population.

REV. F. B. MEYER commenced a series of Bible-readings to young men at the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A. on Saturday last. The subject of the series is, "The Basic Facts of Christianity." The meetings are to be held on Saturday afternoons at three o'clock. The following are the subjects: May 10, "The Holy Catholic Church"; May 17, "The Communion of Saints"; May 31, "The Forgiveness of Sins"; June 7, "The Resurrection of the Body"; June 14, "The Life Everlasting."

WORK ON THE BLACKDOWN HILLS.—In a circular to friends of the good work which he superintends, Mr. W. J. H. Brealey intimates that a large garden and cottage, adjoining the mission-room at Clayhidon, has been secured to meet a long-felt want. The cottage was the first mission-room used by the late Mr. Brealey. It is proposed to erect on the site a "Memorial Cottage," which shall combine the purposes of a house of accommodation for evangelists and helpers in the work, a health resort for workers who may need rest and bracing air, a convenience for visitors, and a centre of still further aggressive work for the Lord. The aim would be to make the undertaking self-supporting. The inclusive cost will be about £500, part of which has already been received. Of the summer tent work, Mr. Brealey says: "Many urgent invitations for services in dark villages have been received. We are desirous to enter the open doors if the Lord supply the means to repair and work the tent."

BETHEL SANTHAL MISSION.

MR. A. HAEGERT writes from Bethel, vid Jamtara, dated March 12:—Messrs. Hearn and Hinder, with their preachers and tent, have returned to their stations. They report that they visited and preached in 144 villages, in most of them twice; that as a rule they were received with much friendliness; patients sought their medical aid; Scriptures were asked for; the magic lantern brought a congregation night after night. In three villages the young men begged that some of our hymns should be taught them, and if you pay there now a quiet visit you might hear Christian hymns sung. In a few villages they begged for schools. However, in three villages their reception was just the opposite, and they were nearly well thrashed.

Pneumonia in epidemic form is going through our district. Since February I had among others eighteen patients. To-day there are seven pneumonia patients in our hospital. Thank God, so far all are doing well. Recently we had twenty-seven persons baptized.

CAPE MOUNTED RIFLEMEN.

DEAR SIR,—An effort is to be made by the Cape General Mission to do something for the spiritual good of the Cape Mounted Riflemen who form the standing army of the Cape Colony. This force is about 800 strong, and is scattered in small detachments over the frontier districts of the colony proper and the adjacent native territories. No one who knows anything of the force will doubt that there is plenty of room for evangelistic work amongst them. All that the Mission can do will be to appoint and support one evangelist, who will scarcely be able to visit all the stations once a year.

It appears to me that there is a good opportunity here for any young men willing to sacrifice their liberty for a time, if by so doing they can obtain a chance of preaching Christ to those who sadly need Him. There is a constant demand for recruits to fill up the vacancies caused by men taking their discharge. At the present time the regiment is, I believe, about fifty below strength. Why should not a number of young men join as ordinary recruits. They would have to serve for five years, at the end of which time a man can either take his discharge or re-engage for three years at an advance of pay. Recruits are taken on at the office of the Agent-General for the Cape Colony in London, and also at the headquarters of the Colonial Forces, King William's Town, Cape Colony. Of course, any men joining must understand that they would be simple soldiers under military discipline, and having to perform all military duties, nor need they expect to meet with much encouragement in their religious work from their officers. The reverse would more likely be the case. The duties of the force at the present time are indeed more police than military, most of the men being employed in patrolling the country to prevent native stock thefts.

Men for this service must be 5 ft. 6 in. high, and 34 in. chest measurement. Recruits are taken as low as sixteen years of age, but for this special service I should not advise any under twenty to join, and I do not think any under thirty would be rejected on account of age. Men who have had some military service, especially mounted service, would be very suitable. Real manly men, who could make a good show at tennis and cricket, would, other things being equal, be best for the work, as such accomplishments would help to win the respect of their comrades. They should be teetotalers; prepared to work in an unsectarian spirit; and, above all, filled with the Master's hatred of sin and love of the sinner.

I should advise any who do join to put themselves in communication with the Cape General Mission, the director of which is Mr. W. Spencer Walton, Cape Town. Recruiting in England is, I believe, limited to five men per month; but any physically fit man rejected there on account of the list being full would be pretty sure to be taken on if he could raise money to pay his passage to King William's Town.—Yours truly,

A SOLDIER'S FRIEND.

American Notes.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

DURING the progress of the Methodist Conference in New York city the daily papers furnished very full reports of the proceedings. One secular paper gave frequently as many as three columns per day to these reports. What a vast difference there would be in the tone of society were this practice more general, instead of the publication of moral filth which befouls the pages of so many leading journals. Prize-fights, drunken brawls, divorces, seductions, and similar wickednesses are portrayed with sickening detail, without a line of warning, or an expression of regret that these things are so.

During the sitting of the Conference one fact of great interest came to the front. Outside of the cities most Methodist ministers receive a very poor salary. This is bad enough, but how great must be the aggravation when the limited compensation is frequently withheld by the non-payment of pew rents or taxation. The deficiencies in payment for forty years in this denomination alone amounts to the enormous sums of five millions four hundred and fifty thousand dollars. Of this sum (about one million sterling) the preachers have been robbed. We do not now discuss pew rents, or ministerial salaries, but record the fact that Christian people make solemn promises to sustain their preachers, and then wickedly neglect to fulfil them.

There has been a tardiness of late on the part of young men to give themselves to the pastoral office. Doubtless the race for wealth is chiefly the cause of this declension. Youthful ambition is turning to commerce, to politics, and to the professions. In his valedictory sermon, Dr. Cuyler ended his long pastorate with this appeal: "Would that I could lift up my voice this morning in every academy, college, and university on this broad Continent. I would say to every gifted Christian youth, God and humanity have need of you. He who redeemed you by his precious blood, has a sovereign right to the best brains, and the most persuasive tongues and the highest culture. Why crowd into the already overcrowded professions? The only occupation in America that is not overdone, is the occupation of serving Jesus Christ and saving souls."

The action the Episcopal Church is taking in debating a change of name, and in proposing to call herself "The American Church," is calling out vigorous protests from the other religious bodies. The Episcopal preachers are beginning to speak of other churches as meeting-houses, and of Methodist bishops as superintendents. While it is one of our smallest bodies, it appropriates to itself distinguishing titles, but in this democratic country an aristocratic denomination will find itself badly squeezed.

A member of the Supreme Bench at Washington, though not a professed Christian, yet a thoughtful man, expressed himself to a pastor, making use of this remarkable statement, which I subjoin for the profit of all who hold to the faithful Word:—"You ministers are making a fatal mistake in not holding forth before men as prominently as the previous generation did the retributive justice of God. You have fallen into a sentimental style of rhapsodising over the love of God, and you are not appealing to that fear of future punishment which our Lord and Master made such a prominent element in his preaching. And we are seeing the effects of it in the widespread demoralisation of private virtue and corruption of public conscience throughout the land."

During my recent tour through the Southern States I found among those who professed conversion in our evangelistic meetings that many of them had been church members for years. The tendency is to hasten into the fellowship of the Church persons who are only impressed, or who from various motives think they should belong to the Church. I found it quite prevalent in one of the great denominations that regeneration is not to be considered a prerequisite to Church membership. The painful results which follow are seen in the thorough worldliness of such churches whose members live, act, sport, transact business, enjoy pleasures, and pursue "society" in just the same fashion as the openly profane, the thoroughly worldly, and the manifestly ungodly. There is no dividing line between them.

MISSION WORK IN BOW COMMON.

THE work which Mr. T. J. Hazzard carries on in Bow Common is very difficult, but full of hope. Blackthorn-street Chapel is the centre, and no more earnest endeavour is made throughout East London. A Bible-woman has been started to reach the people in their homes and herding-places, and a mothers' meeting has been commenced with encouraging results. Gospel temperance has of necessity a prominent place in the programme, for the drink curse is the giant evil of the entire district. And this work has had God's richest blessing, for "the biggest drunkard in Bow Common," according to his own confession, has been brought to the feet of Jesus, in company with others.

An important and pleasing feature of the work has been the gathering, every week, for a brief meeting, of some hundreds of "drift" children from the streets and the slums. When this effort commenced, the children were an undisciplined mob; but now their behaviour would compare favourably with that of children of many of our Sunday-schools. Quite recently the mothers of these poor children were collected for an evening with "The Pilgrim's Progress," the celebrated story being illustrated by dissolving views and readings, with songs given by the family of Mr. Simeon Clayton, assisted by Mr. Shorland. Closely following this, was a gathering for men, under the presidency of Mr. T. A. Denny. Those who attended were of the roughest and most degraded type—dockers, dossers, gaol-birds—many of whom had perhaps never heard the Gospel in their lives. After some kindly and earnest words by the chairman, Mr. Henry Lakin, the converted publican, told the story of his conversion, and was listened to with marked attention. On the following evening, one of the men asked to be permitted to sign the pledge, which he did on his knees, and so also did his patient and Christian wife. On the succeeding Sunday afternoon, the man found the Saviour, and has ever since been rejoicing in God's own joy. Mr. Hazzard's address is 14, Laurence-road, Bow, E.

SOUTHWARK AND LAMBETH MISSION.—Mr. Benson, the evangelist of this Mission, held a tea and public meeting last week in closing his winter meetings and commencing his open-air campaign. Several testimonies were given as to good received from the Mission. On Sunday the outdoor work commenced with a large gathering of working men, a few yards from Westminster Bridge, where during the morning thirteen occupied the platform, giving short addresses or testimonies of Christ's power to save.

Tent Work in Ireland.—Visiting Ireland lately, I was impressed with the need of a tent for Gospel preaching in the outlying districts, and was glad to find an earnest band of workers ready for the summer campaign. It is beyond the means of the Irish Baptist Mission to purchase a tent. I appeal to your readers for help, which may be sent to me, or to REV. HUGH D. BROWN, Dublin. Mr. Spurgeon has promised the last £5 required. (REV.) V. J. CHARLESWORTH.

Gathered Gold.

IT is our own past which has made us what we are. We are the children of our own deeds, Conduct has created character; acts have grown into habits; each year has pressed into us a deeper moral print; the lives we have led have left us such as we are to-day.
Dr. Dykes.

POVERI! POVERIS!

"Feed my sheep."
Come, let us ponder; it is fit—
Born of the poor, born to the poor,
The poor of purse, the poor of wit,
Were first to find God's opened door—
Were first to climb the ladder, round by round,
That fell from heaven's door unto the ground.

God's poor came first, the very first!
God's poor were first to see, to hear,
To feel the light of heaven burst
Full on their faces. Far or near,
His poor were first to follow, first to fall!
What if at last his poor stand first of all?
Joaquin Miller.

Where Christ brings his cross He brings his presence; and where He is, none are desolate, and there is no room for despair. As He knows his own, so He knows how to comfort them, using sometimes the very grief itself, and straining it to a sweetness of peace unattainable by those ignorant of sorrow.
E. B. Browning.

Unanswered yet? the prayer your lips have pleaded
In agony of heart these many years?
Does faith begin to fail; is hope departing,
And think you all in vain those falling tears?
Say not the Father hath not heard your prayer;
You shall have your desire, sometime, somewhere.

Unanswered yet? Faith cannot be unanswered.
Her feet were firmly planted on the Rock;
Amid the wildest storms she stands undaunted,
Nor quails before the loudest thunder shock.
She knows Omnipotence has heard her prayer,
And cries, "It shall be done," sometime, somewhere.
Robert Browning.

There is a prodigious power in singleness of love for Christ; in doing just "one thing," and that one thing a pressing toward the goal of likeness to Jesus. A man of very moderate talents and education becomes a strong influential man as soon as the Master gets complete control of him. He follows that Master so heartily and so projectively that he carries other people with him by the sheer momentum of his personal godliness. During my long ministry I have come to estimate Christians, not so much by brain-power or purse-power as by heart-power. Weighing is a safer measurement in a church than counting.—Dr. Cuyler.

SOUL-WINNING AND PRAYER UNION.—Text for May 10 (Ps. xlvi. 5):—"God is in the midst of her: she shall not be moved: God shall help her, and that right early."

NURSING TENTS FOR PALESTINE.—Mrs. Meredith writes from 143, Clapham-road, S.W.:—"The heat is increasing in the Holy Land, and we must make suitable preparation for its effect. Another nurse is going out from us on May 16, and she wants a tent to take with her for her roadside and village work round Jerusalem. Who will give it to her? The size and shape, with all directions for its preparation, will be given on application to me. I made myself acquainted with tent nursing during my travels last year, and had the opportunity of observing seventy patients under canvas in various illnesses. The convenience and the economy of the arrangement are just what suits our work in the East."

MAY MEETINGS.

BAPTIST ZENANA MISSIONS.

AT the Zenana Baptist Missionary Breakfast, in Cannon-street Hotel, a very telling speech was made by Mr. A. H. BAYNES, who has recently returned from the East. We give the closing portion of his address :—

"Fathers and mothers, have you no more daughters for India? Christian ladies, is there no appeal to you in the cry that comes sadly over the sea from your imprisoned sisters in the zenanas of the East? Listen to one of them who to-day is living an earnest Christian life in her own zenana. 'Do you think, Mr. Baynes, that Christians in England really know our condition in India to-day? Do they really know that our life is one long picture of gloom, harshness, ignorance, and neglect; that we are treated and disposed of as mere chattels, and not as human beings, caged and cribbed in our zenanas, destined to drag out a weary, aimless life, and die a dreary, sunless death? Born in ignorance, but for zenana missionaries we must die in ignorance; for we are plainly taught that it is worse than blasphemy for a woman to be instructed, a woman being always without either intellect or understanding. I cannot believe Christians in England fully realise the position of women in India. Do they know that more than two-thirds of Hindoo devotees to our sacred shrines are women, and that but for our ignorant superstitious faith in our heathen gods and goddesses these places of pilgrimage would, many of them, be left desolate? And then, too, can Christians in England be aware of the conditions of over 24 millions of child-widows here—that they are treated as the scum and offscouring of the earth, outcasts, all hands turned against them? Shunned by all, hated by all, told that their touch brings misery, and their looks trouble, they drag out a loathsome and terror-stricken life, and die a miserable and unlamented death. Angels sent by a gracious Father to minister to and comfort men, turned into almost demons by a tyrannous priesthood, and a Satanic system of so-called religion. Oh! can Christians in England know all this and not help us! You sympathise with this work!—how can you do otherwise? You pray for it!—how can you help it? You give to it liberally! it is the least you can do.'

"Christian sisters, I plead for enthusiasts: nothing great has been done without them. Society will have none of it, respectability chills it, but Jesus Christ demands it. 'There are yet four months, and then cometh the harvest. Lift up your eyes and look on the fields, for they are white already to harvest.' Oh, for the enthusiasm of the great zenana missionary from America, who, just a few months ago, in Southern India, after a life of devoted toil, passed to her rest and her reward, who, when, with closing eyes, she could see no more clearly, and when her ashen lips were stiffening into the silence of the grave, was heard to say: 'Other sheep, other sheep, for Jesus bring me other sheep.'"

INDIAN WIDOWS.

In an address at the same meeting, Mrs. WILLIAMSON, of Calcutta, said:—

"One little incident is specially imprinted on my memory. I can see the little country homestead where I was one morning, far out in the distant villages of Bengal, and as I stood in the little mud verandah that surrounds these country houses, more than sixty women crowded round us, amongst whom we counted more than twenty widows. One of these especially attracted our notice. She listened most attentively as we sat and talked to them of Jesus and his coming into the world to die for us. She was the widowed sister of a native gentleman, and we took to her at once. With such a sweet face, with the marks of her sorrowful life so strongly depicted on it, she comes before me to-day! How eagerly she seemed to drink in the glad message of salvation. How terrible here are the signs of this dreadful evil, child marriage. She had become a widow at fourteen, and all brightness at that early age had been taken out of her early life. From letters subsequently received, it seemed as if she were really asking for the light, groping her way, but there she was in her country home shut up from all refining influences, with no one to visit her, and no one to tell her of the truth of the Gospel which she longed for. One day we heard that she had put an end to her life, and I feel that this sad circumstance appeals to us to be up and doing, and to carry the news of salvation to these women, who are dying without even the privilege of knowing it."

BAPTIST MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

THERE was a crowded assembly in Exeter Hall on Thursday evening last week, on the occasion of the annual meeting of the Baptist Missionary Society. Mr. J. Barran, M.P., presided; cheering reports were given, and stimulating addresses delivered.

Dr. UNDERHILL, the esteemed hon. secretary, rejoiced to observe the steady spread of Gospel light and knowledge. Anxious to profit by counsel and criticisms, the Society is attempting every legitimate measure to sound abroad the name of Christ. A few brethren are now being sent out to devote themselves entirely to evangelistic work. They will live as simply as possible, dwell in cheap houses, and in all respects endeavour to touch the natives in their humblest and innermost social life. Three of these evangelists have already settled in a populous district of Bengal. In China large sums of money were distributed last year for the relief of distress resulting from the famine, and the Gospel was, at the same time, preached to the people. Many hundreds and thousands flocked to hear about Christ, and in some instances opened their hearts and professed the faith.

Mr. W. R. Rickett, treasurer, announced that the total expenditure reached £82,081, which was in excess of the income by £2472.

Rev. J. T. FORBES, M.A., of Newcastle, spoke of the spiritual character of the work. Behind every want of the outer man is a deeper want of the inner man. Before their life's conditions can become sweet and wholesome, they themselves must be altered men. Out of the heart are the issues of life—physical, civil, social, spiritual. In India, youths may learn to abandon faith in ancestral religion, but the ethics of evolution will not be powerful enough to expel the timidity and duplicity, the immorality and selfishness begotten by the long rule of heathenism. Every other influence you can bring can only do the sweeping and garnishing of the house, and if it be not tenanted by Christianity it will be given over to unclean things. Leave out the Gospel, and you will find that every force you can bring to bear on the elevation of the East is powerless to the attainment of the result of making better men. Man's nature crieth out for the living God, and the tribe has not been discovered yet that cannot learn to love and serve the living God. The true interpreter of the destiny of the nations is Jesus Christ. He is the opener of the seals, and the mission enterprise means that we believe in a Divine and not a merely natural destiny for humanity. It is not a question of comparing Christianity as a system of truth with other systems, and finding in it a certain natural superiority which, in the universal competition of systems, will secure it the dominant place. It is that we know it to be attended by specially Divine influence, by the power of the Spirit. It is that the Redeemer, in the exercise of his prescience, foretold its victory. It is that the history of the world must unfold into the accomplishment of the purpose of God.

Rev. J. J. TURNER, who appeared in Chinese costume, enlarged upon the spiritual needs of the people of that land. All the Society's missionaries in China wear the native dress, because they find it helpful in their work. Speaking of the province of Shan-si, he said: It is nearly as large as England and Scotland and Wales put together, and contains more than a hundred large cities and innumerable villages and towns, with a population of fourteen millions of people. Until 1876, no Protestant missionary ever lived there. Now, thank God, there are more than fifteen missionaries in the region, and nearly forty missionary stations, and several hundreds of Christians. The people have the same needs, the same trials, the same dark future as we each had before we knew Jesus Christ. I have stood and watched parents, husbands, and wives mourning for their dead. I have awoke sometimes in the middle of the night and heard the wail that goes up from these Chinese houses when death comes to the door. Oh, if you could hear that bitter cry of hopeless misery that rises from those people when they see their loved ones sink into the grave, you would feel that you must send them the Gospel.

Rev. Dr. PIERSON, who had travelled from Rome to attend the meeting, spoke a few hearty words. He reminded his hearers of the record of their Society. The story of Carey shows us what one man could do; rather, what God can do by one man filled with his grace. In former years the burden of the prayer was that God would open the door to the nations. Now almost every nation on the face of the earth is open. All this has been brought to pass in one century. One is astonished more and more at what he sees on the part of some to whom God has given abundance. Here is a man with an income of £1000; he gives £1 to missions. Another has £10,000; he gives the same. Another £100,000; still the same inevitable £1. The whole matter of giving to God must be reconstructed from the base. Everything comes from God, and everything that He gives is given to be returned in service. If William Carey were alive, he would ring out in thunder tones, "Attempt great things for God; expect great things from God."

MISSION TO LEPERS.

THE meeting in Exeter Hall last Friday evening of the Mission to Lepers in India had for its principal object the establishment of an Auxiliary in London. Mr. WELLESLEY C. BAILEY, the secretary, stated that the number of lepers in India officially returned is about 135,000. Those who have the best means for arriving at the actual truth estimate the number to be nearer 500,000. There is no well-authenticated instance of the disease having been cured; the most that has been done is a mere mitigation of the condition of the victims. After an interesting account of the origin of this Mission at Dublin, after his return from India in 1874, Mr. Bailey explained that the Society utilised as much as possible existing agencies. It has been carrying on its work at twenty different places, through ten British and American missionary societies. It had been found that the message of the Gospel is more readily welcomed by the leper than by any other class in India. Most encouraging is the progress of the Gospel among them. From £150 to £200 will suffice for providing an asylum, and at present nine such places are urgently required. The Society is deeply interested in the children of lepers, some of whom are leprous and some not; homes have been started for their benefit.

Mr. T. A. DENNY was glad that the Government of India is bestirring itself about leprosy, for without the strong hand of Government the terrible disease could not be extirpated. Although they could not say, as the Lord did to the leper in his day, "I will; be thou clean," they could relieve their sufferings in some measure. Rev. F. E. WIGRAM urged an extension of the operations of the Society in India and Burmah; and other friends spoke in advocacy of the new London Auxiliary.

At the close of the meeting Mr. Denny, the chairman, generously promised a donation of £100, in the hope that nine others would give the same amount. £1000 would enable the Mission to commence operations in nine or ten new centres, in which there is urgent need of asylums for lepers. The address of the secretary, Mr. Wellesley C. Bailey, is Glengyle-terrace, Edinburgh.

TRINITARIAN BIBLE SOCIETY.

THE operations of the Trinitarian Bible Society have of late secured the sympathy of many new friends, of whom there was a goodly assemblage on Tuesday evening last, on the occasion of the fifty-ninth annual meeting, in Exeter Hall. The report, of which an abstract was read by the secretary, Rev. Dr. Bullinger, stated that the receipts last year amounted to £3247; and 3897 Bibles, 10,937 New Testaments, and 81,132 portions of Holy Writ were distributed at home and abroad. A large proportion of these were disposed of as free grants, some forty societies and institutions, or workers connected with them, being aided.

Mr. H. C. NISBET, who presided, set forth the essentially Protestant basis and evangelical principles of the Society. Addresses were also delivered by Rev. R. Cooper, rector of Swayfield, Lincolnshire; Dr. Cecil Y. Biss; Rev. Hugh D. Brown, of Dublin; Major-General Synge, Rev. W. Kipling Cox, and Mr. E. Clarke, of Spezia. All the speakers defended the position of the Society, and recommended it to the support of the Christian public. The last-named spoke of the opening of Italy for Gospel work. Since Victor Emmanuel declared that none of his soldiers should suffer illtreatment for reading the Word of God his kingdom has been coming to the front. Wherever the Bible is circulated, there is light and liberty; therefore, let the seed be sown all the world over, to the praise of God and for the good of men.

REFORMATORY AND REFUGE UNION.

ONE of the brightest gatherings of the anniversary season is that held by the Reformatory and Refuge Union. This year it was held on Tuesday afternoon, last week. The Earl of Jersey presided. There was less speechifying than singing. Mr. Joseph Proudman marshalled an army of five hundred children, who sang hymns, songs, and choruses, entertaining the great audience for close upon three hours and a half.

Of course, there was some speaking. This year adults and children were wonderfully interested by Rev. F. T. COLSON'S "Ten Minutes' Talk to Five Hundred Children." A wax doll was exhibited to typify those who could not stand the fire of persecution; a china doll could be broken by a fall; a wooden doll represented something sullen and obstinate; and an india-rubber doll that which could be twisted and turned by anyone.

The EARL OF JERSEY expressed a hope that a moderate Bill for the better protection of children, to be introduced into Parliament, would meet with generous support, so that when a case has been received by an institution, directors will not have to give up a promising child to an unworthy father or mother, just as the child is about to enter on a useful career.

The report of the Union referred to legislative progress in the interests of children. Two Acts of Parliament were passed last session, which are likely to be serviceable in Child-Saving work; the interpretation Act, 1889, which has already enabled the rescue officers to save children found in the charge of immoral persons. An Emigration Agency has, during the past year, been established at Winnipeg, Manitoba.

Rev. J. W. Horsley, Mr. C. C. M. Baker, and Mr. S. Hoare, M.P., also gave addresses.

BETHNAL GREEN FREE LIBRARY.

"THE most prosperous year in the history of the Institution." This was the keynote of the fourteenth annual meeting of the Bethnal Green Free Library, which took place on April 30, under the presidency of Sir T. F. Buxton. Rev. Dr. TYLER read a most encouraging report, which stated that a larger amount of monetary contributions had been received, the total income being £2290 7s. 8d., and a larger stock of books presented—the total was over three thousand—than in any one year previously. From the surplus stock of books the committee made free grants to nine institutions.

Then there is the newspaper department with its 151 publications, which include the religious and temperance periodicals, largely made use of by members of the surrounding chapels, halls, &c. But perhaps the most important work reported upon is that of the evening classes, which afford the working youth of both sexes an opportunity of securing, at reduced fees, a knowledge of the branches of technical education. The progress made by some of the students has been truly remarkable; especially has this been the case with the classes for dressmaking, book-keeping, foreign languages, and shorthand.

The committee congratulate themselves upon having secured the services of a competent staff of teachers. Cases might be mentioned of youths rising from a state of all but helpless poverty to the exercise of their craftsmanship in City and other offices. Another important work is that of the high-class free lectures which have been as successful as ever.

MISS MITTENDORFF'S HOME.

SOME friends of the destitute and deserted girls who are cared for at Clayton House, Epsom, met at 17, Old Cavendish-street, W., on Tuesday evening last week, to praise God, take courage, and welcome the co-operation of others who may be disposed to join them in holding up the hands of Miss Macgrath, upon whom the management has devolved since Miss Mittendorff's enforced residence abroad through ill-health. Mr. JOSEPH WEATHERLEY (chairman) testified that the work had not failed in efficiency, nor has it ever been in a healthier condition than at present. Miss Macgrath mentioned instances of faith's triumph in meeting the pressing needs of the little ones whose bodies and souls she seeks to feed.

Major MACKINLAY'S short experience of the work had warmed his heart to it. Miss Macgrath's devoted work deserved sympathy and support. Dr. Partridge said that the Home is not chargeable with Miss Mittendorff's support, but she depends on what friends send her for this purpose. The social and spiritual value of the work was attested by visits to the Home and the conduct of the girls in service. Dr. Gilbart Smith believed that upon quiet, unseen, simple work, such as is done in this Home, depends very largely the future of England's masses. Dr. Picard recommended a visit to the Home as more eloquent upon its merits than anything he could say about it. Dr. Heywood Smith referred to his long acquaintance with an organisation carried on in the spirit of entire dependence upon God. Dr. Latchford, of the London Medical Mission, and Mr. J. Lewis Field, added a few words of commendation. A glance through the report suggests various modes of helping the children. Supplies of provisions, books, toys, clothes (sometimes the result of working parties), and other suitable gifts, are acknowledged; and some of the elder girls have been received into Christian families for service. Visitors are received any afternoon, between two and four o'clock; and a special visiting party will be formed for one afternoon in June, names for which may be sent to Miss Macgrath.

THE NAVVY MISSION.

A REVIEW of the labours of the Navvy Mission during the past year is well calculated to produce feelings of thankfulness, and to encourage further exertion. When, through the completion of contracts, at some places stations have been closed, others were opened. Thus, last year, while the missionaries had to discontinue their labours at ten stations, they established centres of influence at sixteen other localities. The Manchester Water Scheme, with its pipe track of more than ninety-five miles, taxed severely the endurance of the men sent by the Society to minister to the welfare of the labourers. Other undertakings of great magnitude, especially those in the North of England, demand constant and even increased attention. At one time a navvy used to inquire, when he arrived at a new place of work, "Where do the navvies 'randy' at?" He now asks: "Where is the mission station?" Within the last twelve years a change for the better has taken place in the navvy population. Previous to his lamented death, Mr. T. A. Walker made provision that the Manchester Ship Canal Mission, which was entirely supported by him, should be carried on until the Canal contract is completed.

At the twelfth annual meeting of the Society held in the Bible House, Dean's-yard, Westminster, on May Day, Rev. Dr. Fremantle presided. In his address he stated that the Committee contemplate the creation of a superannuation fund for the missionaries of the Society, the employment of a trained nurse to attend cases of accident, and the removal of the headquarters of the Society from Ripon to London. The Bishop of Ripon regarded these proposals as hopeful signs, and eloquently counselled the maintenance of the work. Addresses were also given by Rev. R. H. Brennan, Rev. George Everard, and others.

WESLEYAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

THERE was a large assemblage of friends of Methodist Missions, on Monday morning, at the annual meeting in Exeter Hall. The platform included many of the leaders of the Connexion, and the general auditory was made up of Wesleyans from far and near. The proceedings were not wanting in the enthusiasm which has for many a year characterised this great Methodist fixture, although that enthusiasm has more than once in the past been displayed in a greater measure. Mr. J. L. BARKER, of Bowden, presided in a genial spirit, and, in the course of an interesting opening address, made an earnest call to duty. Urging his brethren not to take a gloomy view of things, he pointed out that it is no forlorn hope which the Society is promoting. He was in favour of returned missionaries telling the story of their work, so as to sustain the lively interest of young and old alike.

Rev. G. W. OLVER, secretary, read an abstract of the report, which showed that the year had been one of anxiety, although the leading note must be one of thanksgiving. The total income was £140,627, which was £10,000 less than in 1888, and the debt now amounts to £8,560. While thankful that the incubus was not heavier, the Committee appealed to the Connexion to say whether this is a fitting response to the cry of the world's need and to the urgency of the Master's command. Operations on the Continent continue full of interest. In Ceylon the outlook is promising. At Alpitiya, in the Kandy section, from twenty to thirty and in some of the villages whole families have done the same. In India the year had its trials and also its encouragements. The advance has been real, though not such as to satisfy the holy greed of the labourers themselves. The village churches of the Madras district include many who are "being saved." The number of baptisms has been large, and the number of those under instruction is greater than it has ever been. In South and West Africa evangelistic effort has to encounter peculiar difficulties. In conclusion, the Committee declared itself to be holding fast the principles upon which it was first established, and bespoke the earnest and united prayers of the churches, whose trusted messengers to the heathen the missionaries really are.

The President of the Conference (Rev. C. H. KELLY) presented a resolution lamenting that the income of the Society does not allow the Committee to respond to the piteous entreaties for help which come from all parts of the world. He maintained that Methodists have no ground for pride in view of the mission enterprise. As a rule, the members make no sacrifice worth mentioning; the subscriptions represent rather the parings of superfluity than offerings involving genuine self-denial. He urged the exercise of what St. Paul called "this grace also"—that is, the grace of giving. More definite attention should be paid to the subject in the congregations and special prayer-meetings. The Sunday-schools have rendered splendid service to the Society, and if encouraged to increased effort, the children would secure for the cause tens of thousands of pounds more than at present. There is nothing so much to be feared in the work of missions as a dead calm, so the speaker expressed confidence that present discussions as to methods would result in establishing the Society more and more firmly in the performance of its work of God.

Rev. J. C. W. GOSTICK told the interesting story of missionary progress in Mysore, where the work began just over fifty years ago, and is now so well organised that it may almost be said that the Methodists "have gone up and possessed the land." The Society has 120 schools in the Mysore district, attended by 7900 children, nearly half of them girls. The Bible is read regularly. If there are some in England who would close the schools on the impression that they are not essential to mission work, there are more people in India who are of the same opinion. Why? Because the schoolmaster teaches the Gospel, and education has been a powerful weapon in battering against the ancient and high walls of superstition and sin. He called upon the churches to rejoice at what God has wrought in the entire country.

Mr. T. RICHARDSON, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, delivered an address full of vigour. Taking India, he showed that the progress of Christ's work there is proceeding at a greater pace than at home. India came to us in and our responsibility is great. Educational effort should not be curtailed, but persisted in with increased energy, the philosophy of Christianity being brought to bear upon the superstition of hoary mythology.

Rev. JAMES A. D. J. MACDONALD, who has for some years been labouring in Bengal, gave a cheering report of the work in India generally. The idolatrous practices are coming into disrepute, and the reign of the false gods is coming to an end. The Brahma organisation of Keshub Chunder Sen has proved a failure, and the Theosophical movement has already spent its force. The people are more than ever asking questions as to Christ. He had worked among soldiers in India, and took occasion to acknowledge the good services done by Godly officers in the country. "Will Mohammedans turn to Christ?" was a question which he answered in the affirmative. Asserting the oneness of purpose of all Methodists, he advocates hearty co-operation, so that the work of God may be pushed forward in Bombay and other very needy centres.

Rev. JOHN EVANS, of Oswestry, drew attention to the greatness of the task of world-wide evangelisation; simply to ponder the question is a means of grace. He called attention to Africa and its pressing needs. It is a new world opened, and God's providence plainly indicates the duty of the Church. He appealed to Methodists to rise to the occasion by doing their utmost towards sending the Gospel to the millions now enveloped in darkness. As of old, after the death of Herod, was fulfilled the promise, "Out of Egypt have I called my Son," so in days yet to come, before the Divine programme is finished, many a son of the Most High will be gathered from all parts of the African Continent.

Rev. Dr. RIGG, who followed, said that the work in Africa is extending, and the Committee is not unmindful of the claims of its population. While opportunities would not be overlooked in that quarter of the world, the Society would not neglect the very important field of India. There were several allusions to the controversy now being waged as to missionary methods. Mr. Macdonald ridiculed the complaints about missionaries having horses and bungalows, and said that he for one would not live among the people of India as they live. Without explanation, this declaration seemed far from the spirit of Him who stooped from heaven to earth to "reach the masses" of humanity.

NATIVE RACES AND ALCOHOL.

IT says little for European civilisation that there should be any place among the organisations of to-day for a "Committee for the Prevention of the Demoralisation of Native Races abroad by the Liquor Traffic." The title is long and cumbrous, and the task set before the Committee, we fear, will correspond. "The Native Races" are a long way off, and the British public is hard to rouse on a theme that is to most of them little better than an abstraction. Still, the Committee have put their hands to the plough, and we believe they will not turn back till they have amply justified their existence.

On May Day the annual meetings of the Committee were held at Exeter Hall. In the afternoon there was a conference, presided over by the DUKE OF WESTMINSTER. The outcome of the discussion was a "resolution" expressing an earnest hope that the Brussels Conference now sitting would adopt effective measures for grappling with the crying evils of the African liquor trade. In the evening, to a somewhat meagre company, fervid and telling addresses were delivered on the same burning topic. We never before heard Bishop TEMPLE wax so hot and indignant in speech, as when he unfolded the nature and extent of the alcoholic curse among the dusky Africans, with the consequent disgrace and scandal that sully the fame of the German and British people in permitting such things to be done. More fiery still and more denunciatory was Canon BARKER, who declared that his feelings were so tumultuous within him he could scarcely trust himself to speak about it. He roundly charged the present British Premier with culpable lâches of duty in not translating into action certain strong words he used about the evils complained of. Something must be done, urged the Canon, and that speedily, if this Satanic trade in the bodies and souls of Africans is ever to be stopped. The Government must in some way be startled into action if arguments do not move them.

Sir GEORGE BADEN-POWELL, M.P., as one who had seen much of the horrors of the traffic in South Africa, was equally clear that much needs to be done, but he thought success lay in the direction of diplomacy and international agreement, rather than in the adoption of extreme and heroic measures. It was pleasant to hear from him that preventive measures are now in operation over considerable tracts of country in Africa, though he admitted that there is yet plenty of scope for prohibitive action. Rev. JOHN MACKENZIE, the well-known missionary and administrator in Bechuanaland, pathetically pleaded the cause of that "weak and backward child in the human family," the African. He protested against the popular talk of this vile trade being imposed on the natives by "Christian" nations. There is nothing Christian about it, quite the contrary; and those Germans or English who sell the fiery and poisonous liquids for gain, do it not by virtue of their Christianity, but in deadly opposition to all that is truly Christian. Other gentlemen joined in the chorus of protest and disapprobation and appeal; and we can but hope that before the United Committee hold another anniversary some decided steps will really have been taken to abate if not to abolish this gigantic evil, and to rid Europe of complicity in the crime of wholesale robbery and murder.

MR. HENRY THORNE'S MISSIONS.

THE first annual meeting of friends, in connection with the evangelistic work under the superintendence of Mr. Henry Thorne, was held last Friday evening at Exeter Hall. Mr. Thorne gave a report of his work, from which it appeared that he had laboured during the year in thirty-three towns with great blessing to a large number of persons. 460 meetings had been held during the year, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A., the Y.W.C.A., and various churches. Mr. Thorne's lecture "From the Stage to the Cross; or, The Story of my Life," had resulted in awakening a good deal of interest, and had helped to secure large attendances at the mission services. Letters had been received from many places testifying to the value of the service rendered by Mr. Thorne.

Mr. Haig Miller, Mr. W. H. Newett, Mr. W. H. Cocks, Mr. W. H. Mills, and other friends, spoke of the blessing given in meetings they had attended, and the remainder of the time was spent in prayer and praise.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE LEAGUE.

THE National Temperance League is a unification of forces drawn from all sects and parties for combating the liquor evil. Its work is largely of an educational character—seeking to demonstrate the deleterious effects of alcoholic drinks, and enlist practical interest in the warfare against the traffic. In all parts of the country and in other lands its agents are actively working to these ends, by lecturing, addressing public meetings, by diffusing sound literature, and by other means. At its annual meeting in Exeter Hall on Monday evening a deeply interesting report was presented by the secretary (Mr. Robert Rae). The different departments of work were shown to have been well maintained, and increasing good to have resulted from the efforts put forth. The balance-sheet, unfortunately, showed a deficit of £200.

The revelations made in Mr. Goschen's recent Budget formed the basis of the BISHOP OF LONDON'S presidential speech. His lordship regarded these painful facts as a powerful argument for the most vigorous propagation of the principles of the League, and eloquently appealed to temperance workers to be more active than ever in their endeavours to stem the tide of this evil. Canon FLEMING rejoiced at the progress made, declaring that temperance principles were spreading everywhere and every day. Dr. CLIFFORD entertained high hopes as to the early triumph of the temperance crusade, but this will not be achieved without a hard and sharp struggle. Mr. JOSIAH NIX said they must adapt themselves to the circumstances of the people, and proceeded to detail some of his experience of temperance work in connection with the West London Mission. Rev. Newman Hall and Mr. John Taylor having spoken briefly, a resolution was moved by Mr. F. N. Charrington, and seconded by Mr. W. Saunders, emphatically condemning the proposals of the Government respecting compensation for liquor-sellers.

Practical Praying.

BY REV. A. C. DIXON, D.D., BALTIMORE.

"Elijah was a man subject to like passions as we are, and he prayed earnestly that it might not rain: and it rained not on the earth by the space of three years and six months. And he prayed again, and the heaven gave rain, and the earth brought forth her fruit."—JAMES v. 17.

SOME think that prayer is a mere channel for thanksgiving and praise. Others regard it as a good soul exercise by which we receive a reflex benefit. Many count it a virtuous performance by which we commend ourselves to God, and lay up a store of goodness. Others look upon prayer as a means of getting something from God, and prayer that does not consist altogether in begging they count for nothing. Put the first two and the last of these misconceptions into one, and we have perfect practical praying. Prayer is a good channel for thanksgiving; it is a soul exercise by which we are profited; and it certainly is a means of getting from God what we need. The model prayer Jesus taught his disciples begins with adoration and ends with praise, while the six sentences which lie between are petitions. And thus all our petitions should be sent before God enclosed in the beautiful framework of adoration and praise. Such prayers are truly "apples of gold in pictures of silver."

This Scripture teaches three things about practical praying.

(1) GOD ANSWERS DEFINITE PRAYING.—Elijah prayed for drought, and it rained not for three years and a half. Then he prayed for rain, and the rain came. His purpose was to reform Israel; his motive was the glory of God. Drought and rain were both means to these ends. When Moses besought God to remove the frogs, we are told that "God did according to the word of Moses." God gladly obeys those who are willing to obey Him. Only such He can afford to trust with power. Christ delighted in granting definite requests. The blind man who cried for mercy was required to define more precisely his wants before his prayer was answered. The woman of Syro-Phœnicia did not deal in glittering generalities. What she wanted was the healing of her daughter, and she got just that thing.

Much of our praying is like the sound of guns, shot into the air to hear their noise, aiming at nothing. We generalise our requests and God generalises his answers. We receive blessings in general and nothing in particular, because we pray for things in general and nothing in particular.

(2) GOD ANSWERS DEFINITE PRAYING FOR THINGS THAT HUMAN AGENCIES CANNOT BRING ABOUT.—Elijah had no power to make it rain, or even to assist in making it. All the universities of Egypt and Babylon would have laughed at his praying. They would have informed him that only cause could produce effect, while they refused to count the Almighty God among the causes of things. To expect rain in answer to prayer was unscientific, and hence could not be. Elijah, and those who like him trust the great First Cause, are not anxious to see the links between Him and the result desired. God can make it rain. Just how, he does not stop to inquire. Joseph said it was not in him to interpret the king's dream, and yet he did it. Daniel knew no natural law by which he could learn the dream the king had forgotten, but he trusted God for it, and it came. Paul and Silas with their feet in the stocks were helpless, and yet God in answer to their prayer and praise shook open the iron doors and let them out. Elijah liked difficulties. See him on Mount Carmel! To pray the fire out of heaven is hard enough, to be sure. We would doubtless have been very careful to keep the wood dry, and, if possible, would have put dried flesh on the wood, that the fire might easily consume it. But not he. "Pour the barrels of water upon it." "Pour other barrels!" "Pour others still!" The wood and the sacrifice are soaking wet, and the trenches about the altar are full of water; and now that the difficulties in the way are as great as possible, he looks up to God and expects the impossible. "Where is the Lord God of Elijah?" Is He not with us to-day? Then why should we be appalled by difficulties? "Trust in Him, and He shall bring it to pass."

In Rubens' painting of the Triumph of Christianity, the chariot is drawn by two angelic forms and pushed by two children, followed by motherhood, manhood, and civilisation in their highest forms. We are weak, because we too often put the natural in the front. It is only the supernatural that can do the impossible. The two children in the picture seem to be as strong as the angels, for at the touch of their little hands the chariot is moving forward. And the men of child-like faith are the men of real power. Our strength, at its best, is but the child's touch. But if we have the child's faith, the chariot will move on, for God leads, and, in leading, He pulls.

(3) GOD ANSWERS DEFINITE PRAYING BY A LONELY, OBSCURE, AND IMPERFECT MAN.—Elijah stood alone. There is power in united prayer, but let us never forget that the promise is also to the individual. Elijah was an obscure man. His home was in a little village, and his family were not prominent enough to deserve mention. And he was intensely human. He could be melancholy and wish to die just like any other tired man. "A man subject to like passions as we are." We are under the illusion that the miracle workers of the Bible were extraordinary men. Not so. They were common men that believed in the extraordinary God. The wonders they did were miracles of grace. Then may I dare to be an Elijah? No. Be yourself, and trust Elijah's God. Dare to stand before any Ahab, and speak God's truth. Fear not all the plotting Jezebels of earth. Don't sigh for death under some juniper tree. God has something better in store for you. When the time comes He will send his chariot. It is kind of Him not to answer our prayers of despondency. It is just like Him to answer our prayers of faith. Then let us "have faith in God."

WOOD GREEN.—Mr. Richard Weaver has concluded his mission at the Gospel Hall, Wood Green. The meetings were held every evening for a fortnight, the attendance and interest being well sustained throughout. Mr. Weaver, though in weak bodily health, still retains much of his old-time unction; and his vigorous and pathetic appeals led many to deep anxiety concerning their spiritual condition. A goodly number received the Word in sound faith, and were made "wise unto salvation," while several backsliders were restored to peace in Christ. We thank God for the stirring which there has been among the people, and pray that further fruit may be reaped from the seed which has been sown during this season. Next Lord's Day, Mrs. Amanda Smith (coloured missionary), of Liberia, is to preach at the Hall.

INTERNATIONAL PEACE ASSOCIATION.—Lord Herschell presided over the eighth annual meeting of this Association on Monday last. Addresses were delivered by Mr. Hodgson Pratt, Captain Verney, the Marquis of Bristol, and Mr. P. Stanhope, M.P. Great satisfaction was expressed at the fact that resolutions have recently been adopted by the Congress of the United States of America and by the Storthing of Norway under which the President and the King of these countries, respectively, have been requested to enter into negotiations with other States for the settlement of all disputes by means of arbitration. The chairman remarked that the friends of this cause are often regarded as dreamers, but it was those dreamers who would not believe in the impossibility of their projects who accomplished more than those who were not animated by any such spirit. It might be true that in their time they would not see war everywhere abolished, but he denied that the aims of the Association were anything but practical; and even those who were not committed to views of universal peace must agree that there were many disputes which, if taken in time, might be put an end to, and all danger of war dismissed by means of arbitration.

Sketches from Life.

A PRECIOUS TEXT.

MOUNTAIN regions have for most of us a special charm. How many a thought of comfort arises from their grand symbolism—their enduring strength, their protective shadow, their lonely heights of silent communing with God. Thoughts of his power: "At the presence of the Lord the hills melted like wax," and, with our hand in his, even we shall "thresh the mountains," and the winds of prayer shall carry them away. Thoughts of his sheltering care: "As the hills are round about Jerusalem, so is our God round about us," and "though the mountains should depart, and the hills be removed," yea, every earthly refuge fail, they who abide under his shadow are safe in the clefts of the Rock, in the secret place of the Most High.

But it is of the highest peak in the vast mountain-range of the thoughts of God—"The love that passeth knowledge"—that I would draw a tiny sketch to-day; for as the lofty mountain, with its sublime mysteries and infinite glories, is shadowed in the pool of quiet waters at its base, so may that love be reflected in the little incidents of daily life—small as a dewdrop, they may mirror back the sun. It was amongst the Snowdon hills I made the acquaintance of a Welsh woman, dwelling in a farm house, where I often went to purchase the farm produce. Though I could not speak her language, nor she but a few words of mine, we grew very friendly, and a few Welsh tracts aided the mutual understanding. Before leaving, I wished to give her a small remembrance of my visit, and I tried, but in vain, to procure an illuminated wall-text in her native tongue.

A beloved relative suggested my giving one I had by me, "The love of Christ which passeth knowledge," writing the Welsh translation of it beneath.

This text was especially precious from its having once brought me a message from the Master, in the following manner. I was cast down and sorrowful one day, when suddenly it caught my sight, reflected in a mirror. I endeavoured to read the words; but, being inverted, although I knew it was "The love of Christ," I could only trace a letter here and there. When I turned and looked at the text, no longer at the reflection in the mirror, I saw it was indeed "The love which passeth knowledge."

Like a sunbeam glancing through the clouds came the thought, "Through a glass darkly we are looking now, yet by faith we can believe that all the mysterious lines in our lives are letters that, could we read them aright, would spell 'The love of Christ which passeth knowledge,' and in that love we do rejoice, even in the midst of sorrow. Hereafter we shall see them clearly, and behold the glory of the Lord no longer in 'a glass darkly,' but 'face to face'; we shall know 'even as also we are known.'"

This text, with its Welsh rendering, "A gwybod cariad Crist, yr hwn sydd uwch law gwybodaeth," written below, I took as a farewell gift to my friend. Her delight far exceeded my expectation—delighted indeed she was. Her sparkling eyes, animated gestures, and isolated words were not unsuccessful endeavours to express her appreciation, as I read her the text in Welsh.

She pointed to the wall, and said, "Big frame; oh, so kind, so kind," and kept stroking my shawl, while her face beamed with loving smiles. And, as in parting I looked upward to the blue sky deepening in the twilight shadows, saying, "We shall meet there," she clasped her hand to her breast, exclaiming, "Jesus, oh, me fond, very fond Jesus." Precious name, above every name. Yes, through the love of Jesus, we shall meet again before the throne of his glory, and rejoice in his presence with exceeding joy.

For the Young.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND MISSIONS.

THE work of the Baptist Missionary Society receives a good deal of help from the children and young people. In fact, as was reported at a meeting held in Exeter Hall, on Friday evening last, one fourth of the sum received from church collections comes from the young people. This means a great deal—£12,000 out of £48,000. With a little effort, a great deal may be done by Sunday scholars to help on the work of God among the heathen. What other undertaking is anything like so grand? To send the light of the Gospel into the dark places of the earth is undoubtedly God's work, and in this He seeks the co-operation of those who love Him, and would bring others to a knowledge of his saving grace.

Rev. Dr. GREEN, who presided at the meeting, impressed upon the large audience the command of Christ, to tell the Gospel to all nations. By way of illustration, he told of a Karen convert who, while on a visit to America, was asked to address a meeting on the duty of sending out missionaries. After a moment of thought the Karen said, "Has not Jesus Christ told his disciples to do that?" "Yes," replied the American, "but we wish you to remind them of their duty." "Oh, no," rejoined the Karen, "If they will not do as Jesus Christ tells them, they will not mind me." We must obey the Lord Jesus, doing our utmost to "preach the Gospel to every creature."

A missionary, Rev. J. R. ELLISON, of Mymensing, was full of joy as he told of the way in which God has raised up native workers of late years, in Eastern Bengal. On one occasion a young man called upon him, and asked for information as to the evidences of Christianity. A copy of the little book, "The Philosophy of the Plan of Salvation" was put into his hand, and this he studied with diligence, paying other visits to the missionary to converse on points of doubt or difficulty. After a time he expressed a desire to make an open profession of his faith in Christ, but his friends did all they could to prevent this. He derived consolation, however, from the fact that though his friends could hinder him from being baptized, they could not stop him from making Christ his soul's trust and hope. After a time the young man's way was open to do as he wished, and now he is a very useful missionary to his own people.

The story of another young man was very touching. After some thought, he came out on the side of Christ, whereupon his father, a Brahmin priest, declared him "dead" to him. In effect he said, "By your becoming a Christian we are no longer related, but separated for ever." The young man had, in the eyes of his father, committed one of the greatest crimes imaginable, and was cut off from his family once and for all. If he had been guilty of theft or drunkenness his father would have taken it all quietly, but because he had become a Christian there was deep sorrow. Oh, the darkness of the poor people, that they do not see that Christ is the light of the world. That young man also has since become an evangelist.

Missionaries from the Congo do not so often address our meetings as those from India and China. Rev. R. D. DARBY, from the Upper Congo, told of the fearful degradation of the millions in that region. He went out some years ago with two others, both of whom have passed to their rest. He, however, has come home to tell of the spiritual needs of those among whom he has laboured. The most important ceremonies of the natives are on occasions of death. Guns are fired, and the people gather from the neighbouring villages, all dressed in their finest style. With a view to the funeral ceremony the women don their ornaments, and the men clean and sharpen their spears. The corpse is brought out, and smeared with palm oil and coloured chalks, and the people present all sorts of coloured cloths, "to be buried with the dead," although not much cloth is buried after all. A band parades the town; and men and women, and children, engage alternatively in joyous dancing and hard weeping.

Suddenly the witch-doctor appears on the scene; he is a very cunning man. He carries a bundle of charms—pieces of snakes' skin, hairs from elephants' tails, leopards' teeth, and various other things. The people believe that man would live to be as old as Methuselah if it were not for witchcraft, so when anyone dies an effort is made to find out in whom the witch is. Two or three of the principal men of the town go into a neighbouring forest with the witch doctor, who, turning over his charms, pretends to find one which, on being raised to his ear, whispers the name of the man or woman in whom the witch dwells. Coming then among the people, who are in a state of terrible anxiety, the witch-doctor says that so and so is the witch.

Instantly the people throw up their hands, and, declaring the judgment just, proceed to kill the man or woman. Sometimes this is done by putting a rope round the neck, and immediately cutting off the head, in which case the head is thrown about, and the body cut into pieces, which are thrown into the river for the crocodiles to eat. In one case a man who was killed as a witch left a young child, whom no one would care for. Mr. Darby went to secure the child, but learned that it had been flung into the river. An old chief died at Lukolela, and although the people told Mr. Richards, Mr. Darby's colleague, that they would not kill anybody, they actually took three men and cut off their heads. The chief had a child, which was beheaded, the body being placed as a pillow for the deceased man.

"Shall we whose souls are lighted" deny the Gospel lamp to these poor darkened people? Workers are wanted abroad, and supporters at home. Maybe God will raise up from among those who listened to these narratives, earnest men and women to spread the light abroad. Young and old alike may well agree to "pray the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into his harvest."

E. M. CHILDREN'S SERVICE BAND.—Mr. Newton Jones has completed a fourteen days' mission at Rudmore Hall, Landport. The meetings have been well attended and very encouraging, some having professed to accept Christ. Should any desire to arrange services, for three nights or more, for Mr. Jones to conduct before leaving for the seaside work in July, application should be made to the Evangelistic Mission, 190, Alexandra-road, N.W.

WORK AMONGST THE YOUNG IN CHEFOO.—It is just two years since Mrs. Harold Schofield reopened a school for boys which was started by the late Mrs. Douthwaite a few months before her lamented death. The children are taught by a Christian Chinaman, and have made very encouraging progress, committing to memory several books embodying Bible truths. Having been requested, when visiting among the women, to open a school for girls, Mrs. Schofield has decided to do so. She writes: "We cannot estimate the blessing that must follow the training of these little ones in the right way; even through them the parents will hear 'the old, old story,' which we hope will not only make them wise unto salvation, but help them in bearing the trials of life, in prospect of the rest that remaineth for the people of God. I ask for prayerful sympathy in this work. Though connected with the China Inland Mission, the schools are not supported by Mission funds, but carried on in dependence upon Him who has promised to supply all our need." Any friends desiring details of the work may address Mrs. Schofield, care of the China Inland Mission, Shanghai.

A BURIED TEXT.

FROM the first and second passages choose two consecutive words; from the third one word; and from the fourth and fifth two consecutive words. The whole form a well-known text of Scripture:—

Hear, O Israel; The Lord our God is one Lord. ( )

This is my comfort in my affliction: for thy word hath quickened me. ( )

He shall feed his flock like a shepherd: He shall gather the lambs with his arm. ( )

When a few years are come, then I shall go the way whence I shall not return. ( )

They that seek the Lord shall not want any good thing. ( )

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. E. Arrowsmith's visit to Moseley, near Birmingham, has been the means of great awakening. Mr. Arrowsmith exercises a marvellous influence over the children, which increased day by day, while the "old, old story" was told out in clear, forcible words. Many brought their Bibles, searching and marking the passages for themselves.

The meetings for parents and guardians were very telling and well attended. Many gave their hearts to Christ, backsliders were restored, and faint-hearted Christians realised the joy of full surrender.

At the temperance meeting 140 pledges were taken, and a young abstainers' union was formed. Numerous Bible-classes were started, to carry on the work so happily begun.

CHILDREN'S MISSION AT HOLYHEAD.

A very happy fornight's meetings have been held at Holyhead, N. Wales, by Mr. Josiah Spiers. The ministers of various denominations gave the use of their chapels, where all met together as one in Christ Jesus. The services were bright and attractive, full of illustrations, and with plenty of singing. Mr. Spiers' gift of winning young hearts was all the more noticeable, as, of course, in many cases, Welsh is more familiar than English to the children, and they could not always readily follow the discourse. The power of the Lord was present to bless; many yielded their hearts to Christ, and Christians were stirred up to strive more for the salvation of the little ones.

The closing meeting was exclusively for members of the Scripture Union, and those desirous of joining it. A branch of this Union existed in the town; but, as a result of this mission, it has doubled its membership.

HIGHBURY.—Services for the young, in Highbury and Canonbury, were held in Park Church, Highbury, from April 14 to 25, by Mr. T. Lewes Sayer. The interest deepened and the attendance increased nightly, and there was great blessing, many professing conversion.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., May 11, Eph. ii. 1—10; Mon., May 12, Eph. ii. 11—22; Tues., May 13, Eph. iii. 1—12; Wed., May 14, Eph. iii. 13—21; Thurs., May 15, Eph. iv. 1—16; Fri., May 16, Eph. iv. 17—32; Sat., May 17, Eph. v. 1—14.

Conditions of Blessing.

THERE is now among true Christians a very general desire for higher spiritual attainments and more success in all forms of true Christian propagandism at home and abroad. And this desire especially takes the form of a wish for richer manifestations of the power of the Spirit of God in Christian work. This is a good sign. It is as the rosy tints flushing the eastern sky, which tell that the day is breaking. But is it sufficiently considered that there are human as well as Divine conditions on which the richer and higher gifts of God are bestowed, on those at all events "who have tasted of the heavenly gift and of the good Word of God;" and that our obvious duty is to comply with these conditions?

The Divine sovereignty must be acknowledged. Blessings are given when they are not desired, and even to the unthankful and the evil. Nevertheless, may we not discern in the Word of God and in the history of the kingdom of God, both in persons and communities, this law: There is that, in every Christian, in every Christian society and nation even, into which the Word of God enters, which draws God and all Divine influences toward us, or repels them from us? Was it not according to this law that God dealt with the Israelites all through their history? Was not this the basis of almost all the expostulations and warnings addressed by the prophets to the Israelites, as expressed in numbers of passages of Scripture like these—Isa. lviii. 3; Mal. iii. 7-10? Is it not the principle on which the Saviour dealt with the disciples, and which He and the Apostles recognised as operative in his kingdom? (Matt. xiii. 12; John xiv. 21-23, xv. 4-8; Gal. v. 16-18, 22; Phil. iv. 6-9).

And is it not a principle which is just; in harmony with all we know of the operations of the Divine will in human affairs, and illustrated in the history of Christian persons, societies, and States? God required strict obedience to all his laws; and thorough, hearty surrender of the will and the life to Him, if we would have his peace and love in our lives, or his richest blessing on any work we may attempt for his glory. In other words there is a fitness or unfitness, a preparedness or unpreparedness, in us, as the servants of God, to receive more blessing, and to be used as his instruments for blessing others.

Now is it not manifest, looking at Christian society in the light of our Saviour's life and words, that we generally fall far short, not only of the spiritual, but also of the moral, standard He has given to us all? Also that we are not prepared and eager to receive, and to use, more of the heavenly treasure? And the evidence that it is so is seen in this, that so few professing Christians live up to the plain teaching of the Bible on the common questions of character and conduct, or even make strenuous efforts to do so. For instance, how lacking Christians are in charity, good temper, forbearance, unswerving integrity, consideration for the rights and feelings of others, humility, unselfishness, strict truthfulness, conscientiousness, as they are presented to us in the words and example of the Saviour. These are referred to, because they are common defects which Christians allow themselves with but slight restraint; because they so lower the Christian ideal of life and character before the world; because they are the A B C of Christian progress; and if they are not learnt, higher things are not likely to be attained; and because, according to all New Testament teaching, the lack of these qualities is most alien to the mind which was in Christ Jesus, which He often sternly condemned, which are repellent to the Divine Spirit, and which are felt to be unchristian, even by those most superficially acquainted with the truth.

However charitable we may be in our judgment of others, is it not obvious that, according to the plain teaching of Christ and the Apostles, multitudes of professing Christians, and no small number of churches and societies formed of such, fall far short of the moral and spiritual standard of the New Testament, and have no deep yearnings after the ideal of Christian life and character there set before us; nay, have but the feeblest conception of what it is? How can the Divine Spirit come in his fulness and power to such? The door is not open. The house is already occupied. This Divine visitant craves sympathy and welcome, and here there is a great lack of these and the influences through which it pleases Him to work.

Let it not be said: "This is mere morality, righteousness, and the advocacy of works; what we want is holiness, spiritual power." What is really wanted is both. Is it not so, that there is much vague talk of the latter, and a neglect of the former, in its true Christian meaning? Christ would have his disciples possess both. Holiness is more than virtue, than integrity, than righteousness, but it is inclusive of them, as the fruit-tree is of its blossoms and fruit. Where there is the one there should be the others; and because we fail to bring forth fruit, to be doers of the Word, to live up to all we know and profess, we are not prepared to receive higher blessing, either in ourselves or in Christian work.

That the results of the great and varied efforts now made in many directions, at home and abroad, to draw all classes to the Saviour, are disappointing, will be generally acknowledged; and here is an explanation.

ARTILLERY-LANE MISSION.

A LARGE gathering of the friends of this Mission met for prayer and praise on Wednesday last week, on the occasion of the opening of new premises. The workers have for some time been seeking a more convenient building. Matters were brought to a crisis by a notice from the County Council requiring them to quit in three days, owing to structural defects. A far more suitable place, within a few yards of the old one, was obtained on the third day.

Encouraging reports were given of the various branches of the work, which has now been established seventeen years. It consists of the visitation of fourteen common lodging-houses, Gospel meetings, open-air work, Sunday-school, children's meetings, mothers' meetings, sewing classes, free meals, &c., all of which has been done at a cost of little more than £100 per annum. As a heavier rent has now to be met, the workers desire to make this need known. Words of cheer and encouragement were given by Mr. C. R. Hurditch, Miss Macpherson, and others. Mrs. Finn (Artillery-lane Mission, Bishopsgate, E.) is the superintendent.

THE ATKINSON ANNUITY FUND.—The committee of this Fund held its final meeting on Friday last, having collected £870. After payment of expenses, there will be sufficient to purchase an annuity of £92 per annum for Mr. J. J. Atkinson, the late secretary of the Islington and Highbury Y.M.C.A.

SPRING.

SPRING comes smiling up the valleys,
Weaving summer's green attire,
Starred with flowers of gayest colours
Gold and azure, pearl and fire.

Throstles warble on the tree-tops,
Doves coo softly in the glen,
Larks sing high on quivering pinions—
Summer, welcome back again.

Hearts that shivered through the snow-drifts,
Wounded, bleeding all the day,
Lose their sorrows, in the joyous
Resurrection of the May.

. . . .

Soon shall burst on earth's long winter
Heaven's eternal summer-tide;
Christ is coming with the angels
To take home his plighted bride.

Not the hues of this creation,
Brilliant as that bride's array;
No ecstatic songs of summer,
Joyful as that bridal lay.

Tears of time shall then be crystals,
Mirrors round the Father's throne;
Life, the beatific rapture
Only God can give his own.

WORK IN THURINGIA.

THE Lord's work in this beautiful part of Germany has been greatly blessed during the past year. It has been a year of answered prayers. The new "Alliance House," connected with the Vereinshaus, was opened in July by the meeting of our fourth Conference for the deepening of spiritual life, attended by Christians of various denominations and nationalities. The visitors attending the Conference, as well as those staying at the Vereinshaus during the summer months, testified to having received much comfort and blessing. During the winter the evangelistic meetings have been increasingly well attended, and we were permitted to see much fruit of the Lord's dealing with souls.

More children, too, have been added to the happy little band, which is received in the Lord's name, and trained for his service. The free distribution of the Holy Scriptures has spread over a great part of the surrounding district. Thanks to the kindness of Mrs. Robertson, of the Society for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures, we have been enabled to respond to many applications for Bibles from those possessing none. Another cause for thankfulness is that at last an efficient helper has been found, whose past experience in Gospel work renders him well fitted for his post, and whose evangelical preaching is much blessed.

The "Bible-Carriage" also, so long hoped and prayed for, has been procured through the kindness of English friends. To suit our purposes it had to take the shape of a light vehicle, fitted to traverse the hilly ground of the Thüringian Forest, by means of one horse. We find the people in that densely populated district everywhere willing to receive us, but in a condition of spiritual ignorance and apathy difficult to describe. We ask all interested in Gospel work in Luther's land to accompany this "new departure" with their prayers.

The Vereinshaus, being at the same time a House of Rest, offers at moderate terms board and lodging to those seeking rest and Christian intercourse, along with the advantages of the bracing air of pine woods, and amid scenery of remarkable beauty. Every occasion also is offered for acquiring the German language. Any profit derived from the reception of visitors goes to maintain the many branches of this altogether undenominational work. FRÄULEIN VON WELING.

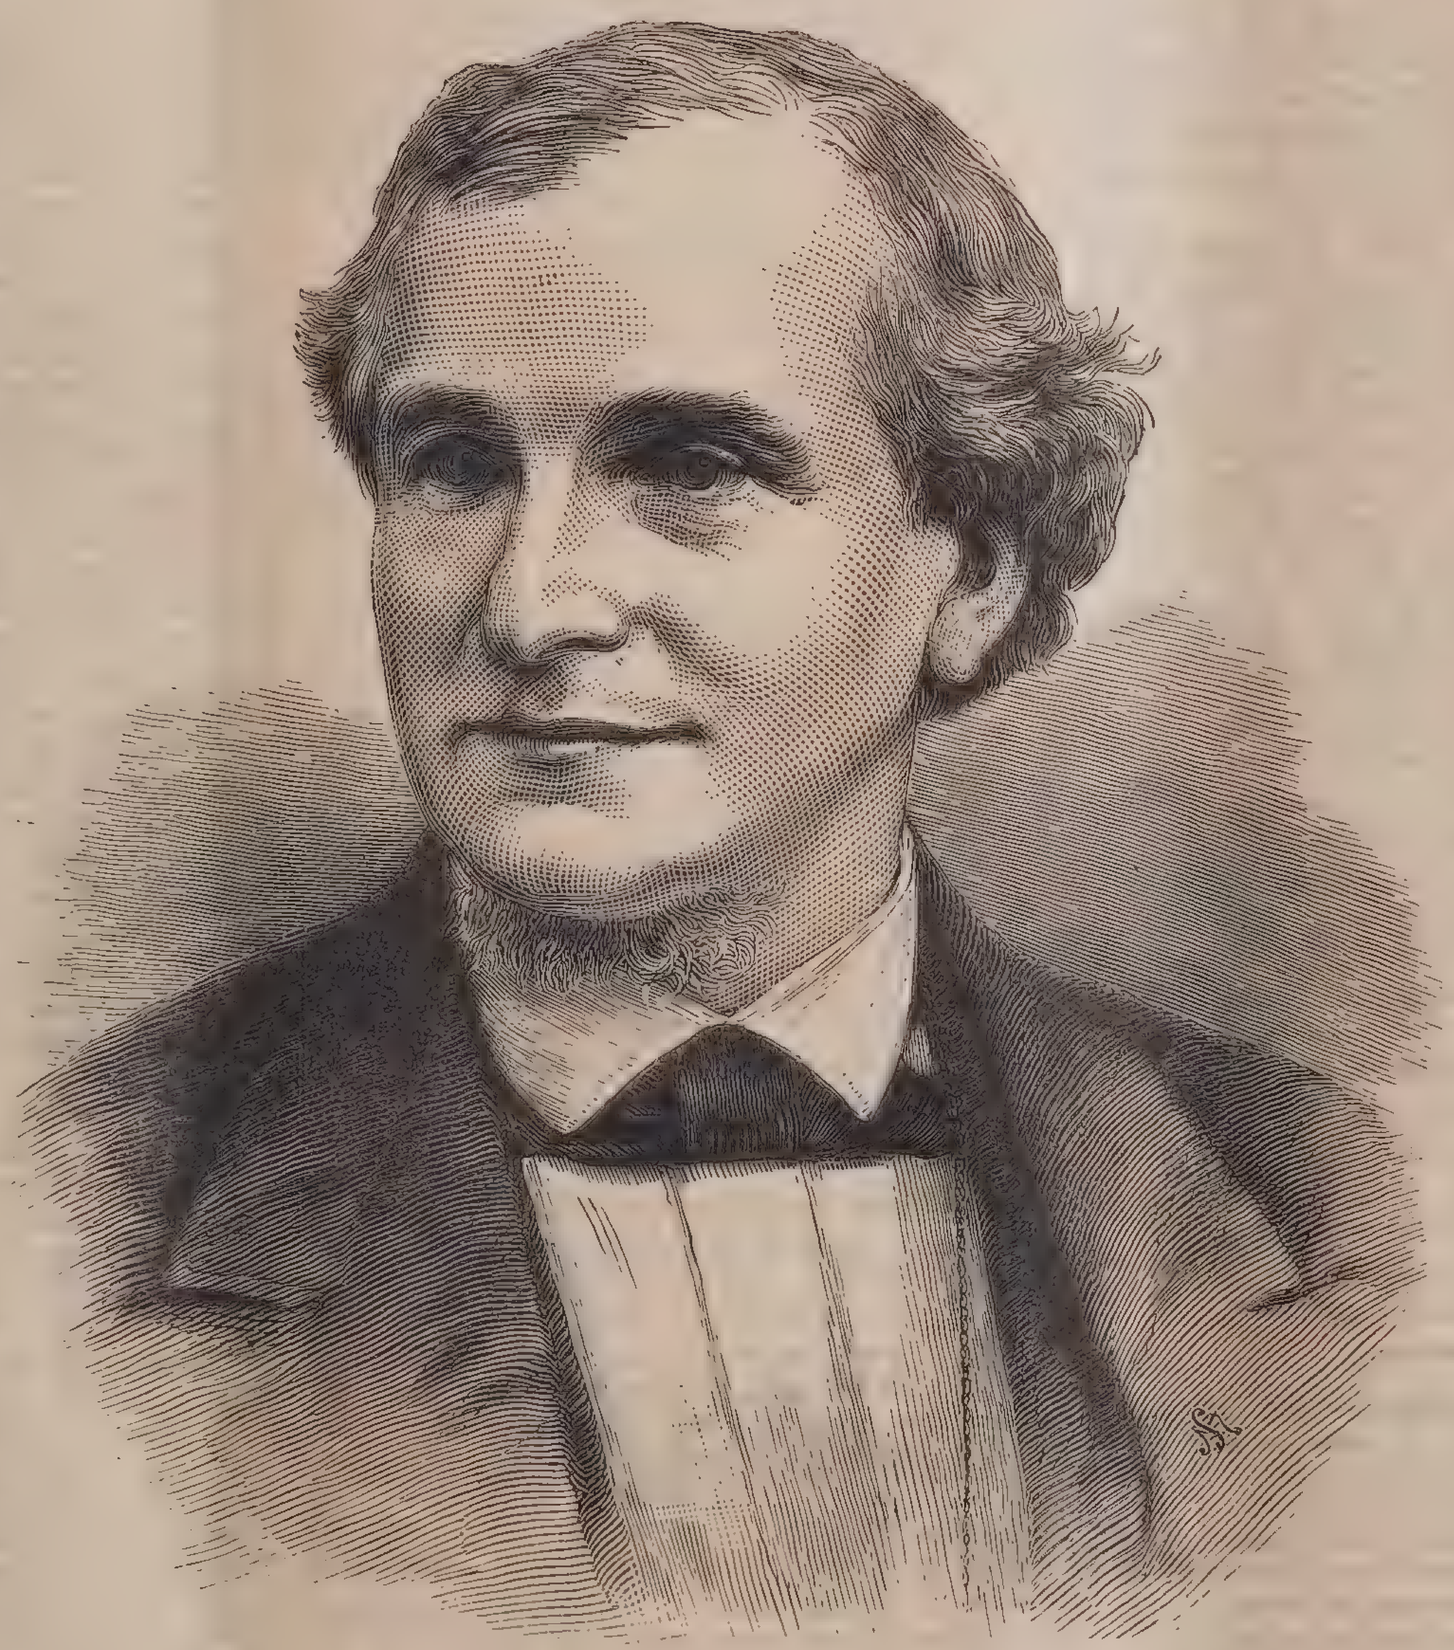
THE LATE MR. GEORGE H. STUART,

Merchant and Philanthropist, Philadelphia.

IN the great crises of a nation's history, the hour almost invariably produces the man. It certainly was so in the case of the subject of our present sketch. His services as the chief organiser, and the leading spirit, of the great United States Christian Commission, called into existence by the American Civil War, will never be forgotten by the best people alike of North and South.

Mr. GEORGE HAY STUART was of Scotch-Irish extraction, and the two types of nation were very markedly blended in his character. Vivacious and frank, he was also solid and sagacious—qualities that fitted him well for the unique task that was to fall to his lot. Born in co. Down, Ireland, in 1816, he emigrated to Philadelphia in his sixteenth year. Three or four years afterwards he made public confession of faith in Christ, and joined the membership of the Reformed Presbyterian Church. Active and enterprising in commercial life, he also threw a large portion of his enthusiastic energy into Christian work. He was appointed an elder in the church while yet young, and also held various offices in connection with the Sunday-school and college organisations. He became connected with the Y.M.C.A. from the time of its establishment in America. In brief, he gave himself heart and soul to every Christian movement, and gained the highest esteem, not only of his fellow citizens in the City of Brotherly Love, but in the wider community of the land of his adoption. He had the rare quality of drawing to himself men of all classes. His eye was like a star, his tongue was ready, his temper generous and genial, his wit and humour thoroughly Irish. There was about him a combination of qualities that prophesied a remarkable future, and that waited only for the occasion. That occasion was at hand.



The greatest intra-national strife of modern times came to a point in 1861, when the bombardment of Fort Sumter by the Southern Confederacy was the signal for a civil war, in which the whole nation, so to speak, buckled on its armour and rushed into the fray. The civilian army having been hurriedly enrolled, serious defects were found in the arrangements made for the sustenance and comfort of the opposing forces. The sympathetic heart of the nation was touched, and the Commission was formed to meet the temporal needs of the combatants, as well as to promote their spiritual well-being under the very crucial and trying circumstances of military life. Here we may quote the words of a competent and well-informed American writer:—

> In this grand movement, the like of which was before unknown to the world, Mr. Stuart was the leading spirit from beginning to end. At its first meeting he was chosen Chairman of the Commission, and so remained till its close. Mr. Stuart was eminently qualified for this position, as he enjoyed the full confidence of the American people. With his excellent business qualifications, rich experience, and unbounded popularity, he managed the affairs of the Christian Commission with marked ability, strict economy, and universal satisfaction. Aided by the hearty co-operation of a generous, patriotic people, Mr. Stuart, under God, made this noble institution a great blessing to the army and navy, to the Church, and to the world.

He not only managed the Christian Commission, but with his love of souls in camp and hospital, he talked of Christ to the sick, wounded, and dying soldiers. The great secret of his success was his unyielding perseverance. He said: "I don't believe in being conquered!" "I never give up anything that is practicable!"

The success of the Commission was due to the energy and perseverance of its liberal supporters, and the zeal of its noble-hearted chairman. His great liberality and burning zeal in this great work were manifested in his furnishing the Commission with office and store-room; in giving his own time and labours, and the services of clerks and porters, all free of charge, to save expense. Through his and the combined influence of the other officers of the Commission, railroad and telegraph companies gave their services in transporting stores and delegates, and in transmitting telegrams without cost. Even little children helped in the work of the Commission, making thousands of little "housewives," "comfort-bags," as the soldiers called them, with buttons, needles and thread, comb, cake of soap, and, above all, a little tract or Testament, and sent them on for the needy soldiers. With the help of men, women, and little children, the Christian Commission had nothing to do but go forward, labour and pray, gather up delegates, collect stores, and distribute them as needed in the field. Stores were gathered as by magic, and sent free by lightning trains.

Forewarned of an approaching battle, the Commission always sent stores in advance. To render immediate living aid, they had a class of delegates they called "minute men," ready to go at any time on five minutes' notice. Said Mr. Stuart, "If one of them is in the pulpit preaching when the telegram reaches him, he must stop and hurry off for the battle-field."

The soldiers willingly helped the Commission in any work they could. They put up as many as fifty army churches in one week. A regiment would cut the logs, and turn out en masse and help erect the building. Sometimes they would lay the foundation of a church in the morning and have preaching in it that night.

The work done by this wonderful Christian Commission cannot be known till the books are opened and the record of souls turned from darkness to light—of lonely, discouraged hearts, that have had new strength given them—be spread before us. The Commission being Christian at heart as well as in name, remembered the command, "Do good to all men"; "If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink."

To the Southern officers and soldiers they ministered. The same Christ was offered to them as to the boys in blue. In the hospital they fared alike, and when death came the service was read at their graves too. One of the Confederate soldiers said, with tears in his eyes, "This is what I call living Christianity." Many of them would break down and weep at the kindness they received from the members of the Christian Commission. Dying messages of the Confederate soldiers in the hospitals were just as carefully taken as those of the Union men. One poor fellow said, "You fight us like devils, but you nurse us like angels."

At length the rebellion was crushed, peace was proclaimed, and the Commission ceased to be. Years after, the leading helpers engaged in the work met for friendly Réunion, and on occasions like these Mr. Stuart generally occupied the seat of honour. After the war he had returned to business life, but he was regarded as national property, and had to live largely in the public view. It is authoritatively stated that General Grant offered him a high Cabinet office, but he declined; though he accepted and held, during the General's administration, a place on the Board of Indian Commissioners. He continued to work in different directions for the good of the nation, placing at its service his time, means, and gifts of eloquent speech.

The temperance movement, also, had his warm approval and co-operation. At one of the réunions of the Commission he told how in early life he had been in the habit of using a glass of wine now and then, as was quite common in those days. Putting up at a hotel in Pittsburg, he saw some young men whose manners and morals disgusted him, and he said: "If that is the result of using wine, I will use it no more." His last glass was drunk there.

Mr. Stuart's catholicity of spirit brought him at one time into collision with the Church courts, and he was suspended from office as an elder "on a charge of having sung hymns and communed with Christians of other evangelical denominations." This remarkable bit of Church discipline was repudiated, however, by a large proportion of the Reformed Presbyterian body.

Business reverses in 1880 stripped him of all but the confidence of his fellow-citizens, which bore fruit in providing for him an honourable position that set his mind at rest as to the means of living. During his entire life he was much afflicted with asthma, and especially toward the last. Infirmity grew with age, and last month he died at Philadelphia, full of years and of honours. He passed away gently in his sleep, and without a struggle. His memory will long be fragrant in the hearts of his fellow-countrymen. A friend, who knew him for the long period of forty years, thus writes to us:—

"Mr. Stuart's geniality, humour, overflowing enthusiasm, power to carry an audience, his command of anecdote, and his broad humanity, exceeded those of any other man I ever knew. No man in America ramified more into public life. He was the Shaftesbury of America."

Before his death Mr. Stuart was able to complete an autobiographical narrative he had been for some time compiling. It will immediately be published, and will contain a record of all the principal events in which he was an active participant, including the Anti-slavery and other movements.

HOUSE OF REST, KILBURN.—The all-day meeting on Friday was one of peculiar interest. Many present offered thanksgivings for striking and definite answers to prayer presented on previous occasions. In the morning, Miss Mason gave an address upon the true position of the Church of Christ, and its attitude towards the world. In the afternoon, Mr. R. Nixon spoke on behalf of the Railway Mission. In the evening, Mr. Reader Harris spoke to a very large gathering on the identification between the soul and the Saviour. The meeting closed with a few earnest words from Mrs. Amanda Smith, whose evangelistic labours are so well known.

West Africa.—In a letter to a lady in England who forwards to him a weekly copy of THE CHRISTIAN, Rev. Joseph Wilson, of the Baptist Mission, Ambas Bay, Victoria, West Africa, writes:—"Anything you could do to help us would be most thankfully received. Gifts of books, or such things as pins, needles, tapes, cottons, hooks and eyes, crochet and knitting needles, &c., for presents to the children of my school would be most welcome, or any books that would be helps in my pastoral work. I have a school of some sixty children, big and small, which I teach myself, in addition to my pastoral duties, for my church is too poor to pay me a full salary, much less to provide me with an assistant; and, although I am not obliged to teach the school—both day and Sabbath-school—yet I cannot bear to see the children of my people growing up in ignorance."

THE EVANGELISATION SOCIETY.

THE annual reports of the work of the Evangelisation Society are always well worth reading. The record of the twenty-second year is no exception to the rule, and from beginning to end is punctuated with expressions of thankfulness to God for the blessing which continues to attend the Society's operations. Some idea of the magnitude of the work may be formed from a consideration of a few figures. Preachers were supplied to 1042 places, at which 21,334 meetings were held, attended by about three millions of people. The evangelists numbered 227, and the average cost per meeting was only 11s. 7d.

Not only widespread but deep is the work of the evangelists whom the Society sends out. The preaching is not evanescent. As the report says: "Ministers write to tell of many of their most faithful workers and most earnest members being those who had been brought to the Lord through the meetings of the Evangelisation Society." The labourers have many difficulties to contend with. That is clear from these sentences:—"The towns and cities present constant fields for evangelistic labour. However long such services may be continued, it can never be said that any town has been completely evangelised. For the ever-changing population constantly brings new people to the district in which the mission services are held. Moreover, it is the sad experience of all that it is impossible by any means to bring under the sound of the Gospel a very large proportion of those who live close within reach of the most simple and attractive Gospel services. No invitations, no entreaties will persuade them to enter the hall."

Not less interesting and important than the town missions are some of those held in remote country districts, where, by means of tents, evangelists work in villages in which otherwise their opportunities would be sadly limited. After a visit of Mr. Skinner to Dover, Rev. George Everard wrote: "I believe many have found lasting profit and blessing. One or two couples in the parish seem greatly changed, and some who were halting between two opinions seem now quite fixed in their purpose to follow Christ." The ministers of Inverallochy conjointly testified to the blessing which attended a mission held in March this year by Mr. Cairns:—"God's heritage in the district has been profoundly aroused and revived; and it is beautiful to see old disciples rejoicing with those in their first love. A large number have obtained salvation through faith in Jesus Christ. Many backsliders have been restored. A very great number are still under deep concern. Long-existing estrangements between relatives and neighbours have been swept away as with a flood. Prayer has received an immense impulse."

are given in the report. One of these is of a man, who, while in a semi-intoxicated condition, some years ago, entered a preaching tent at Glasgow, seemed so deeply convinced of sin that he broke a bottle of whiskey which he had in his pocket, and declared that he had done with the drink for ever. The man also gave hopeful evidence of true change of heart. On returning to Glasgow this year, the evangelist had the joy of hearing that the man and his wife are diligent members of a Christian church. "Moreover, the wonderful change in this man so impressed his brother that he, too, came to hear the Gospel; and not only himself, but his wife also, are now converted and living to God. Next, the father of these two men was, through the influence of the sons, won to Christ, and four children of the different families are also professing to be the Lord's. Thus eight persons in one family have been brought out of darkness into light through that one drunkard entering the Gospel tent that summer evening."

Another evangelist writes: "Being on the Kentish coast last week, I happened to meet a man who more than nine years ago was very rich, and who then lived only for this world. In the providence of God his riches departed from him, and he was brought into great straits. While in this condition he entered a tent in Bristol, where we were holding evangelistic services. He received with faith the word then spoken, and, trusting in Christ, was able to rejoice in the forgiveness of his sins. From that time he devoted himself to the Lord's work in connection with colportage, and for six years he thus laboured in scattering the good seed of the kingdom in the homes of the people. Since then he has taken charge of a mission station, and now has the joy of preaching to others that Gospel which proved to be the power of God unto his own salvation."

The means to carry on this great work have been supplied in a very cheering manner. It is now proposed that the Society shall make some provision for its disabled evangelists; and for this purpose a fund of £50,000 is being raised, the interest of which will not produce too large a sum to meet the needs of aged and broken-down workers who are without financial resources.

SLAVERY IN EAST AFRICA.—A Reuter's telegram, dated Mombasa, May 4, states:—"Mr. Mackenzie yesterday issued an important proclamation, which was endorsed by the native governor and the elders, to the effect that in future no native belonging to the numerous tribes having treaties with the British East African Company, and living near that portion of the coast under British influence, or for a distance extending several hundred miles into the interior, can be recognised as a slave, and will obtain freedom without any compensation being paid to his master."

SOUTH AMERICA.—Rev. Andrew Milne, agent of the American Bible Society in the Argentine Republic, whose devoted labours we have chronicled from time to time, has been paying a visit to Peru. He was accompanied by Dr. Drees, superintendent of the Methodist Episcopal Mission at Buenos Ayres, who hoped to establish a mission station at Callao, as the fruit of the efforts of Signor Penzotti, the Peru agent of the Bible Society. Ecuador still shuts her doors to Protestant work, and so does Bolivia, though a good many Bibles have been distributed in the latter country at different times. The converts in Callao have been subjected to considerable persecution. The Constitution prohibits public worship outside the Romish Church, though some of the daily papers are friendly to freedom.

Notes from Cambridge.

THREE missionary studentships of £81 a year are to be given next October at Selwyn College. They are open to graduates, and are tenable for one year or longer if the Master and Council see fit. The holders are required to pursue studies suitable to the country to which they are proceeding. These studentships are not given by competition.

Archdeacon Farrar has been appointed Lady Margaret preacher.

Two more Cambridge men have offered themselves, and been accepted by the C.M.S.: W. A. Crabtree, B.A., St. Catherine's College, and Ridley Hall; and Rev. E. Bellaby, B.A., Corpus College, now a chaplain in Ceylon.

We regret to announce the death of Mr. Neville Goodman, M.A., of Peterhouse, from cancer. The deceased was a well-known and highly respected man, a strong advocate of temperance principles, and alderman of Cambs. County Council.

The afternoons at Sunnyside commenced with an address by Mr. J. Roscoe, of East Equatorial Africa.

ST. JOHN'S COLLEGE.

As early as 1805 S. John's sent one of her sons into the mission field. Rev. Henry Martyn's name is well known to all. He graduated as senior wrangler and Smith's Prizeman in 1801, and as Member's Prizeman in 1802. After being curate for a little more than two years to Mr. Simeon, he went out as chaplain to India, and there translated the New Testament into Hindustani and Persian. He died at Tokab, in Armenia, in 1812. In 1815 Rev. W. Jowett, M.A., fellow of the college, went out under the C.M.S. to labour for fifteen years in Malta, and in 1840 another fellow of the college, Rev. J. Chapman, B.D., left to spend thirteen years in South India. Since then this college has been largely represented in the mission field. The following names are among those who took part in this work:—Rev. F. F. Gough, M.A. (1849, China), the founder of the Cambridge University Prayer Union; Rev. A. H. Frost, M.A. (1853, Western India), principal of the C.M. College at Islington, 1870-74; Rev. R. Collins, M.A. (1854, for twenty-five years missionary at Travancore); Rev. J. A. Lloyd, M.A. (1876, W. India); Rev. W. Andrews, B.A. (1877, Japan); Right Rev. J. M. Speechly, D.D. (1860, Travancore); Rev. R. A. Squires, M.A. (1870, W. India); Rev. T. Walker, M.A. (1885, S. India); Rev. C. J. F. Symons, B.A. (1887, Mid-China); Rev. E. F. Miller, M.A. (1877, Ceylon); Rev. W. S. Kelley, M.A. (1886, Delhi). In connection with the Universities Mission to Central Africa:—Rev. H. C. Scudamore (1860), Rev. J. Midgley, M.A. (1873), Rev. Ch. Chapman, M.A. (1880), and Rev. W. W. Cassels, B.A., under C.I.M. Also nine missionary bishops have been Johnians.

The illustrious names connected with the college are here confined, owing to their numbers, to the mission field.

The work in the college consists of a somewhat formal Saturday night meeting for the reading of theological papers, and during the winter of a Wednesday evening prayer-meeting.

In the summer an open-air service, preceded by a prayer-meeting, is held in the town by members of the college.

John's has played an important part within the last decade in the evangelistic work carried on in Barnwell, in the public-houses, gasworks, &c.

A successful College Mission is supported by St. John's in Walworth, and much of the Christian energy is directed towards this. Undergraduates go down from time to time and spend a few days at the mission station, and it is believed that in this way much will be done towards drawing the upper and lower classes more together. Working men from the mission district have also visited Cambridge and been entertained by the undergraduates.

MR. RADCLIFFE AT SUNDERLAND.

MR. AND MRS. REGINALD RADCLIFFE, of Liverpool, and Mrs. Osborn, of Cape Town, have addressed gatherings here amongst Baptists, Brethren, Wesleyans, Congregationalists, Presbyterians, United Methodist Free Church, Salvationists, the Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A., advocating a whole-hearted surrender to Jesus Christ, and greater interest in sending the Gospel to the heathen.

Old and familiar truths were pressed home, and the laxity of the Church criticised in not fulfilling her great commission to preach the Gospel to every creature. United prayer in homes, churches, and conferences, was advocated. Mrs. Osborn spoke particularly of South Africa, pointing out the terrible effects of drink on Europeans and natives. She said there were openings for blacksmiths, boilermakers, joiners, enginemen, bricklayers, masons, &c. All these get good wages, and they might utilise the many opportunities to preach the Gospel. The results of the meetings have been encouraging, many intimating their willingness to go to the needy places of South Africa.

Obituary.

REV. J. A. WYLIE, LL.D.

ON Thursday, May 1, this well-known servant of God fell asleep at his residence, 12, Archibald-place, Edinburgh. A cold which he caught about three weeks ago developed into rather severe influenza, and under this, Dr. Wylie, who had reached the ripe age of eighty-two years, gradually sank.

For some time a minister at Dollar, in connection with the Anti-Burgher Synod, which joined the Free Church in 1852, Dr. Wylie was widely known for his uncompromising loyalty to Protestant and evangelical principles. The pretentions of the Romanists forty years ago led to the erection in Edinburgh of the Protestant Institute of Scotland. In 1860 the Protestant churches instituted an extra-mural lectureship on Popery; the appointment was conferred upon Dr. Wylie, who has since lectured during the season—from November to March—once a week in Edinburgh and Glasgow respectively.

Dr. Wylie was more distinguished as a writer than as a popular lecturer. At an early period of his literary career he was brought into prominence by the publication of a work on "Scenes in the Holy Land." He long devoted his whole strength to the study of the Popish system, of the history, character, and working of which he had a profound knowledge. Probably his most important work, finished only a few years ago, was his "History of Protestantism"; and, although then far advanced in years, on the completion of that work he began his "History of the Scottish Nation," of which three volumes have so far been given to the public. Dr. Wylie was the author of various other works, and was a frequent contributor to magazines. Quiet and unobtrusive in social life, the deceased had many friends throughout the country. His wife died many years ago, and he is survived by two daughters.

THE NATIONAL ANTI-GAMBLING LEAGUE.—The Earl of Aberdeen has consented to become President of the "National Anti-Gambling League," which has been formed for the purpose of offering a strenuous and uncompromising opposition to every form of betting and gambling, and of diffusing among young men and others wholesome information on the subject. Leaflets and booklets are being widely distributed, and lectures and public meetings are to be organised in all parts of the country. Members of the League sign a pledge promising to abstain from all kinds of betting and gambling, and to do their utmost to develop a more healthy public opinion on the subject. The hon. secretaries are Rev. J. S. Barrass and Mr. F. A. Atkins, 9, Paternoster-row, E.C. A trenchant penny booklet on the subject by Dr. Thain Davidson, is published by Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. Geo. C. Needham has been recently labouring with much encouragement in the Southern States of America.

Mr. John Maxted has held an eight days' mission at Poole, Dorset. There were a number of conversions, and believers were stirred up by the services.

Mr. J. Crofton Rainey has been holding some special services at St. Marychurch, Torquay. After the mission many confessed to having yielded themselves to Christ.

Bristol.—Special services were conducted at Kensington Baptist Chapel last week, when Rev. A. T. Jones, of Maindee, Newport, gave five addresses. Several came out to seek the Saviour.

Mrs. Tanser Dawson has conducted an eight days' mission at the Brunswick-rooms, Southampton. The rooms have been crowded, and on each occasion hearts have been filled with joy and gratitude for souls who have come to Christ. It is wonderful (says a correspondent) how one who has had scarcely any education in her life preaches the Gospel; it shows how God uses the emptied vessel.

Bow, E.—Rev. W. E. Hurndall writes with respect to the special evangelistic services held at the Bow and Bromley Institute:—We have had remarkable times. The attendances have been very large throughout; at the Sunday evening gatherings many have had to be sent away. Better than all, more than 270 have come out, declaring that they will serve the Lord. We are rejoicing greatly.

Cheltenham.—A mission has been held by Mr. John M. McAuliffe at Regent Hall, Cheltenham. Much union was manifested by evangelical Christians, and blessed results in conversions of souls and help given to Christians. On the closing evening the hall was entirely filled by workers, converts, and Christian friends uniting to praise God. Mr. McAuliffe gave a series of Bible-readings each afternoon in the rooms of Y.W.C.A.

Penzance.—Mr. W. M. Collings, evangelist on the mission ship Mystery, writes from Penzance:—A good work is going forward here on board the Gospel ship. The ship is crowded at nearly every service, and nightly some are professing to find peace in believing. Just now there are fishermen here from all parts of the country. We ask the prayers of your readers that many of them may be savingly converted during our visit. Many of the townspeople also come and hear the Gospel.

Portadown, Ireland.—The Lord is working mightily in this part of his vineyard. He has been using his servants, Miss Smith and Miss Bax, in leading many to Himself. During a fortnight's labour in Thomas-street Methodist Church crowds was reached. Night after night large congregations assembled to hear the Gospel. Many professed to find peace in believing, while numbers of church members were revived. Their last service on Sunday night was a thing to be long remembered.

Preston.—A seven days' mission, conducted by Rev. R. Balgarnie, has been held at Lancaster-road Chapel, of which Rev. A. T. Hogg is the pastor. It was preceded by special meetings for prayer and conference. The Sunday afternoon service for young people will long be remembered: the power of the Holy Spirit was manifest; indeed, it took all by surprise. Mr. Balgarnie read several documents from other missions, and signed by hundreds who have given themselves to the Lord. This was followed by the earnest questions: "What shall be the harvest here?" "Who amongst you will give yourselves to-day?" When the proposal was made to seekers to retire into the inquiry-room, a large number responded. A number afterwards returned and confessed Christ. During the subsequent nights of the mission many others followed their example. Special request for prayer were sent in, some of which were signally answered. The members of the church have been stirred up, the pastor's heart filled with joy, and the teachers greatly encouraged by seeing the ingathering of such a harvest.

Major Whittle commences a two weeks' mission at Mildmay Conference Hall on Sunday next, May 11. Bible-readings in the afternoons and evangelistic services in the evening. Singing by North London Choir. Miss Whittle will also assist. At the close of this mission Major Whittle leaves for Ireland, sailing thence for America in June.

Tom and I:

A Leaf from the Case Book of a Deaconess.

My friend Tom is a costermonger. He had become an abstainer and a professing Christian some time ago, but during a five-weeks' illness his spiritual life seemed to ripen decidedly. The enforced illness of the breadwinner brought his wife and five children into sore straits, and Tom not only manifested unfailing trust in his Saviour, but became specially concerned for the conversion of his wife. It was a hopeful case.

As he grew better and able to work, the things I most desired for him were to get 13s. 6d. of arrears of rent wiped off, and to find him a donkey. A lady who knew him brought me £2 for the latter purpose, asking that he might not be told where the money came from; and on the day, a Thursday, that I was to take it to Tom, there was put into my hands the sum of 15s. 8d., being the sixth part of a sum sent by a lady in China to be divided among various objects connected with our institution. So with a light heart and devout gratitude to the hearer of prayer I set out to visit Tom.

"Come in good time, Miss Bell," said he, after thanking me and the Giver of all good. "To-morrow's Friday, and that's the day to buy a donkey: there's a regular market of them. I'll get a good one for this money."

I saw no more of my friend till Sabbath evening. He was in his place at the meeting, devout and beaming, for Tom has a very happy smile. As we shook hands at the close, he said, "I've bad news to tell you to-morrow, Miss."

"Better tell me them now," I said; for I was very curious to know about the donkey.

"Well," he said, still smiling, "I got a moke for thirty-five shillings that seemed a good un; but when I had driven it some five miles it fell lame, and I saw I had been done."

"Oh, I'm very sorry," I said, feeling sorely vexed that the good money was lost.

"But I sold him again for the same money," said Tom with a still more radiant smile; and thereupon, before I could ask any more, we were parted in the street.

Here was a more serious vexation. Not only was the money misspent, but Tom's spiritual discernment was yet so cloudy that he seemed to see no evil in cheating another as he had been cheated himself, in order to get it back. I knew he was ignorant; but I did think he was too genuine a Christian to defraud anyone. Before going to sleep and on waking early, I could think of nothing else, and prepared over and over in my mind a little lecture in which Tom must be instructed as to the conduct becoming in a friend of Christ; how he must suffer loss rather than do wrong. By nine o'clock on Monday morning, I had got Tom alone into a room at the Mission, and said, meeting his smile with a very solemn look, "Sit down, Tom."

All through my little lecture my erring friend continued to look provokingly happy; the truth seemed to take no effect on him.

"Well, I did say to the missus last night," began Tom when I stopped, "after tellin' her about you speakin' to me at the door, I did say, 'Won't Miss Bell think I've been as bad as the fellow that cheated me."

"And were you not, Tom?" I put in eagerly. "That's just what I have been trying to show you. If it was bad in him to cheat you, it was just as bad in you to cheat someone else."

"In course," answered Tom, "I ought to have told you more. A man came up when he saw me leading the lame donkey home, and sez he, 'I thought you was done with that moke.'

"'Ye see, I am,' sez I.

"'What did ye pay,' sez the man.

"'Thirty-five,' sez I.

"'I'm sorry for ye, Tom. I think I could get that money for the moke yet.'

"'But I'm not goin' to do anybody,' I answered. 'I don't think any man will be fool enough to pay thirty-five shillin' for a moke with the string-halt.'

"'I'm not so sure o' that,' sez the man. 'There's medical chaps at a college that want a donkey to cut up—dissect they call it; and I'm to buy them one ready for killin'.' So that's how I got the money back, Miss. I ought to hev told ye, but there wasn't time last night."

We were both smiling by this time, and perhaps I was blushing a little to think of my grand lecture so carefully prepared and delivered with so much earnestness.

"The fellow that did me met me coming home with the lame brute, and held out half a sovereign, with a shame-faced look; but I told him I could get a knacker to kill it for nothing."

"Was that before you sold it again?" I asked.

"Yes, it was, Miss."

Tom has now a splendid donkey—one that can gallop on occasion—for which he paid two pounds ten shillings. He is learning to read, and is very anxious to be able to teach his children. He regards every particular of the transaction by which he has got back to a state of comparative prosperity as a special answer to prayer; and who shall say he is wrong?

Personalia.

Archdeacon Farrar has been obliged to seek rest and change in North Italy. The health of Mrs. Farrar, as much as his own, necessitated departure from London.

Mr. Joseph Connellan, brother of Rev. Thomas Connellan, is to contribute to next month's Christian Irishman an article, "From Bondage to Liberty," describing the steps by which he was led to a knowledge of the truth.

Rev. G. S. Reaney, formerly of Stepney, who has lately resigned the pastorate of Cavendish Congregational Chapel, Manchester, and who was at one time in the Baptist ministry, is about to be ordained in the Church of England.

Sir Arthur Blackwood, who is leaving Shortlands, in Kent, has been presented with an address from representatives of the many institutions at Beckenham which have profited by his sympathy and aid. Sir Arthur confessed that he was bound by peculiar ties of affection to the district, for it was in the Rectory garden, thirty-four years ago, that Miss Marsh had been the instrument of turning his thoughts towards the way of salvation.

The Bishop of Manchester last week delivered an address to the members of the Nonconformist Students' Association—comprising the theological students at the various Nonconformist colleges in Manchester and district—at the Lancashire Independent College, Whalley Range. In some prefatory remarks, the Bishop declared his conviction that the kingdom of God was greater than any one of its provinces, and expressed his hope that there might be, ere long, a real, if not a formal, union of all Protestant Evangelical Christians.

Mr. R. J. Curtis, so long connected with the Ragged School movement in London, has relinquished active work at the ripe age of 74. His retirement was the occasion of an interesting gathering of friends and fellow-workers last week at the King Edward-street Ragged Schools, Spitalfields. A number of gentlemen expressed the feelings of esteem and goodwill in which Mr. Curtis is held on account of his earnest lifework for the good of the destitute children. A richly illuminated address, a gold watch, and a purse of money were presented to Mr. Curtis, who, in his reply, urged the friends of the poor to continued effort on their behalf.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on the following:—Special services, conducted by Mr. James Dykes, at the Soldiers' Institute, Sandgate, from May 10 to 23.——A mission by Mr. J. Canning, in Mizpah Hall, Glasgow, during the month of May.——An eight days' mission at Avonwick, near Ivybridge, S. Devon, commencing May 11, by Mr. J. C. Rainey.——A Conference of China missionaries in Shanghai, May 7 to 17.——Special tent services being conducted by Mr. John Elliott at Malmesbury, in connection with the Y.M.C.A.

BIBLE STUDY.

THE ANGEL'S MESSAGE (MARK xvi. 6, 7).

I.—Jesus was crucified.—We cannot enter into the joy and blessedness which come from knowing Jesus as the risen Lord, unless we first know Him as the crucified Saviour who has redeemed us from: (1) The curse of the law.—"Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us" (Gal. iii. 13). "He hath made Him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him" (2 Cor. v. 21). "Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood" (Rev. v. 9). (2) The power of the enemy.—"That through death He might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil" (Heb. ii. 14). "The Father...hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son, in whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins" (Col. i. 13, 14).

II.—He is risen, so we are called unto: (1) Life.—"Because I live, ye shall live also" (John xiv. 19). "I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me" (Gal. ii. 20). "He that abideth in Me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit; for without Me (severed from Me) ye can do nothing" (John xv. 5). "Your life is hid with Christ in God" (Col. iii. 3). (2) Liberty.—"In that He died, He died unto sin once; but in that He liveth, He liveth unto God. Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord. Let not sin, therefore, reign in your mortal body, that ye should obey it in the lusts thereof" (Rom. vi. 10-12); also ver. 22: "Whom God hath raised up, having loosed the pains of death; because it was not possible that He should be holden of it." "The Lord hath anointed Me...to proclaim liberty to the captives." "If the Son...shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed" (Acts ii. 24; Isa. lxi. 1; John viii. 36). (3) Victory.—"Be of good cheer; I have overcome the world" (John. xvi. 33). "Greater is He that is in you, than he that is in the world" (1 John iv. 5). "Whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world; and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith" (1 John v. 4). "More than conquerors through Him that loved us" (Rom. viii. 37). "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin: and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Cor. xv. 55-57).

III.—He goeth before you.—(1) To prepare his disciples for further service: (a) Giving them their commission.—"Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature" (Mark xvi. 15).

(b) Enduing them with power.—"When He ascended up on high, He led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men" (Eph. iv. 8). "Being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, He hath shed forth this, which ye now see and hear" (Acts ii. 33). "They were all filled with the Holy Ghost" (Acts ii. 4).

(2) To prepare a home for them.—"I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also" (John xiv. 2, 3).

IV.—There shall ye see Him.—(1) In the path of service.—"As they went to tell his disciples, behold, Jesus met them" (Matt. xxviii. 9). "They rose up the same hour, and returned to Jerusalem ...and they told what things were done in the way, and how He was known of them in breaking of bread. And as they thus spake, Jesus Himself stood in the midst" (Luke xxiv. 33-36). (2) In the home in glory.—"Thine eyes shall see the King in his beauty" (Isa. xxxiii. 17). "When He shall appear, we shall be like Him; for we shall see Him as He is" (1 John iii. 2). "His servants shall serve Him; and they shall see his face" (Rev. xxii. 3, 4).

JANET CLARK.

"A MINISTERIAL EXPERIENCE."—That there are two sides to every question has been forcibly illustrated by "A Deacon's" version of the experience which "A Pastor" gave in our issue of April 18. The tone of the second communication, signed "W.," is as excellent as the statements are obviously made in good faith. Without pursuing the matter further, we are glad to quote from the letter of the late deacon: "If Christ's work is now progressing, and spirituality of life is being developed in the church, I can only rejoice at such evidences of the Lord's presence."

IN THE CONGO REGION.

DEAR SIR,—You have heard, I daresay, that our first station at Lolongo was established at the end of August last, and it is just two months since the second, here at Ikou, was planted, at which Brother Haupt and myself are stationed. We are in the centre of the very populous district of Bas'nkusa, and about two miles below the confluence of the Lopori and the Maringa forming the River Lulanga, and about 120 miles from the Congo; the farthest outpost, I believe, reached from the West Coast.

What vast multitudes of souls all around us, living and dying without God! How one's heart yearns over them, longing to be able to make known to them in their own tongue the good news. The Lord has given us an open door amongst them, and while engaged in house building and other pioneer work, we are not forgetting application to the language. Will your readers pray that we may soon acquire it, and that meanwhile our lives may testify what our lips too fain would utter; and that the Lord would prepare the people to receive his Word?

The slave trade prevails very largely on this river, not of course by Arabs, but by the people themselves. Canoes laden with poor creatures pass every day down from the upper rivers. I saw the Governor-General of the Congo Independent State in October last, and told him of this, and we trust that measures will soon be taken against the trade. Thank God, we have not the cursed European and American rum and gin to contend against; may He grant that it may be kept from these peoples, who so much resemble children in many ways. A few days ago, however, we heard that a Romish priest and his steamer Leo XIII. had been up this river surveying the land. We fear that the Jesuits may have their plans for going up this populous river. Whatever they do, we do not fear. We do ask the prayers of Christian friends at home that we may all be made and kept always meet for the Master's use.—Yours faithfully,

P. WHYTOCK.

Congo Balolo Mission Station, Ikou, Lulanga River, Upper Congo, Jan. 17.

IRELAND.—Evangelistic services have been held by Mr. G. Cummings, in the Baptist Church, Banbridge; by Mr. Geo. T. Diver, in the Orange Hall, Poyntz Pass, co. Armagh; by Miss Smith and Miss Bax, in the Methodist Church, Portadown; and in Blythe-street, Belfast, by Mr. J. Coulter.

Y.W.C.A., RAMSGATE.—The members of the Y.W.C.A. here have long felt the need of a Home and Institute. Now God has opened the way. The Home and Institute at 119, High-street, was recently opened at a public meeting. The Home is ready to receive young women as boarders, and it is hoped that many young women will avail themselves of its advantages. The hon. superintendent is Miss Schudt. Great has been the encouragement and blessing the Lord has sent already, in many ways, spiritual and temporal. Lady Kinnaird visited the Home; she was much pleased with all its arrangements, and very kindly offered to give a harmonium. The gift of a piano would be welcome. Miss E. Gollmer, 99, West Cliff-road, Ramsgate, is hon. treasurer.

SOLDIERS IN NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—Some four months since a Soldier's Home was opened in Ancrum-street, Spital Tongues, for the benefit of the troops in the barracks. A goodly number of soldiers turn in each evening to read the papers, write letters, amuse themselves, and for Bible study, prayer, and praise. Friends are sending books for the Home library. Three meetings are held weekly. On Saturday week Mrs. M. S. Osborn, well known for her devoted labours among the soldiers in Africa, was present, and gave an account of her work at the Cape. Mr. Reginald Radcliffe and others also addressed the meeting. At the close two soldiers belonging to the artillery gave their hearts to God. Communications respecting the work should be addressed to Mr. A. Draper, at the Home.

Shall we know one another in Heaven?

QUESTION.

YOU say my unsatisfied longings will be satisfied in heaven. But may I really think so? I feel as if all must be so changed in us and about us when we get there. I dare not think that our earthly affections are worthy of that place. Shall we know one another in heaven? Or, if we do, shall we care? Shall we not be indifferent to all but God?

ANSWER.

I was much touched by your words, dear friend! It is hard to feel so lonely at heart year after year. The world does not pity those who have never had those dearest ties, as it does those who have had, and have lost them; but I believe the Lord does. He knows there is not much to choose between the sharp pain of the one, and the dull, unsatisfied aching of the other. It is hard: hard to go about with a heart full of love, and find no one to let it out fully upon—all cast back upon itself; to long for companionship, and find no one to tell one's inmost thoughts to. Some feel this loneliness, having all they most loved in heaven. You feel they are on earth, and you might help them, but are not allowed. That is harder still. But yet, I confess I was amazed when you asked me that question. How shall I answer it? Where shall I begin?

First, were there no other word in the Bible, we have this: "Delight thyself in the Lord, and He shall give Thee the desires of thine heart." Not happiness, in some vague shape or other, but "the desires of thine heart." This is not true on earth, therefore it must come true in heaven. It is the very incompleteness of things—the strange raising of hope and desire, and then dashing them down; it is these which give the promise its brightness. If we ever got what we wanted here, then we might say, "Soul, you ought to be satisfied; you have received your good things, expect nothing more." But no! The Lord never satisfies us, and yet He has said He will.

But, you say, are our desires worthy to be satisfied? I only know one way of finding out, and that is by going on to delight ourselves in the Lord more and more. When our hearts are hot about anything, do we not go to God with it? Do we not open our hearts to Him, telling Him all we long for; how we cannot help the longing; going into all the particulars, the temptations, telling the thoughts which we feel are sinful, and the thoughts about which we are not sure whether they are sinful or not? If we are childlike Christians, we do. Getting drawn nearer to the Lord and feeling his tender sympathy, we understand at last that He loves us so well that we can do without other love, if it be really his will. And at such times we are able, in some measure, to distinguish between the false desires and the true. In his presence wounded pride is hushed, selfish longings to be first fade away, impatience dies out. We can wait to be blessed, in God's time and way. But does the love for those we have once loved ever grow less? Does the wish to see them and talk to them some time ever die out? Do we ever feel ashamed of these as of unholy things? I think not.

Where did human imagination get that idea of being, as you say, indifferent to everything but God? Do you find that commanded us anywhere in Scripture? Do you find that as Christians get holier and nearer to God they get more indifferent or more loving? We often forget it, but it is true that the life of heaven is only the continuation of the life we live by the Spirit here. We are not to be changed at death, so as not to know ourselves. It is here, now, that we are being changed into the same image from glory to glory by the Spirit of the Lord. Then, all that will happen will be that the fetters that have hindered the spiritual life will fall off, and we shall be free to be our renewed selves. If I thought I should not love in heaven in the special way you mean, I should begin at once, and not love here, for then this love would be sin. But you know it is not a sin. You know God allows it and blesses it—nay, that He cultivates it. Why should He extinguish it at last?

I think we utterly mistake the meaning of our sorrows when we conclude that God takes away our dear ones because we love too much. How do we know God does not send bereavement just to make us love more, and especially to make us love in a different way: never to make us love less? There is so much selfishness in love when one is young. It is, after all, one's own joy and delight that one seeks in the loved one, and there is so much exclusiveness that often one would hardly care if all the world were suffering so that oneself and one's friend were happy. Then it flatters self-love to be loved and to feel one has the power to make happy. These things are but the husks of the true friendship. It lives on after they have all been purged away. We live to find we can love on though the love should bring no personal joy or comfort; though we should have no power of helping the loved one but by prayer. And we get to feel that if we ever came together again it would not be just to settle down and enjoy each other as if there were none besides, but that we might help each other to do God's will and to comfort the lonely.

Long ago we chose our friends in a sort of self-will. Now, we feel in such a solemn way that God chose for us even while we thought we chose; and, because He chose, they must be the best for us out of all the universe; and, because He chose, his choice must stand for ever.

We might love every soul in heaven with a burning love. I am sure we shall; but we could never tell our secrets to any but those made to understand us. There are prayers to be answered, there are blessings to be praised for; and shall not those who have wept together be the very ones to rejoice together? Yes, the Word says so: "That he that soweth and he that reapeth may rejoice together."

Dear friend! Do not think all your lonely hours wasted. It is in this way that God is purifying your heart so that you may be able, one day, to love, and yet not idolise; to love without self-love. It is worth all the pain. And it will be.

But I have wandered from my subject. You are still only half-satisfied, and want proof. Look at what Paul said. "We are your rejoicing, even as ye are ours, in the day of the Lord Jesus" (2 Cor. i. 14). Paul certainly expected to individualise his converts. This passage appears to me conclusive. It is true the Bible does not say much directly on the subject, but I think the Bible is written, from end to end, as if God expected us to be natural and human, and as if his own loving purpose were not to destroy but to fulfil what He has made.

Look at Abraham. God required of him Isaac. Why? To show him that his love was misplaced? No, but to give him Isaac back again, and not another. So I think God requires us to surrender all, unconditionally, and then He gives back again.

Look at Job. He got twice the number of camels and sheep and asses to make up for what he had lost. But he did not get twice the number of children, only the same number over again. Why? Because the dead children were his still!

Look at Israel. The whole history is one great type of earth's chastisement and bereaved hopes. Everything lost: the land that God had given his people passed to strangers! And why was God so minutely particular about that land? Every man his own plot, his own inheritance, his own family? There is no encouragment here given to the idea that all are alike, and that it is all the same where a man comes from or to whom he belongs.

No, God is seen busy all along, making history; that is to say, making links between man and man; father and son; people and land. God never forgets one of those links. He holds them all in his hand. All seem broken for the people's sin. But what is to happen in the "Times of the restitution of all things"? Jesus is to come down to his old familiar Mount of Olives, and the people are to get their land again, every man his own. God says to Daniel: "Go thy way, for thou shalt rest, and stand in thy lot in the end of the days." Daniel's lot would not be the same as yours or mine; would it? Here is individualising. "Every man his own reward." Abraham's land is his, although he only had a grave on it when on earth. Now, is Abraham to have his land, and David his throne, and the people the very dumb hills and plains that they loved; and am I not to have my own? Impossible. All the more impossible, if, like Abraham, you have never yet had your own in this world.

Perhaps you do not believe these things are literal? I do. But if not, they must certainly be types of something, and of what are they types? Oh, believe in the tenderness of your human Saviour, and weep out your heart at his feet, and tell Him all these things; all that you would like to tell your dearest friend or your wisest counsellor. He knows, and He will answer.

M. L. DODDS.

Two sterling booklets by Lady Beaujolois Dent are: THE BLOODSTAINED GARMENT and READING AND RUNNING. 1s. per dozen. Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling. They set forth the Gospel in its fulness and power, and deserve to be widely circulated.

The Book World.

EDELWEISS. Poésies par l'Auteur des "Horizons Prochains." 3 francs 50 cents. Paris: Calmann Lévy, 3, Rue Auber. Varied in topic and metre, these poems interpret a strong spiritual sense. "Pourquoi?" suggests in powerful language thoughts which many minds are able to realise, though few can express in words.

SCRIPTURE SUBJECTS AND CHRISTIAN ASPIRATIONS IN VERSE. By George A. Levick. 1s. J. & A. Mack, 28, Paternoster-row. A collection of poems, many of them hymns, setting forth great themes of God's Word. The verses have the ring of genuine truth about them. Among the best compositions may be mentioned some on the coming of the Lord.

THE EXILE'S RETURN, and other poems. By E. H. B. 2s. 6d. G. J. Palmer. Most of these verses were written, says the young author, within a few months, and they certainly bear on the surface marks of crudeness. He has read many poets, and attempts many metres. As advice is asked, we should say: Think more deeply, observe more closely, finish and polish more carefully, and don't publish again for at least five years.

THE GREAT PROTESTANT CRUSADE AT BRIGHTON: REV. DR. FULTON AND THE BISHOP. 1s. Kensit. Dr. Fulton's addresses in August last made a great stir at Brighton, and in this book Rev. John Thornberry presents, with notes, reports of lectures, sermons, and newspaper correspondence. Many will be glad to possess this record of the controversy, while to not a few, we trust, the exposure of Romanism may prove useful in these days when the system is more and more a power for evil in Great Britain.

OPEN-AIR MISSION REPORT. 6d. 14, Duke-street, Adelphi, W.C. The thirty-seventh report of the Open-air Mission is a document of exceptional interest, describing, as it does, a difficult missionary enterprise under various aspects. Those who are sceptical as to the good done by this kind of preaching should certainly read it, as the facts recorded and the cases here given attest the truth of the old declaration that God's word does not return void, even though preached amid the turmoil of life's highway. The pictorial illustrations are striking, and lend an additional charm to this record of street preaching.

LES DROITS ET LES TORTS DE LA PAPAUTÉ. Par E. Petavel-Olliff. Paris: Librairie Fischbacher, 33, Rue de Seine. An essay having many attractions, alike for the exegete and the dutiful Christian. Dr. Petavel finds the head of the Roman Catholic Church in the "servant" of which our Lord spoke in Matt. xxiv. 45 to end. Instead of dispensing food to those over whom they have found themselves, the popes have, as the parable foreshadows, "beaten their fellow-servants," and indulged in immoral and demoralising excesses. That Christ intended this parable specifically to depict the Romish apostasy we cannot believe. Nevertheless, Dr. Petavel's pages will prove of great interest to all who make a thorough study of Romanism in the light of Holy Scripture. We rejoice to note that a distinction is maintained between the Papal system and those who are its victims or devotees. Protestants, who (alas! with full reason) look upon the Roman Catholic Church as inimical to true religion, are properly reminded that our Lord has counselled us to "pray for our enemies."

THE OPEN-AIR PREACHER'S HANDBOOK. By Gawin Kirkham. 2s. Morgan & Scott. A well-planned book, having a definite object, and calculated to prove of value to a large class of Christian workers. As secretary of the Open-Air Mission, the author has had ample opportunity of learning the needs of young and inexperienced preachers, and in these pages he has given ample directions as to the work of preparation, and needful hints as to manner of delivery. Responding to a frequent request to publish, for the guidance of others, some outlines of his own highly appreciated addresses, Mr. Kirkham has added chapters embodying very helpful skeleton sermons. Not professing to be a treatise on Homiletics, this is a handbook of an essentially practical character, and sure to be serviceable to many who require advice as to how to proceed in boldly proclaiming Christ to the people. Everything that kindness and earnest solicitude could suggest seems to have been said in these pages, which, coming from the pen of an industrious labourer in the Lord's vineyard, will certainly repay perusal by many besides workers in the open air.

HARNESS FOR A PAIR. By J. J. Ellis. Co-operative Publishing Company. The author has a vigorous style and a realistic manner of description, but he begins so abruptly that the leading characters are but vaguely set before the reader. The villany of Silas Methwin, the infatuation of Madge, are extraordinary, but fact is often stranger than fiction, and, if this tale warns one young girl against a hasty marriage, it will not be written in vain.

THE WIDER HOPE is the title of a volume of essays and strictures on the Doctrine and Literature of Future Punishment. Some of the essays are taken from reviews; others are chapters from books by different authors. The work contains contributions, orthodox and otherwise, from clerical and lay writers. The whole have been brought together by Mr. James Hogg, and at the end there is a list of recent works on eschatological themes. (7s. 6d. T. Fisher Unwin.)

DOROTHY'S VOCATION. By Evelyn Everett Green. 2s. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier. Dorothy is the Cinderella of her family; while her two sisters enjoy themselves, she is domestic, industrious, and unselfish. By a simple but ingenious chain of circumstances she wins the heart of a "country cousin" who turns out to be a "prince in disguise." Dorothy finds her vocation, and well deserves her reward. The tone of the book is healthy, and the aim high.

POETIC PARAPHRASES. By Mrs. George C. Needham. J. E. Hawkins. A book of gems. Its author knows the truth, and she enforces many phases thereof. Varied in metre, the verses are all one in inspiration; their theme is God in Christ, in past, present, and future manifestations. Grace and truth, faith and love are each and all celebrated, while songs of hope—looking onward to things yet to be revealed—are numerous, and wholesome because founded on the "sure word of prophecy."

A BRIEF BUT BEAUTIFUL LIFE. Partridge & Co. Records of a sweet Christian girl told with unusual delicacy and discretion. Her letters to friends at school blend in a wonderful way Christian earnestness with child-like simplicity and enjoyment of things innocent. Her patience and brightness in painful illness put to shame many who are older in the Christian life. Her verses are often full of true poetry. This little book should teach Christian mothers what to pray for, and Chistian children what to aim at, if they would glorify their Saviour.

THE MALE CHOIR: A Collection of Gospel Hymns and Sacred Songs. Arranged expressly for male voices by Ira D. Sankey and George C. Stebbins. Containing ninety-five pieces. 1s. 6d. Morgan & Scott. The male choirs throughout the country will welcome this selection. Mr. Sankey has given in this volume many new and a good number of old favourites; and the majority of the pieces are well within the range of ordinary voices. Nothing is more effective in a Gospel meeting than a well-rendered chorus by male voices, and Y.M.C.A.'s would do well to organise local choirs, and introduce a few of these pieces at their open-air and other gatherings.

HISTORY OF THE SCOTTISH NATION. By Rev. J. A. Wylie, LL.D. Vol. iii. Simpkin, Marshall & Co. This volume traces the story from the union of Scots and Picts in 843 to the death of Alexander III. in 1286. There is no slackening of the venerable author's discrimination between fact and fiction, and no abatement of the absorbing interest, as ancient topics give place to mediæval events. The treatment is comprehensive, and the style graphic. The testimony of the Culdees, under varying conditions, and the labours of Columba along with the outcome thereof, are admirably described. Scholarly and thorough, this history will make for itself a place in literature; we regret to think that the death of the author will leave the work unfinished.

JÉSUS LAÏQUE. Conférence par Théodore Monod. Paris: 33, Rue des Saints Pères. A terse booklet adapted to the needs of the day in France. Clericalism involves caste, which is, with ample reason, distrusted by wide-awake Frenchmen. The lay spirit is the opposite of this, and broadly human. Jesus was lay, one of the people; he had neither the status nor the spirit of the cleric, as that functionary is known in France. These things are shown in generous language in this booklet, and in conclusion we have this appeal to thoughtful readers:—"Would you be wholly Christian? Be broadly human: be lay. Would you be truly lay? Open your souls to all truth of every order: be Christian." The tract is emphatically one for the times, and will doubtless be widely circulated in France.

THE CHRISTIAN TRAVELLER'S CONTINENTAL HANDBOOK. Edited by Rev. R. S. Ashton, B.I This is the fourth edition, enlarged, of a boo which meets a felt want of the travelling publi Compiled by the Secretary of the Evangelica Continental Society, the chief aim is to direc attention to Christian operations in Europea countries, so as to facilitate visits to some of them In the case of France, several short tours hav been sketched out.

THE NEW SYMBOLS; or, Suggestions as t Future Divine Punishments. By William Fether ston H. Dublin: Hodges, Figgis & Co., Grafton-street The author would "correct" views he expressed many years ago in a book entitled, "Primeva Symbols." He has now adopted opinions whicl are all but Universalist in character. Scripture i much quoted in support of the theories advanced but we do not hesitate to say that it is to a large extent quoted in a manner which ignores its true sense and purpose.

THE EARLY CHRISTIAN CHURCH AND OTHER ESSAYS. By Thomas Kimber. New York: David S. Taber & Co., 56, Lafayette-place. This goodly volume presents the results of patient research and long study on worship and ministry, church order and organisation, and the relation of the Apostle Paul to the Gentile churches. A member of the Society of Friends, the author has treated much-debated topics without showing anything like a spirit of criticism or dogmatism. We do not follow him on all points, but we appreciate his good motive, admire his lucid style, and think highly of his thoughtful contribution to the cause of simple spiritual Christianity. The work deals with many practical questions, and will prove instructive to Christians in general, as well as stimulating to members of the denomination of which the author is an influential and cultured member.

MESSRS. CASSELL & CO.'S SERIALS.

THE DICTIONARY OF RELIGION, which is now being issued in serial form, is a very useful encyclopædia of Christian and other religious doctrines, sects, heresies, ecclesiastical terms, history, biography, &c. The editor, Rev. Wm. Benham, B.D., has taken a broad view of things, being desirous to furnish information rather than argue questions of faith and practice in a dogmatic spirit. The work is to be completed in eighteen monthly parts, at 6d. each.

THE HOLY LAND AND THE BIBLE, by Dr. Cunningham Geikie, has reached Part 8, which deals with Beersheba and South-west Palestine. Natural features and native customs are graphically described.

Part 14 of CONQUESTS OF THE CROSS continues the story of the Gospel in China, referring in detail to the work of General Gordon and other illustrious servants of Christ. The miracles of grace in the East Indian Archipelago are also narrated.

THE PILGRIM'S PROGRESS AND THE HOLY WAR. This issue of Bunyan's great works will soon be complete. Part 20 leaves chapter x. of the "War" yet unfinished.

In the cheap illustrated edition (3d. each part) of Farrar's LIFE OF CHRIST the Gospel history has been carried forward to the time of the first miracle.

THE HISTORY OF PROTESTANTISM, by Rev. Dr Wylie, completes its second volume with part 24 which is devoted to a statement of the struggles of the Reformed faith in France during the latter half of the sixteenth century. The outstanding events are the Huguenot wars, the massacre of St. Bartholomew, and the resurrection of Huguenotism, each of which is vividly depicted.

Part 68 of the OLD TESTAMENT COMMENTARY FOR ENGLISH READERS, edited by Bishop Ellicott, is taken up with the Book of Isaiah, chapters xxx. to xlii. The text of the prophecy is given in full, arranged in paragraphs, with references. The commentary is at once lucid and thorough, critical and expository.

THE LIBRARY OF ENGLISH LITERATURE.—Part 16 continues the illustration of religious literature, from 1590 to 1622. The sketch of Richard Hooker is a specially noteworthy section. —THE WORLD OF ADVENTURE, in Part 20, is as diverting as ever. The contents include Waterton's wonderful ride on a cayman, and stories of daring on sea and land.—Part 43 of CASSELL'S ILLUSTRATED HISTORY OF ENGLAND gives an account of the social progress and intellectual activity of the first half of the last century, and enters upon the narrative of the eventful reign of George III.

Letter to the Editor.

INFIDEL TACTICS.

DEAR SIR,—I have noticed your timely warning with reference to the distribution of infidel literature by means of leaflets cunningly inserted amongst Gospel tracts. The mention of a recent instance of this kind may cause your warning to be more heeded. Twice within the past few weeks I have received anonymous parcels of tracts for distribution among the sick and the dying, in which we have found the most blasphemous leaflets, got up in such a way that one cannot doubt they are intended to imitate illustrated Gospel leaflets. In order further to deceive, they have been inserted between the pages of a larger tract.

There are, then, in the Freethinking (?) fraternity those whose sense of honour is such that they are able to circulate their writings by means of deceit; and their brotherly love is of a variety that permits them to intrude their painful influences upon the sick and the dying.—Faithfully yours,

F. A. PRING, M.R.C.S.

INQUIRERS' COLUMN.

SIR,—I wish to ask a question on the matter of "Restitution." A pickpocket is converted, but one day some legal fears stare him in the face. He is told that he must restore any theft fourfold. He is utterly unable even to recognise the many persons he has stolen from, and is in despair. Then someone tells him to restore as far as he is able. He looks in his Bible, and can find no warrant for so doing. In the Epistles he reads: "Owe no man anything." But he also reads: "Let him that stole steal no more." This question is a very serious one, as, of course, it includes past laziness, even in service, and many other matters.

L. L. T.

REPLY.

If a man be truly converted to God, the desire of his heart will be to glorify God in all his acts. He is not under the law, but under grace. This, however, insures and effects an intelligent, active, and loving obedience. When God restores Israel, He will write his laws in their hearts, at the same time that "their sins and their iniquities He will remember no more." If the converted pickpocket's will is brought into subjection to Christ, he will get such guidance as he needs from time to time. If he cannot restore again in consequence of ignorance as to the persons wronged, or through inability, he will be accepted "according to that he hath, not according to that he hath not." For the flow of obedience from a loving heart, Christ opens the channels; and, if on the watch, power and opportunity combine. Zaccheus is a Bible example of how restitution should be made.

DEAR SIR,—Would you give a short explanation of Heb. vi. 4-6? In what sense did Paul mean that he should become a castaway if he kept not his body in subjection under him? (1 Cor. ix. 27).

H. B.

REPLY.

The following is the writer's line of argument in Heb. vi. 4-6:—"I have laid a foundation (no definite article), and I cannot lay another. If you slip aside from this, I have no other to put you upon. Therefore, whilst you continue thus you are crucifying to yourself the Son of God afresh," &c. There is no assertion as to final perdition, but to the present state only, which, if continued in, however, would prove fatal. It must be borne in mind that this Epistle is addressed to the Jews. In that nation at this time there must have been a sharply defined difference of opinion as to Jesus Christ, and there was no escape from the alternative of acknowledging Him Son of God and Saviour, or calling Him accursed. The words "seeing that they crucify" are represented in the original by the present participle only—"crucifying;" R.V. "while they crucify."

In 1 Cor. ix. 24-27, the Apostle compares the Christian life to a race, in which others besides those who receive the prize take part. Our Lord presented the same view of things, when He said: "Strive to enter in at the strait gate; for many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in, and shall not be able" (Luke xiii. 24). When, referring to his "striving," the Apostle said he kept his body under, and brought it into subjection, he was not boasting of his own act, but magnifying the grace of God; again, when he declared himself to do this, lest, "after having preached to others," he should himself come short of the prize, he was not expressing doubt as to his own salvation. The lesson is: if "earthly things" are allowed to impede the runner he will lose the race.

DEAR SIR,—May anyone who, in early life, has been guilty of grievous sin, but who, by God's mercy, has been pardoned and restored through the precious blood of Christ, aspire to become a missionary? Are there any self-supporting missionaries?

A. M. S.

REPLY.

A man, when "pardoned and restored through the precious blood of Christ," is in all respects a new creature. In God's sight the past is effaced. "Such were some of you, but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified, in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God" (1 Cor. vii. 11). Many of the ablest ministers of the grace of God, have (like John Newton) been fetched out from the depths of sin. Such can say from the heart,

Amazing grace, how sweet the sound,
That saved a wretch like me.

Strictly speaking, a man must not aspire to anything, but he must suffer the Lord to lift up, or cast down, knowing no will but his. There must not be any imitation of others, or fleshly ambition. Let the will be surrendered to Christ the Lord, and the reins of government put into his hands; then a man may follow his guidance, supported or self-supporting according to faith.

MILDMAY CONFERENCE—1890.

"Behold, I have given Him for a Witness to the people, a Leader and Commander to the people."

SUCH, beloved Christian friends, is the subject from the Word of God which will, we are sure, with the Divine blessing, afford much instruction, enjoyment, and profit to "the people"—even the people of the Lord—at the approaching Conference to which we now invite you.

To contemplate the Lord Jesus Christ in the various aspects in which He is presented to us in the Scriptures of truth, to "consider Him" who is "the Apostle and High Priest of our profession," can never fail, under the gracious teaching of the Holy Ghost, to refresh the hearts and encourage the faith of them that trust in Him. In Him is inexhaustible fulness, even "the fulness of the Godhead bodily," and, as we are led to meditate upon Him in the different relations which He occupies towards us, we realise his marvellous suitability to all our needs, and thus, sitting down "under his shadow," we find "his fruit sweet to our taste." The more directly we are engaged with the person of our adorable Redeemer, the more conformed to his image do we become, the more fitted are we to do his will, and to walk worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called.

While a few passages have been selected, as exhibiting some of the teachings of Scripture regarding the characters which are ascribed to the Lord Jesus Christ in the words of the prophet, we shall by no means be restricted to them at the Conference, and we trust that the brethren who will address us may be taught of God to bring forth out of their treasure, "things new and old" concerning Him as "The faithful and true Witness"—the gracious, wise, and skilful "Leader"—the omnipotent and triumphant "Commander" of his redeemed.

For do we not want, beloved friends, in these last days, a keener perception, and a more whole-hearted reception of his testimony in its all-sufficient revelation of the whole counsel of God—do we not deeply realise the need of his guidance in such increasingly perilous times, and will it not, above all, be well to be reminded of his commandments, and of our responsibility to obey them?

We earnestly hope that, coming together again by his good providence in the place where prayer is wont to be made, to wait upon Him, to sit at his feet, and to hear his word, we shall find that "Jesus Himself" will lovingly "draw near," and expound unto us in all the Scriptures the things concerning Himself? And if so, what a holy, helpful, happy Conference will it be. Surely He desires it more, far more than do his servants, and is therefore willing, as well as able, to make it an occasion of such blessing, of such communion with Himself, and of such renewed consecration to his service as we have never had before.

Let us plead, beloved brethren, unitedly, earnestly, importunately, for such a time. Nothing will make us what we ought to be but the deepest, fullest inflow of spiritual life and power, nothing will enable us to minister to the needs of dying, sinful men around us but the rich indwelling of Christ himself by the Holy Ghost. In him we are not straitened. "He waiteth to be gracious." He waits for us to wait upon him. May He bestow on us that insatiable desire for more of Himself in our hearts and lives that shall be the prelude to the reception of power from on high to serve Him who hath "loved us and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father."

The conference will be held, God willing, on June 25, 26, and 27. In the hope of sharing with you then the abundant provision of our Father's house,—We remain, beloved friends, yours affectionately in his service,

S. A. BLACKWOOD, A. R. PENNEFATHER,
J. E. MATHIESON, J. HERBERT TRITTON,
HARRY C. NISBET, EDWARD TROTTER,
Trustees of the Conference Hall.
J. F. MORTON,
Superintendent of the Conference Hall.

SUBJECTS OF CONFERENCE.

Wednesday, June 25.—"THE LORD JESUS CHRIST THE WITNESS."—I tell you the truth. For this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth. We speak that we do know, and testify that we have seen. I speak to the world those things which I have heard of Him. I speak that which I have seen with my Father. He whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God. His name is called, the Word of God. The faithful and true Witness. A true witness delivereth souls. (John xvi. 7. John xviii. 37. John iii. 11. John viii. 26. John viii. 38. John iii. 34. Rev. xix. 13. Rev. iii. 14. Prov. xiv. 25.)

Thursday, June 26.—"THE LORD JESUS CHRIST, THE LEADER." I am the Lord thy God...which leadeth thee. I lead in the way of righteousness. He shall gently lead. I will lead on softly. I will lead them in paths they have not known. He calleth his own sheep by name, and leadeth them out. He led them through the depths. Into darkness. With a cloud. Like a flock. By the right way. He leadeth me beside the still waters. He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness. The Lamb, which is in the midst of the throne, shall lead them unto living fountains of waters. (Isa. xlviii. 17. Prov. viii. 20. Isa. xl. 11. Gen. xxxiii. 14. Isa. xlii. 16. John x. 3. Ps. cvi. 9. Lam. iii. 2. Ps. lxxviii. 14. Ps. lxxvii. 20. Ps. cvii. 7. Ps. xxiii. 2. Ps. xxiii. 3. Rev. vii. 17.)

Friday, June 27.—"THE LORD JESUS CHRIST, THE COMMANDER."—The Prince of Life. A Prince and a Saviour. The Captain of their salvation. Command deliverances. I will command my blessing upon you. Even life for evermore. The Lord will command his loving-kindness in the daytime. Thy God hath commanded thy strength. These things I command you, that ye love one another. If ye love me, keep my commandments. He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me. The commandment of the Lord is pure. (Acts iii. 15. Acts v. 31. Heb. ii. 10. Ps. xliv. 4. Lev. xxv. 21. Ps. cxxxiii. 3. Ps. xlii. 8. Ps. lxviii. 28. John xv. 17. John xiv. 15. John xiv. 21. Ps. xix 8).

"THE KING'S DAUGHTERS."—Miss B. C. Gibbs, 505, Fulham-road, London, S.W., writing with respect to a statement in a recent issue, says that "The King's Daughters" are not a Unitarian body. A clause in the Constitution provides that "any person can become a member whose purpose and aim are in accord with its objects, and who holds herself responsible to the King, our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." Miss Gibbs will be glad to give any further information on the subject to inquiring friends. Mrs. Hannah W. Smith writes:—"The executive committee and all the controlling officers are evangelical Christians, and the whole tone of the order is decidedly Christian. They admit as members all who are willing to work under their motto, 'In His Name,' feeling that this is in accordance with the spirit Christ taught in Mark ix. 38, 39."

In an article on Africa in The Nineteenth Century Sir F. de Winton deprecates disputes between England and Germany about "square yards of territory," when there is ample room for both countries. It is only by the united effort of these two great nations that "Eastern Central Africa can be rapidly and peacefully developed, the slave trade destroyed, and the influences of Christianity and civilisation fostered."

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

An appeal was read at all the churches in the London diocese last Sunday on behalf of the Bishop of London's Fund.

The consecration of Dr. Westcott to the Bishopric of Durham took place at Westminster Abbey on Thursday morning, last week.

On behalf of the British and Foreign Bible Society, the Bishop of Derry preached, at Westminster Abbey, on Sunday morning, to a large congregation, on "The Value of the Bible in the Propagation of Christianity."

Archdeacon Wilkinson, in his charge to the clergy of Tavistock a few days ago, addressed them on the value of preaching. He said that many other important duties they were called upon to discharge; but if they failed in preaching the Gospel they neglected that to which all else was subordinate.

Another representation under the Public Worship Regulation Act has been lodged with the Bishop of London, setting forth, with regard to the image of the Madonna and the Crucifix at St. Paul's Cathedral, that they have encouraged ideas and devotions of an unauthorised, idolatrous, and superstitious kind.

The Church Missionary Society has issued an appeal for men to go to India. For some time past it has been felt that while Africa has had its full share of attention, the needs of the vast populations of India have not been adequately responded to. The whole band of the Church Missionary Society's agents in India at present numbers only 163.

The Bishop of Wakefield, preaching on Sunday week to a large gathering of men in Sowerby Parish Church, said the great danger of the age was in men regarding religion as something lying apart from their daily life—that it was too high, and not very practical. He did not believe in a religion up in the clouds. He was living down on the earth, and wanted a religion to help him in his daily work, in the temptations which came to him, and in his trials and perplexities. He went on to speak of the value and blessedness of purity in life, urging them to resist evil, in the strength of Christ, in whom they had a perfect example to fall back upon—an example which did not meet the common idea of manliness and courage, but which was, nevertheless, the true type of what men should be.

BAPTIST.

Regent's-park Chapel (Rev. F. B. Meyer, pastor) reports a nett increase of sixty-nine members during the past twelve months, the number of members now being 554. The total income of the church amounted to £1641. The subscriptions to the Baptist Missionary Society amounted to £153, and £58 was raised for the support of zenana work and Bible-women in India. A new sphere of activity has been opened during the past year by the Lodging-house Mission, under the auspices of which Gospel services are regularly held on Sunday evenings in the kitchens of the numerous common lodging-houses off Euston-road.

In the Sword and Trowel for May, Mr. Spurgeon gives a portrait of his son, Rev. Thomas Spurgeon, and says: "The Lord, by his means, raised the Baptist Church in Auckland, New Zealand, to such prosperity that it overgrew his strength. To build their noble sanctuary was no mean exploit. Our son was ill, and became depressed in spirit, and therefore felt compelled to retire from a post so arduous. He is now resting in Tasmania; and when he has been thoroughly recruited, he hopes for a while to undertake evangelistic work in New Zealand. His lack of health will not permit of a pastorate in England; but somewhere in the Southern Hemisphere we believe there is a field preparing for him, where he will reap great harvests of souls."

CONGREGATIONAL.

Dr. Heber Evans, of Carnarvon, will in a few months complete the twenty-fifth anniversary of his pastorate in that town.

Rev. Dr. Griffith John, of Hankow, China, is expected in England shortly, and it is suggested that he should be elected to the presidential chair of the Congregational Union for next year.

The Congregational churches of America have resolved to raise an annual subscription of £2000 for aggressive work in France, under the control of the French Evangelical Societies.

Rev. M. Duffil has been recognised as pastor of Whitefield Tabernacle, Leonard-street, City-road. The church meeting at Finsbury Chapel has united with that at the Tabernacle. Mr. Duffil is now the pastor of a church with about 250 members.

Rev. T. Bagley, as visitor, on behalf of the Church Aid Society, attended the recent meetings of the Cornwall Association, and gave an address upon "Our Mission as Congregationalists." He also visited Looe, Fowey, Wadebridge, Bodmin, Newquay, St. Austell, Truro, Falmouth, Penryn, St. Mawes, St. Ives, Penzance, and Mevagissey, preaching or giving an address in each church.

Rev. Owen Thomas, in his presidential address to the Dorset Congregational Association, said questions like international arbitration, pauperism, capital and labour, gambling, intemperance, impurity—all came within the sweep of true preaching, and they must be dealt with in a broad, comprehensive, masterly, and delicate way, but their discourses must be saturated with the spirit of Christ. The preaching of Christ does not exclude any theme, but it embraces all themes which lead up to Him.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. John Skinner, of Kelso, has been elected to succeed the late Dr. Elmslie in the professorship of Hebrew in the English Presbyterian College.

At the Synod in Liverpool, last week, Revs. John McNeill, of Regent-square, J. G. Train, of Hull, and Simeon Macphail, of Liverpool, were appointed special evangelistic agents to visit various London districts.

METHODIST.

Rev. T. A. Large, a missionary of the Canadian Methodist Church in Japan, has been stabbed to death by two burglars in Tokio.

In Leeds a Wesleyan Methodist Local Preachers' Union has been recently formed for the purposes of mutual study and discussion on theological subjects. In the Leeds Circuits the Wesleyans hold every Sunday 139 services conducted by lay preachers.

A Sunday-school Teachers' Convention was held at Kitto-road Church, Nunhead, when papers were read by Mr. C. Organ and Rev. S. P. Cadman on "Our Senior Scholars: How Best to Deal with Them," and "The Responsibility of the Church in Relation to Sunday-schools." After discussion, an address was delivered by Rev. Robert Culley. He pleaded for flexibility of methods, and urged teachers to keep in touch with their scholars during the week.

Rev. Charles Garrett's Home for Destitute Orphans, Liverpool, which accommodates fifty homeless lads, and also offers a Christian shelter for Methodist emigrants who pass through the city on their way to America, calls for immediate enlargement. The Shoeblack Home, recently added, is also too small for the number of applicants. It is proposed to purchase property at once to provide for friendless orphan girls. Mr. Garrett appeals for £1000.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

A house of residence for the lady workers of the new mission in East London is to be opened in Philip-lane, Tottenham, on Saturday, May 24, at 3 p.m.

Friends of Dundee and of Castleford, Yorks, are appealing in this month's Friend for help in building new meeting-houses in their respective localities, and recently large additions have been made to Dublin meeting-houses, all of which are hopeful signs of progress.

In The British Friend for May an interesting account is given of the Friends' Settlement at Newberg, Oregon, U.S.A. It was founded some fifteen years ago by a minister of the Society, who was impelled to cross the American Continent and hold meetings among such people as he found west of the Rocky Mountains, large numbers of whom were without any religious instruction. The settlement has now about 1000 inhabitants, with a large Friends' meeting.

Dublin Yearly Meeting generally precedes London by about three weeks, and the Friends from abroad who visit Great Britain usually attend both. Those from America now in Dublin are Samuel Morris and Thomas P. Cope, Philadelphia; Samuel and Deborah Lloyd, Kansas; Addison White and wife, Iowa; Richard and Sarah Collins, New York; and from England, J. B. Braithwaite, Ellen Robinson, George Satterthwaite, Henry Burtt, John Armatage and Joseph Hougston, and Sarah Fox. A Peace Meeting, held on Monday week, was a time of profit. Epistles from London, New York, New England, North Carolina, Ohio, Iowa, and Canada have been read with much satisfaction, and the early devotional meetings are truly helpful, especially to the young. Foreign and home mission meetings, those for young people, and in connection with the opium traffic and other subjects, occupy every spare moment, and doubtless widen the interest growingly felt in the annual assembly. The fraternal intercourse between England, Ireland, and America at the annual gatherings has long since been proved healthful and inspiring.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

Rev. James Kirkwood, of Dublin, Methodist evangelist, has received from a lady an offer to purchase and equip a Bible-carriage for colportage and evangelistic work in Ireland.

A convention for the deepening of the spiritual life was held last week in Cork; Revs. Charles Inwood, F. B. Meyer, B. F. Buxton, and Dr. Elder Cumming, were the principal speakers.

A hall is about to be built in Armagh for work in connection with the Y.M.C.A., the Y.W.C.A., and the Mutual Improvement Association. The evangelical churches in the city are represented on the board of trustees.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Rev. W. Saunders, vicar of St. Silas', Bristol.—Mr. Robert Seager, a prominent citizen and Christian worker of Ipswich.—Rev. Charles Brown, Congregational pastor, Yapton, Arundel, Sussex.—Mr. John Hope, a deacon of Queen-street Congregational Church, Chester, and for many years an active local preacher throughout Cheshire and the neighbouring counties.—Rev. W. H. Charlesworth, minister of the Congregational Church, Buckhurst-hill, Essex, since 1871.—Rev. Richard Smith, rector of St. Luke's, Lowton, Lancashire.—Rev. W. H. Tetley, pastor of Osmaston-road Baptist Church, Derby.—Rev. William Mackay, parish minister of Killearnan, Ross-shire.—Rev. John Myers, a prominent minister of the United Methodist Free Churches.—Mrs. Nott, wife of Mr. William Nott.—At the age of eighty-three, Miss Elizabeth Ranyard, well known in connection with evangelistic work in and around Kingston-on-Thames.

THE DAY OF SATISFACTION.

BY THE LATE HORATIUS BONAR, D.D.*

WHEN I shall wake on that fair morn of morns,
After whose dawning never night returns,
And with whose glory day eternal burns,
I shall be satisfied.

When I shall see thy glory face to face,
When in thine arms Thou wilt thy child embrace,
When Thou shalt open all thy stores of grace,
I shall be satisfied.

When I shall meet with those whom I have loved,
Clasp in my eager arms the long-removed,
And find how faithful Thou hast proved,
I shall be satisfied.

When this vile body shall arise again,
Purged by thy power from every taint and stain,
Delivered from all weakness and all pain,
I shall be satisfied.

When I shall gaze upon the face of Him
Who for me died, with eye no longer dim,
And praise Him in the everlasting hymn,
I shall be satisfied.

When I shall call to mind the long, long past,
With clouds, and storms, and shadows overcast,
And know that I am saved and blest at last,
I shall be satisfied.

When every enemy shall disappear,
The unbelief, the darkness, and the fear;
When Thou shalt smooth the brow and wipe the tear,
I shall be satisfied.

When every vanity shall pass away,
And all be real, all without decay,
In that sweet dawning of the cloudless day,
I shall be satisfied.

[As it is found that infidels and others send tracts to the persons whose names are inserted here, it is most desirable that all books and papers received should be carefully read before being given away.]

Methodism is rapidly spreading in New South Wales.

It is proposed to open a "Home of Rest for Aged Servants" in the vicinity of Edinburgh.

A correspondent reminds those who are planning summer holidays of the need there is for evangelistic work in country villages and towns.

At one of the Baptist Union meetings a strong protest was made against a proposal to include inquiries as to religious profession in next year's census.

The "Religious Disabilities Removal Bill," designed to throw open the Lord Chancellorship and the Lord Lieutenantship of Ireland to Roman Catholics, has been withdrawn.

Interesting letters have been received from the members of the party sent out by the Primitive Methodist Missionary Committee to found the new mission on the Zambesi. The party were just entering the great wilderness. All were well as they passed out from the sphere of civilisation into the African desert.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

[The first paragraph of Mr. Meyer's Introduction to the Psalms, in our last issue, should have been within quotation marks; they were inadvertently left out. The eulogy on the Psalms was from "The Higher Life," by the late Rev. Baldwin Brown.]

SUNDAY, MAY 11.—Psalm II.

THIS is one of the sublimest of the Psalms. Its mould is highly dramatic. Attempts have been made to connect it with David or Solomon, but its scope is too vast and majestic to be limited to any earthly monarch, and can only find its complete fulfilment in Him to whom its glowing passages are referred in Acts iv. 25, xiii. 33; Heb. i. 5, v. 5; Rev. ii. 27. A natural division is suggested by the structure of the Psalm into four stanzas of three verses each.

THE DETERMINED HATE OF THE PEOPLE (1-3).—The word rage has the idea of the tumultuous concourse of vast crowds of people, swarming with Oriental gesticulations and cries into a central meeting-place, aroused to a frenzy of excitement. Imagine is the same word translated meditate (i. 2): whilst the godly meditates on God's law, the ungodly meditates a project which is vain, and shall come utterly to nought. Pilate and Herod and the Jewish rulers are for once at peace among themselves in their common hostility to the Messiah (Luke xxiii. 12). Let us not affect worldly alliances, for the drift of the great ones of the earth is against our Lord. Comp. ver. 3 with Hos. xi. 4 and Matt. xi. 30.

THE DIVINE TRANQUILLITY (4-6).—The scene shifts to heaven, there God is depicted as undismayed—a strong man laughs at the ineffectual efforts of tiny children to throw him down. Yet I have set, i.e., anointed.—Messiah and Christ alike mean anointed. Our Lord was anointed with the Holy Ghost (Isa. xi. 2, 3; Acts x. 38; Luke iv. 18; John iii. 34). He is God's own King; MY King; as Solomon was David's (1 Kings i. 38, &c.).

MESSIAH'S MANIFESTO (7-9).—Standing forth, He produces and recites one of the eternal decrees. Before time was, He was the only begotten of the Father (John xvii. 5); but his sonship was declared at his Resurrection, then He was born first from among the dead and sealed (Acts xiii. 33; Rom. i. 4; Col. i. 18). The world is his heritage, but the gift is conditional on prayer. For this He pleads through the ages; and, if we are truly at one with Him, we too shall ask. The pastoral staff for the sheep, the iron rod for those who oppose.

OVERTURES AND COUNSELS OF PEACE.—Kiss, the expression of homage (1 Sam. x. 1). Adore means to the mouth. To perish in the way reminds of i. 6. Notice the change in R.V.; his wrath will soon be kindled (Jas. v. 9; Rev. vi. 17). Oh the blessedness! closes this Psalm as it began the first.

MONDAY, APRIL 12.—Psalm III.

AN ENUMERATION OF TROUBLE (1, 2).—Though God knows all, it relieves the overcharged heart to make a full statement of anxieties and troubles. The foes were many. They quoted his sin as a reason for supposing that God had withdrawn his aid (2 Sam. xvi. 8). The word help is salvation; but salvation belongeth unto God (8; xxxv. 3).

AN EXPRESSION OF UNFALTERING TRUST (3, 4).—God our shield (Gen. xv. 1) is for, i.e., around us. Would that we found our glory in Him only (Jer. ix. 23, 24). It is a good thing to use the voice in prayer, as our Lord did. Words keep the heart awake (Heb. v. 7). David looked to God as dwelling between the cherubim of the ark, the symbol of propitiation, and thus approached Him, as sinners must ever do, through the Lamb of God, the Priest of man.

AN ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF MERCY (5, 6).—It was the perfection of trust to be able to sleep under such circumstances, and to be devoid of fear when environed by such mighty hosts. But it is gloriously possible. So Jesus slept (Mark iv. 38), and Peter (Acts xii. 6). Let us be sure that we are where God would have us to be, then let us resign ourselves to his care, and, even though pursued by the results of our own mistakes and sins, we shall find that He will save us in them, if not from them.

AN URGENT ENTREATY (7, 8).—Here for the third time the word salvation is introduced. His foes are looked on as wild beasts, who, when their jawbone is broken and their teeth dashed out, may roam around, but are powerless to hurt. David speaks as if he felt that this work were already done, and his foes' rage futile. And he turns from them to the great mass of his people, led wrong by wily conspirators, and pleads that God's best blessings may rest on them (Is. liv. 14-17). So does our Lord intercede for us.

TUESDAY, MAY 13.—Psalm IV.

A PRAYER (1).—We must be sure that our cause is a righteous one before we can ask God to vindicate it; and we do well to go back to God's deliverances from former straits. Build supplication on recollection.

AN EXPOSTULATION (2, 3).—Vanity refers back to ii.; leasing is lying. Absalom's rebellion is a type of all those plots against Christ and his saints which begin in falsehood, and end in confusion. The Hebrew word translated godly means one who loves. Dost thou love, God first, and afterwards his saints? Then know that God hath set thee apart (i.e., separated) for Himself. Seek his praise alone. Be content to let the world go by. Thou canst not fail; his cause and thine are one (Sol. Songs iv. 12).

LOVING COUNSEL (4, 5).—The Apostle gives a very remarkable application of ver. 4 in Eph. iv. 26. If men communed with each other less, and with God and their own heart more, allowing the heat of passion to cool in the silences of the night, they would discover the futility of fuming and fretting against the Lord's people and cause. To us all the injunction, be still, is most appropriate. It is only in standing water that silt settles, and in quiet nights that the dew distils. In the night, when the eye is closed to all the world besides, let it be opened to self-examination. Sacrifice here is the whole burnt offering, and corresponds to entire surrender, out of which trust naturally springs.

A WISE DEDUCTION AND RESOLVE (6-8).—How true is this of the many everywhere who know not God.—But all is vain when God's face is hidden. How rich is the soul on which it shines (Num. vi. 24-26). Absalom and his conspirators, with all that David had left, had not as much true bliss as the fugitive monarch enjoyed. In the hour of his sin he had asked to hear joy and gladness (Ps. li. 8); and this was the reply. The saint has no need to envy the prosperous worlding (John iv. 13, 14). May the Holy Spirit put gladness into our hearts to-day (Gal. v. 22). Both, ver. 8, means, "I shall go to sleep as soon as I lie down." God alone is enough for any soul. He suffices for heaven; why not for earth? In our solitude, let us turn to make all in all of Him (Ezek. xxxiv. 25).

WEDNESDAY, MAY 14.—Psalm V.

The ADDRESS AND MANNER OF PRAYER (1-3).—Uttered words are inadequate to convey the deep thought which meditates. This latter word will stand for the groanings which cannot be uttered, but which the spirit understands (Rom. viii. 26, 27). Distinguished from either of these, there is urgent ejaculations for aid, described as the voice of a cry. As soon as we awake at early dawn, let us speak to God. Let Him be the first to hear our voice. And let us direct, i.e., set in order, our prayer. The same Hebrew word is used in Gen. xxii. 9; Lev. i. 7, xxiv. 8. We are not to pray without method (Eccles. v. 1). And, having prayed, we must look out for the answer (Hab. ii. 1). We miss many answers, because we get tired of waiting on the quays for the returning ships.

CONTRASTED CHARACTERS (4-7).—There are here seven expressions for the ungodly. Evil may not even sojourn as a wayfaring man (2 John 10). Leasing is old English for lying. Not in the spirit of boasting, but of humble gratitude, does David turn to himself (1 Cor. xv. 10). The Jew in prayer looked towards the temple (Dan. vi. 10). The tabernacle was spoken of as Jehovah's temple (1 Sam. i. 9, iii. 3); so that David may have written these words as they stand, or they may have been revised by Ezra. Our plea rests less on our conscious integrity and more on the accepted righteousness of our Representative.

THE PRAYER (8-12).—We may appeal to God's righteousness to vindicate his righteous ones. Because He is what He is, we may count on Him (2 Chron. xvi. 9). The 8th verse is thus parallel to the 4th. This terrible description of the ungodly is almost entirely concerned with the sins of the tongue. It is largely quoted in Rom. iii. Wicked men are like sepulchres, which look fair without, but are full of corruption within, and exhale pestilential exhalations. And as by their words they sin against God and mislead the righteous, so by their words they shall be condemned and fall. David here, as God's mouthpiece, pronounces their inevitable doom.

Here again (11) we meet the repeated word, trust. And with trust goes joy, as with brother and twin sister; and with both goes love. How happy their lot—defended, blessed, and encompassed with the Divine favour (Deut. xxxiii. 23).

THURSDAY, MAY 15.—Psalm VI.

The first of the Penitential Psalms, the other six being xxxii., xxxviii, li., cii., cxxx., cxliii. Sheminith is evidently a musical term, signifying the octave. Its earlier verses are a wail, but it ends in a song. Like a day of rain which clears at evening. It is full of beautiful ejaculatory cries.

THE ELEMENTS OF THE PSALMIST'S SORROW. (1-7).—There was the pressure of Divine displeasure on account of sin (1, 2), combined with soul anguish (3, 4), perhaps accompanied with sickness, even unto death (4, 5), whilst enemies add their hate (6, 7). In ver. 5 David considers the grave as disabling us from that active service of praise which is the peculiar privilege of the living (Isa. xxxviii. 19). He clearly foresaw the Resurrection, but perhaps not so clearly the state of the departed, which is brought to light in the Gospel. How touching is the plea, so suitable for sufferers—for I am weak. How expressive the broken sentence, How long, which was often on Calvin's lips. And that prayer may well be on our lips continually, O Lord, heal me.

THE CERTAINTY OF THE PSALMIST'S DELIVERANCE (8-10).—The prayer is no sooner uttered than answered. The consciousness of having been heard steals over the weary soul like a glint of light on to a bed in the hospital ward. He knows that the petition is granted, though it has not yet come to hand (1 John v. 15). Weeping has a voice for the ear of God. He can interpret sighs and tears (8). In the Revised Version, which we do well to compare with the authorised, the words of ver. 10, which read like an imprecation, stand in the future tense—they shall be ashamed and turn back. When God returns (4), our enemies turn back (10).

FRIDAY, MAY 16.—Psalm VII.

Shiggaion is thought by some to refer to the erratic and irregular metre. The expressions of this Psalm should be carefully compared with 1 Sam. xxiv. xxv., xxvi. Cush may be a covert allusion to Saul, who was a Benjamite. Or it may refer to some "black-visaged" member of his tribe, who was one of David's chief calumniators.

PRAYER (1, 2).—If David desired deliverance from his foes, how much more do we need deliverance from our arch enemy (1 Pet. v. 8, 9).

PROTESTATION (3-5).—So far from being guilty of the offence charged on him, David on two occasions spared Saul's life (1 Sam. xxiv., xxvi.). Mine honour is probably only another name for the soul (Gen. xlix. 6).

AN APPEAL (6-9).—By a bold metaphor, he attributes the success of his foes to some temporary abdication on God's part of his throne, and entreats Him to reassume his throne, and give his decisions, as Eastern judges are wont to do, in the midst of the people standing around. When we do right and suffer for it, we have a strong argument with God, in standing still, keeping silence, and leaving Him to vindicate (1 Pet. ii. 20-23). What a noble prayer is ver. 9.

PREDICTION (10-16). — Evil recoils like a boomerang on those who set it in motion. Ralph the Rover perished at the Inchcape Rock. The huntsman at eventide falls into the pit prepared in the morning for his prey, covered by the branches and reeds and earth.

SATURDAY, MAY 17.—Psalm VIII.

Was Gittith a tune or instrument brought from Gath? (1 Sam. xxvii. 2). This exquisite ode, which can only reach its fulfilment in the person of the Son of Man to whom it is referred in the New Testament (Heb. ii. 6, 9), was evidently composed at night. It dates probably from the happy shepherd days, when wild creatures crept around the fold, and the occasional scream of a night-bird reminded the sweet singer of the subjects of the human kingdom.

THE INSCRIPTION (1). — Jehovah our Lord (Ps. cx. 1). Our Lord is here.

THE ASCRIPTION (2).—His name excellent on earth; his glory the crown on the brow of the sky. And so mighty that his strength communicated to babes is more than enough to vanquish and silence his foes (1 Cor. i. 25). See also Christ's own quotation (Matt. xxi. 16). Oh, let us who are but babes rejoice that we are so weak and helpless; this is the very way of acquiring God's strength (1 Cor. xii. 9).

THE COMPARISON (3, 4).—At first sight there is a great descent from the bigness of the works of God in the heavens to frail man, the son of Adam, whose very name implies that he is of the dust. How should so great a God visit him. We often confound bigness and greatness, and forget that the King loves more his little babe than all the splendour and extent of his ancestral palace. The age of the telescope was the age of the microscope. There are as many worlds of wonder which are too minute for our vision as there are too great for our understanding.

THE COMPENSATION (5-8).—Yet, notwithstanding his apparent insignificance, man in his original creation was only a little lower than the angels; and he was invested with the viceregency of the lower orders of creation (Gen. i. 26). Some traces of this power still exist in the power of the human eye and voice over the animals. But sin rolled this crown into the dust. We have to win authority with effort, and retain it with difficulty. We see not yet all things put under us. But this lost power has been reacquired by Jesus, as man (Matt. xxviii. 18). And in his kingdom it shall be restored to man (Isa. xi. 6). And from the redeemed creation shall arise the words with which this Psalm begins and ends (Rom. viii. 20, 21).

Sunday Afternoon, May 18.

THE TRANSFIGURATION.—LUKE ix. 28-36.

GOLDEN TEXT: LUKE ix. 35.

PARALLEL PASSAGES:

Matt. xvii. 1-13; Mark ix. 2-10.

THE TIME.—Just a week after his first announcement of coming suffering and death (vv. 22-27). There is a close moral connection between this announcement and the transfiguration. What more likely than that his disciples were depressed and stumbled by our Lord's strange words, and that He, knowing this, and knowing that the cross was but nine months distant, should lead them into solitude for prayer and heartening talk with Himself?

THE SCENE.—It could hardly have been Tabor, for in those days a fortified town crowned that hill. Probability points either (1) to a high mountain north of Cæsarea Philippi, or (2) to Hermon, the highest source of Jordan, north-west of Cæsarea.

THE OBJECT.—To strengthen the disciples' faith, and prepare them for their coming trial. This was accomplished by each of the three phases of the transfiguration—(1) they "saw his glory," (2) they heard from the lips of glorified prophets that the path of shame was the path of glory, and (3) they heard the voice that spoke Divine approval of all his teaching (see Godet).

EXPOSITION.

PETER, JAMES, AND JOHN.—"We were eye-witnesses of his majesty" (2 Pet. i. 16). "We beheld his glory" (John i. 14). Why these? Surely, because they understood Him best, "were the most advanced in the knowledge of Jesus, and were thus fitted to receive new revelations of truth." "These three were singled out for the honour of peculiarly sacred associations with Jesus, in (1) Service (healing of Jairus' daughter, Luke viii. 51); (2) Suffering (witnesses of Gethsemane, Matt. xxvi. 37); (3) Glory (witnesses of the transfiguration). Add to this that James was the first to suffer, being the first martyr-apostle; Peter was pre-eminent for being leader at Pentecost, and founder of the early Church; and John lived to reveal the glory both of the Redeemer and of his redeemed." The King's Own. TO PRAY.—Intimating that Christ's object in ascending the mountain was simply prayer: the transfiguration was the direct gift of the Father. As He prayed, lit. "in his praying." The praying caused what followed. Moses and Elias. Both privileged in the ending of their lives, and both great representatives—Moses of the Law, Elias of the Prophets. These appear with Christ, who is the end of the law and the fulfiller of the prophecies. "Both, like Christ, had endured a natural fast of forty days and nights; both had been on the holy mount in the visions of God."—Alford.

"Spake of his decease."—"In view of that cross which is about to be erected, Elijah learns to know a glory superior to that of being taken up to heaven—the glory of renouncing through love such an ascension, and choosing rather a painful and ignominious death. Moses comprehends that there is a sublimer end than that of dying 'from the kiss of the Eternal,' and this is to deliver up one's soul to the fire of Divine wrath."—Godet. "This is my beloved Son; hear Him." Compare this with similar words spoken at his baptism, which were addressed to Him as these are to his disciples (Matt. iii.27). "We find here," says Godet, "the realisation of a law which occurs throughout the life of Jesus: that every act of voluntary humiliation on the part of the Son is met by a corresponding act of glorification, of which He is the object, on the part of the Father. He goes down into the waters of Jordan devoting Himself to death; God addresses Him as his well-beloved Son. In John xii. 23-33, in the midst of the trouble of his soul, He renews his vow to be faithful unto death; a voice from heaven answers Him with the most magnificent promise for his filial heart."

APPLICATION.

(1) THE KIND WISDOM OF GOD'S DISCIPLINE.—He knew the coming sorrow, and the shock it would bring to his disciples' faith; so He grants them a transfiguration experience, the use of which they know not now, but they will know hereafter. How surely He cares for his trusting ones! So now, much of the experience and teaching children receive is mainly for their benefit in after years. To-day they cannot understand its value.

(2) MOSES AND ELIAS APPEARED IN GLORY.—Surely to show us that glory—splendid beauty, purity, and nobleness—glory which is the radiance of perfection is as much the natural end of a holy life as corruption is the natural end of an evil life. Even here we see plain folk grow beautiful with the beauty of holiness, just as we see fair faces grow ugly with the stamp of sin. Oh to have the beauty of goodness! It lasts, grows, shines! And we all may have it by receiving and living Christ.

(3) NOTE THE CONNECTION BETWEEN PRAYER AND TRANSFIGURATION.—Nothing purifies and gladdens the heart like prayer, and "a merrie heart makes a glad countenance." Many of the loveliest faces in the world have grown lovely through prayer. Do you know prayer's power?

(4) SELF-SACRIFICE AND TRANSFIGURATION.—Jesus during his transfiguration was talking of the shame and sorrow now so near. Doubtless He was accepting them afresh. So we, when we meekly and bravely accept the hard duties and sorrows of life, and go out to live for God and for fellow men, grow like Christ, and we become beautiful, first in heart and life, and then in face.

(5) THE TRANSFIGURATION GIVES HINTS OF OUR FUTURE LIFE.—(1) We shall be ourselves. Moses was Moses; Elias, Elias. (2) We shall know one another, as these two were known. (3) We shall enjoy social life. "They talked together." (4) Our supreme interest will be Christ and his kingdom. If this is not so now in a measure, it is only because of our debased condition. (5) We shall be in glory. As superheated metal shines, so everything superexcellently good and beautiful grow luminous to the mind; and this light of surpassing excellence—a light that excites the sypathetic beholder to exalting gladness—we call glory. What will it be to be entirely glorious—body, soul and spirit?

STRANGERS' REST, LIVERPOOL.

THE thirteenth anniversary meetings were recently held at 24, Park-lane. MR. Alexander Guthrie presided at the afternoon gathering, when the principal speakers were Rev. T. J. Madden, incumbent of St. Luke's Church, and Mr. John Wood, of the Evangelisation Society. Mr. Reginald Radcliffe conducted a prayer-meeting in the evening. The annual report showed that 416 meetings had been held in the English language, 241 in Scandinavian, 78 in Spanish, 36 in German, and 27 in French. The large reading-room had been well used by emigrants and foreign sailors, and the boarding-houses and ships had been regularly visited. The expenditure had amounted to £391 17s., and there was a deficit on the year's working of £26 0s. 9d. An appeal for £80 was made to meet the deficiency, and secure the services of a sub-keeper to assist during the emigration season, which it is expected will be unusually heavy.

The hon. treasurer for the Mission is Mr. Thomas A. Leigh, 19, James-street, Liverpool.

The Temperance Cause.

Mr. J. B. Gough's autobiography is now publish in French.

In Nebraska towns where drink licences a issued, the proceeds go to support the schools.

A public-house in the Strand, three years a bought for £9,200, has just changed hands f £16,300.

It is stated that there are nearly 1000 register opium dens in the city of Hangchow and suburl Opium dens are more numerous than tea-shops.

The Irish Sunday Closing Bill has passed second reading in the House of Commons by sweeping majority, composed of all shades political opinion.

The Baptist Union, at one of its meetings la week, declared, though not quite unanimou against the proposition to compensate publica for the loss of their licences.

The British Temperance League and the Unit Kingdom Alliance are organising a strong oppo tion to the "compensation" proposal in the Budg for the loss of liquor licence.

The annual meetings of the Scottish Temperan League have been held at Glasgow. The annu report covers a wide field of varied effort, and su gests a year of great activity.

Lord Herschell, in the House of Lords recentl spoke in favour of the detention for considerabl periods of incorrigibly drunken women upon who as a class gaol records proved that short terms imprisonment have no reforming effect.

The recent annual meetings in London of th Anglo-Indian Temperance Association were th occasion of earnest protests from eminent speake against the replenishment of the Indian revenue from the vices and weakness of the people.

Mr. William Forbes, after holding meetings a Portsmouth and Shaftesbury, gave addresses las week at the Hon. Mrs. Yorke's Mission-hall, Net ley. This lady, like her sister, Mrs. Cyril Flowe takes an active interest in the Temperance move ment.

The London League for Stopping the Sale o Intoxicating Liquors on Sunday held a large an enthusiastic demonstration in the Borough-roa Baptist Chapel, Southwark, on Monday evening April 21. The membership of this newly forme League has already reached 6,000.

Mr. George Blaiklock is having a successfu temperance tour. From Melbourne he proceede to New Zealand, and from thence he was to go t Queensland, the United States, and Canada, return ing for the winter's work in England. Mis Willard has assured him of a hearty welcome i the States.

In an article on the bonâ fide traveller, Th Speaker regards "Sunday drinking as so bad thing that if it can be stopped it ought to be so, ever if it were to follow as a consequence that no tra veller could get drink from Saturday night till Monday morning except at the place where h spent the night."

Mr. Howard Livesey proposes national option instead of local option, a plan by which, he says "drink legislation would be sure to run level with public opinion." In the meantime he suggests the passing of an Act preventing any new licence i any place where "one licence to, say, five hundred inhabitants was in force."

The proposal of the Government to provide compensation to publicans whose licences may be suppressed, has aroused determined opposition in the House of Commons. When the question comes before the House, Sir Wilfrid Lawson and Mr. W. S. Caine will have something to say in expression of the views of the friends of temperance.

HELPFUL BOOKS FOR MISSIONARIES.—Last year nearly 300 packets were sent out to C.M.S. missionaries. Through lack of funds, it was not possible to send to all, but it is hoped that this year every agent, 409, including lay missionaries and ladies, will receive a devotional book. Miss Tucker (5, Sussex-gardens, Eastbourne) has issued a circular giving the titles of suitable books. She writes to us: "Roughly speaking, each packet costs at least 1s., and if every missionary is to get only one in the course of twelve months, the cost would be from £18 to £20." Miss Tucker hopes more friends of mission work will become regular subscribers to the fund, and thus help the missionaries.

Ocean Breezes for the Drooping!

IT will be remembered that the story of the acquisition of this desirable and beautifully situated sea-side 'Home' on the South Coast, free of cost, by the North East London Mission, was told in THE CHRISTIAN for April 4. We feel it can only need telling that we are now quite at a standstill for about £200 to complete the necessary repairs and alterations and furnish, to bring the premises into immediate use.

How greatly it would rejoice our hearts and strengthen our hands if some friend or friends of the suffering poor would send us this sum to meet our pressing and importunate needs. The present bright weather sets us longing to begin this important and delightful work.

CONTRIBUTIONS would be gratefully acknowledged if sent to Mrs. FRANK BEVAN, 59, Princes-gate, S.W.; or the Editors of THE CHRISTIAN; or the Director, Mr. W. CHORLEY, 2, Marquess-grove, Canonbury, London, N. Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.

"It is a most masterly exposure of what Popery really is; and what it can do when it has the upper hand. The perusal of this book should form part of the education of our youth. Heads of families should purchase it for their children to read. Popery could find no favour wherever FOXE'S MARTYRS is studied." Christian Progress.

"We are pleased to see the 'BOOK OF MARTYRS' well to the front. It is a great thing to have such a copy of FOXE in the market at 10s. 6d. We wish Messrs. Morgan & Scott an immediate sale of the present issue, which is marvellously cheap."—The Sword and Trowel.

Scripture Readers' Society FOR IRELAND.

INSTITUTED 1822.

Funds greatly needed to extend the Itinerant work.

The Scripture Readers are placed under carefully elected Superintendents, and not only located in Towns and Cities, but also sent into remote districts where they are generally well received by all denominations.

Irish speaking Readers are sent where required. Sailors in Seaports are visited, and Bethel Services held.

The work is carried on in a spirit of love and not of controversy.

Reports and all particulars sent post free on application to Captain JAMES KEARNEY WHITE, Secretary, Offices, 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin, and 9, Paternoster-row, London.

Donations may be sent to the above addresses, or will be received by the Proprietors of THE CHRISTIAN.

A GLANCE AT THE GREAT WORK.

BY LADY HOPE.

An Incident of Messrs. Moody & Sankey's Meetings in London.

EXTRACT.

"My mind is in a state of chaos. What should you advise me to do?"

"Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved."

"Ah! that sounds sweet and clear—one blessed, pure, consoling note, amidst all the discordant ones around me. If I could only do it! If I could only have the blessing offered in those words."

"A simple record of a beautiful life, full of a pure and holy calm, that almost seems to bring heaven nearer as we read. An extensive reading of this true story should result in abundant blessing."—Church and Home.

WORKS on FAITH HEALING.

DOROTHEA TRÜDEL:

Or, THE PRAYER OF FAITH.

With Engraved Portrait.

Presentation Edition:

Cloth boards, gilt edges, 2s. 6d.

Cheap Editions:

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.

"DOROTHEA TRÜDEL appears to have been a simple-minded woman, of remarkable devotedness and faith. She became deeply penetrated with the striking passage in the Epistle of James, 'The prayer of faith shall save the sick.' Led by circumstances to minister to the afflicted, she carried into practical action the settled conviction of her heart; and in hundreds of cases soul and body were alike healed without other visible means."—Record.

PASTOR BLUMHARDT,

AND HIS WORK.

BY REV. W. GUEST.

A descriptive account of the remarkable work of FAITH HEALING carried on first at Möttlingen, and subsequently at Bad Boll. With Introduction by Rev. C. H. BLUMHARDT.

With Portrait.

Cloth boards, 2s.

Special Cheap Edition:

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.

"This book contains some most remarkable things, it being the history of a most remarkable man, full of zeal, full of love, full of faith, full of the spirit of prayer, and living in close communion with his God: he was an immense power through the Spirit in the towns and villages of his native land. It will be read with considerable interest; and the Christian reader will be compelled to exclaim, 'What hath God wrought!'"
Baptist Messenger.

ETERNAL LIFE:

WHERE TO FIND IT; AND HOW TO OBTAIN IT.

BY HERMANN LIEBSTEIN,
Barrister-at-Law.

EXTRACT.

"When the Word of God speaks of one as having been quickened, or made alive, it means that the individual has begun to live spiritually, and possesses eternal life."

CUCKOO CLOCK and WEATHER HOUSE (COMBINED).

A handsomely carved wood clock, 22in. in height, with ivory hands and figures, strikes the hours and half hours on a powerful wire gong. Each time the clock strikes a charming little cuckoo pushes open a door at top of clock, and comes out, and cuckoos the hours and half hours, then retires, and the door closes after it. Above the clock is the Weather House, containing beautifully modelled figures of male and female peasants, 3in. high. The man comes out if about to be wet, and woman if fine. We warrant these clocks to go for years, and for time-keeping qualities no better clock can be obtained at any price, while they are ornamental and fit to decorate a palace.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

(THIRTY-THIRD SERIES.)

ADVANCED CONSUMPTION — PRONOUNCED INCURABLE.

Mrs. A. C., a lady residing in Cornwall, applied to me for advice, early in October, last year. Her husband writing for her says:—"She has been suffering for some time from lung mischief."

Her illness had commenced eighteen months before this, first of all through grief at a sad bereavement. Her cough had recently become very troublesome, expectoration thick and green, blood had been spat up, constant pains in the left side. The strength was gradually failing, with loss of flesh. Friends who had benefited by my treatment had urged her to apply to me.

At the expiration of one month Mr. C. writes me: "My wife is greatly benefited by your valuable medicine."

January 11, the patient writes: "Since I have been under your excellent advice, I have been able to take a long journey to ——, hoping that the change here, with your splendid treatment, will fully restore me to health and strength. Your prescription and liniment is invaluable."

February 27, she says: "My friends are astonished at my recovery, seeing that I was given up by two skilful doctors as incurable, and suffering from advanced Consumption.

"My husband also (she says), who often was laid up with cold, finds it a great comfort to his chest.

"You are at liberty to make what use you like of this (she adds), omitting for certain reasons my name and address. If you wish, you can refer anyone privately to me, and I shall be delighted to speak of the great benefit I have received."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

CADBURY'S

REFRESHING COCOA SUSTAINING

CADBURY'S COCOA is closely allied to milk in the large proportion of flesh-forming and strength-sustaining elements that it contains. It is prepared on the principle of excluding the superabundance of fatty indigestible matter with which cocoa abounds—supplying a refined thin infusion of absolutely pure cocoa, exhilarating and refreshing, for Breakfast, Luncheon, Tea, or Supper—giving staying power and imparting new life and vigour to growing children, and those of delicate constitutions.

The Friends of Christ's Work among the Waifs and Strays of the Streets are invited to attend

THE 24TH ANNIVERSARY

OF THESE INSTITUTIONS, TO BE HELD (D.V.) IN

THE ROYAL ALBERT HALL, on Wednesday Evening, June 11, 1890.

The Most Honourable THE MARQUIS OF LORNE, P.C., K.T.,

Will take the Chair at SIX O'CLOCK precisely, and will be supported by, among others,

The Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, The Right Hon. Lord Kinnaird, The Rev. Canon Fleming, B.D., Mr. Samuel G. Sheppard, Sir Arthur Blackwood, K.C.B., The Rev. Canon Girdlestone, M.A., and Mr. William Fowler.

Among the other interesting items of the Programme will be the following:—

1. The Presentation of Prizes to Old Boys and Girls by the Hon. the LADY KINNAIRD.
2. Gymnastics & Musical Drill by Little Boys, led by Mr. Matthews.
3. Choir Singing by 1,300 Children, conducted by Mr. J. Proudman.
4. The Babies' Brigade. "To Arms! To Arms!"
5. Calisthenics by our Ilford Girls, under Mr. Solly.
6. Manitoba Emigrants (en route).
7. Our Cripples' Salutation.
8. Weird Music.
9. The Collection. A most important Function!

TICKETS for SINGLE SEATS in different parts of the house Now Ready, varying in price from 1s. to £1 1s., and can be obtained as follows:—Gallery, 1s.; Balcony, 2s. 6d. and 4s.; Arena, 4s.; Stalls, 7s. 6d.; Loggia Boxes, 10s.; Second Tier Boxes, 15s.; Grand Tier Boxes, 21s. TICKETS for BOXES:—Loggia Boxes, to hold 8 persons, £2 10s.; Second Tier Boxes, to hold 5 persons, £2; Grand Tier Boxes, to hold from 10 to 20 persons, £4 and £6.

The engagement of so large a building as the Royal Albert Hall is, under any circumstances, a serious undertaking, but a half-filled house would prove so great a discouragement, that it is hoped the supporters of the Institutions, who can afford to do so, will generously order a number of Tickets for distribution among their friends.

To facilitate this, the Secretary will supply One Dozen SINGLE SEAT Tickets to any part of the house at a REDUCTION of 25 per cent., or 3d. in the shilling, if ordered and paid for on or before May 31. After that date no reduction can be made.

18 to 26, STEPNEY CAUSEWAY, LONDON, E.

BIBLE AND COLPORTAGE SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

HELP IS MUCH NEEDED in the circulation of the Scriptures and wholesome Literature. The cure of Ireland's sorrows must be sought in the dissemination of Divine Truth. National schools have done a splendid work in teaching the people to read, and the great want is of a pure and enlightening literature.

The Society is UNDENOMINATIONAL, and has at present 21 COLPORTEURS scattered over the country, in addition to 170 Book Agents spread over 19 counties. Contributions will be thankfully received by—

SIR WILLIAM QUARTUS EWART, BART., Belfast, Treasurer. REV. H. M. WILLIAMSON, D.D., Belfast; REV. WALTER RIDDALL, Belfast; REV. J. ELLIOTT, Armagh; REV. WESLEY GUARD, Belfast, Secretaries. REV. THOMAS LYLE, Dunadry, Belfast, Assistant Secretary.

A Report gladly sent to any address.

Society for Promoting FEMALE EDUCATION IN THE EAST.

Treasurer: Sir W. R. FARQUHAR, Bart.

This Society, established fifty-five years ago, has lived to see its work, once considered Utopian, not only fully recognised as possible, but regarded as an indispensable part of Gospel Missions.

The sphere of the Society's work embraces China, Japan, India, Persia, Africa, and the Levant, and it includes the establishment of Orphanages, Boarding, Day, and Infant Schools, Bible and Sewing Classes, Mothers' Meetings, Zenana Visiting, and Medical Work.

This important work is now crippled by want of funds. HELP is therefore URGENTLY NEEDED for its support and extension, and will be most gratefully received by THE SECRETARY, Miss Webb, 267, Vauxhall Bridge Road, London, S.W.; or by the Bankers, Messrs. Herries, Farquhar & Co., 16, St. James's Street, S.W.

WHO WILL INVITE 50 Factory Girls and Women (from the East End) for a day's outing on Whit Monday.—Miss BONTEIN, 22A, Devonshire-street, Portland-place, W.

ZENANA MEDICAL COLLEGE, 58, St. George's-road, S.W.—The Daughter of an Armenian pastor, Aintab, asks for Free Training. Will any of the Lord's people help to provide the 100 guineas required? A Liverpool Lady, £20.

Dr. GRIFFITH, Hon. Sec.

The Christian.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Miss DE BROEN, of the Belleville Mission, Paris.

In our next issue we propose to give the first of a series of articles by Dr. James Culross, on "The Three Gardens" of Scripture—the Garden of Eden, Gethsemane, and the garden of the Saviour's tomb.

Our esteemed friends, Mr. and Mrs. Russell Hurditch, celebrated their silver wedding on Tuesday last, when a number of Christians joined them in seeking God's blessing upon their future work for Him. Mr. Hurditch has been an earnest and valued servant of the churches, and we trust that by God's favour the number will be yet greatly increased of those who, through his ministry, will rise up to call him blessed.

Our columns are largely "May Meeting" in character this week. Such readers as may suppose that the matter is heavy will do well to address themselves to a careful perusal of the various reports. They will find the summaries of addresses yield in many cases important teaching as well as encouraging information concerning the progress of the Gospel. Moreover, incidents abound, as well as illustrations drawn from life and work. Owing to the pressure of reports, many interesting articles, and our usual column of "Gathered Gold," are withheld.

We commend the bold step that has been taken by the Brighton Watch Committee to suppress the hawking of newspapers on Sunday mornings. This is an evil by no means confined to Brighton. It is not so widely known as it should be that the practice is against the law, and a reminder of this to the offenders will often have the effect of suppressing at least the noisy shouting which usually accompanies the sale of the papers. It would tend to maintain Sabbath quietness in suburban districts if Christian residents were to exercise themselves to this end.

The proposed legislation for protecting the factory operatives of India, especially women and children, has aroused great opposition on the part of the manufacturers, who assert that there is nothing requiring legislative interference. But facts are against them. In two recent letters to The Times, Mr. Holt-Hallet produced unimpeachable evidence, medical, special, and practical, that long and exhausting labour by children and women does exist; that some Indian cotton mills work eighty hours per week, as against fifty-six in England; that in some factories in Khandesh women have been known to work night and day for a week at a stretch, and that, as a general rule, in the absence of any second shift of children or women, these have to keep the same hours as men. More than ten years ago the then Secretary of State for India (Lord Cranbrook) recognised the urgent necessity for legislation on this subject; since that time the need has become doubly urgent.

☞ We are sometimes asked to stitch this paper. We would do so, if we could, but it would delay publication, which is already affected by folding and cutting. It would, however, greatly add to our readers' comfort and convenience if, before beginning to read, they would stitch or even pin their copy. To pin it near the top and bottom of the page, being careful to keep in the crease, would take very little trouble, and prevent the leaves falling about. Pray try it.

We would remind our kind correspondents of the desirability of sending in their reports of conferences or special missions promptly. With the constant pressure on our columns it is manifest that we cannot publish reports of gatherings two or three weeks after they are held. May we add that the notes should be brief and pointed? In many cases a closely-written postcard would suffice.

The "Annual Paper concerning the Lord's Work in connection with the Pastors' College" is an intensely interesting book. The official statements are as spiritual in tone as are the reports received from brethren abroad. Mr. Spurgeon writes:—

> To fashion the image is something; but to form the moulds, in which many images may be cast, is far more. He who converts a soul, draws water from the fountain; but he who trains a soul-winner, digs a well, from which thousands may drink to life eternal.

The pastor of the Metropolitan Tabernacle may well be pardoned for thus magnifying the service in which God has permitted him to engage with such blessed results.

The "Dead Man's Diary" that is now running its course in Lippincott's Magazine is open to the criticism that it gives free play to the imagination where there ought to be a reverent silence or suspension of view. Yet, in the main, the writer appears to us to show the profound insight of the Christian philosopher. We are not sure that he does justice to the Puritans in the following sketch of their conception of the Divine Being, but we fear his picture of modern theology has very little exaggeration in it:—

> "Men create their god after their own image," says the author of the "Life of Heine"; and it is a fact that the conception of God changes with the manners and morals of a people. To our Puritan forefathers He was a just but awful judge, who from his home in the vast abysses of space kept an unwinking watch upon us, his creatures, and, with eyes of telescopic minuteness, noted every breach of his commandments, in order that He might visit such breach with a fiery and fearful vengeance. That man-created God is now no more; He is dead, and another God reigns in his stead. But in our natural reaction from the conception of the vindictive God of past generations, we have come, in these days, to lose sight of the fact that our God is a chastening one. Not only have we turned a deaf ear to the thunders and the threats of old-fashioned orthodoxy, but many of us pooh-pooh the thought of a hell at all, and speak of God as though He were a good natured and weakly indulgent parent, on whose leniency we might lightly presume, forgetting that sin—unrepented sin—never can and never must go unpunished.

The writer's close analysis of human motive and conduct and the varied ways in which these overstep the line of rectitude is very striking; and the influence of these articles on the living must be good, however speculative they may be as to the fate of the unrepentant dead.

The General Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland, under the moderatorship of Dr. Thomas Brown, of Edinburgh, will meet in that city next week. There are special causes for anxiety in connection with the coming Assembly; but subjects will also be forthcoming that are not controversial: the Colonies, which Dr. Rainy has visited; the Foreign Mission-field, about which Dr. Lindsay, from India, Dr. Stewart, from Africa, and Dr. Pierson, are expected to speak; also the remarkable openings on the Continent and in Palestine. Such topics must draw to the Assembly the sympathetic interest of all Christ's followers.

Historical criticism, with its sceptical tendencies, is by no means confined to documents admitted to have come down from ages long past. It would have us doubt records of events of quite recent times in our own and other lands. One may judge its spirit and purpose by a remark in last week's Athenæum, describing the late Dr. Wylie's "History of Protestantism" as "a partisan pamphlet in three big volumes full of exploded fables, which had better never have been published." The sweeping character of this statement should prove as effective as any laboured refutation.

The conversion and life of Luther, "the monk who shook the world"; the massacre of St. Bartholomew's day and the martyrdoms of the Marian period in England; the glorious Reformation in its inception, progress, and results: these are the outstanding topics dealt with in Dr. Wylie's great work. Would that the horrors were "exploded fables!" It is difficult to realise how anyone but a Romish apologist, more zealous than cautious, could have used these words in reference to Dr. Wylie's books. The "History of Protestantism" is, in our judgment, one of the works which ought to be widely read to-day, when Rome is making so many recruits in countries nominally Protestant.

A recent return presented to Parliament shows that in England the revenue derived last year from spirits was £11,432,874; in Scotland, £3,335,364; and in Ireland, £2,407,549; from wine, England, £1,046,089; Ireland, £92,408; Scotland, £72,040; from beer, England, £7,661,347; Ireland, £722,858; Scotland, £397,880. As if these amounts were not sufficient, England paid in duty upon tobacco £68,777; Ireland, £8,621; Scotland, £7,270. It would be interesting to have in connection with such returns the expenditure of the Government in dealing with the poverty, and crime, and vice that loom behind this revenue from drink. The result would be startling enough to bring about some effort in the way of a suppression of a traffic responsible for so much of that which is discreditable and injurious to the State.

In a recent article on the labour question, Mr. Gladstone paid a fine tribute to the influence of Christianity on the welfare of the people:—

For the whole of the enormous advance in the progress of the labouring classes the basis was laid once and for all by the Gospel. This was in its original form and by its continuing purpose the charter of human freedom.

The fact that the renovating process has been retarded and sometimes even reversed does not take from the truth of this clear statement, which we commend to those who are disposed to blame Christianity for that which has resulted from its corruptions and perversions.

It is satisfactory to note the vigorous efforts which are being put forth by the Belfast Presbytery to bring about a better and closer observance of the Sabbath in the North of Ireland. To judge from the tone of a recent influential meeting, Belfast seems to have made up its mind thoroughly in regard to the desirability of Sunday closing of public-houses, of the post-office, and the limitation in many directions of Sunday labour. We hope that the example set by the Christian community in Belfast may soon be followed by action in other towns and cities on our own side of the Channel.

The report of the House of Lords' Committee on "Sweating," to which we alluded last week, speaks only too truly when it attributes much of the responsibility for the present state of things to the improvidence of the workers themselves, to "early marriages, and the tendency of the residuum of the population in large towns to form a helpless community, together with a low standard of life and the excessive supply of unskilled labour." Such evils as these lie too deep to be cured by laws or by committees. For their alleviation, if not their removal, we must look to the gradual raising of the tone, and the improvement of the surroundings, of the individual toilers.

It has been suggested that there should be police supervision in the cases of adoption which it is presumed result from the numerous advertisements in the daily and weekly press. Seeing that in most of these advertisements only a small sum of money is asked for there is reason to fear that some of them point to an evasion of the Baby Farming Act, and that the term adoption is simple a synonymous term with removal. Rev. Benjamin Waugh's startling statement in The Contemporary Review, that the death-rate of illegitimate children born in Great Britain is more than double that of other infants points to something far worse than mere carelessness.

GOSPEL MISSION, LEICESTER.—This Mission has celebrated its third anniversary. Gipsy Cornelius Smith, of Cambridge, and his wife, conducted the services, and continued with much blessing to hold services for ten days. Much blessing has attended the Mission during the past year.

MRS. AMANDA SMITH, who came from Liberia to England in November last in very poor health, has to some extent recruited, though she is yet far from robust. Last Sunday she spoke twice at the Gospel Hall, Wood Green. In the evening to a crowded congregation her rousing exhortations to saint and sinner were given with all the native eloquence and pathos of her race, and a deep impression was made. Mrs. Smith remains in England for some months yet, and then proceeds to America.

The Spirit and the Word.

By Rev. H. C. G. MOULE.*

It appears to me that many widely prevalent present views of the nature and function of the written Word, however much truth of detail may enter into their formation, err in their ensemble by their deeply humanitarian, naturalistic character. Taking up the perfectly true position that human agency and natural process are largely present as factors in the production of Scripture, many an able theorist declines, or fails, to see that nevertheless the resultant of the factors of production is not humanitarian, nor naturalistic, but the Divine Word, the supernatural oracle.

All this failure is the effect far less of a patient and inductive study of the phenomena, than of the general influence of the modern tendency to simplify and unify phenomena under laws as general as possible. It comes not a little of an instinctive wish to see a likeness, a homogeneity, and ultimately a oneness, under all spiritual operations and experiences. And so the "inspiration" of Prophet and Apostle is classified as the same in genus, and even in species, as the "inspiration" of the Christian believer of our day in his walk of faith and obedience; as a development—in some respects very high, no doubt, but still only a development— of the general "consciousness" of the Church and its members. . . . .

I am very well aware with what mental energy and skill, and along with what a range and depth of various knowledge, such theories in many instances have been constructed and propagated—I hardly need say how "defended," so vast a currency have they obtained. Comparatively few and far between are the modern literary theologians who quite definitely and unmistakably hold that the Holy Scriptures are truly and properly sui generis among books as being (as well as containing) the Word of God,† and as carrying in a way quite of their own that precious thing, Divine Authority. But I also recollect that in many a past period and crisis the deep tide of intellectual consciousness has taken directions which, on the whole, needed afterwards to be reversed, on a fuller discovery or more calm and reverent review of great facts which had remained all the while unaltered. And I humbly believe that the day will come when the intellectual consciousness of Biblical scientific students as a class will be vastly more alive than it is now to the superhuman and authoritative aspect of the Holy Bible and to the immense significance of that aspect.

What I attempt to do here is simply to recall my reader's attention earnestly, gravely, and with deep conviction to the witness which the Holy Scripture bears to its own unique character among books, as the Book whose Author is none other than the Third Person of the Blessed Trinity. And need I say that this is no argument in a circle? I ask the Bible to witness to the Bible; but I ask the Bible as literature, as history, to witness to the Bible as revelation, oracular, authoritative, divine.

As history, capable of verification, it shows me Jesus Christ, God and man, living, dying, rising, proving Himself to be profoundly, ultimately trustworthy. But this Jesus Christ, as presented in the same historical mirror, is seen laying one hand upon the prophets and the other upon the Apostles, and bidding his followers regard with an altogether unique attention their uttered messages. And I attend accordingly to those messages. And in them I find disclosures and intimations as to the quality and authority of the Biblical writings as the oracles of God which, if words have meaning, put those writings—as to their total character—on a level different in kind from all other literature. I find nothing to forbid me to ask, with deep reverence, whether human personality and natural process were not factors to the product; and I assuredly find that they were. But I find it emphasised with vastly greater earnestness and fulness that so did the other factor of ultimate Divine Authorship govern and manipulate the lower factor that the true Designer and Architect of the Book has had his way all along, in the total and in the details too.

I find nothing to enable me to define, in any full or exhaustive way most certainly, the mode of the supreme Author's management of the subordinate authors. I find nothing to tell me "what it felt like to be inspired." In many and many a case, I can well believe, it "felt like"—nothing; nothing distinguishable from other things. I can well believe that when St. Paul wrote to Philemon he "felt" nothing supernatural, any more than when Luther wrote to Melancthon, or Newton to Cowper. I do not say that it was so; but it may have been so, for all that we are told. On the other hand, I not only can believe, but am sure, that Daniel and St. John received their revelations in a state manifestly and entirely abnormal, as Abraham and Moses on certain occasions had done before them; unless we are to put quietly aside the profoundly solemn assertions to this effect made in Scripture as if they were so much poetical and imaginative excrescence or framework, because there is so little in human experience outside Scripture, outside this record of the Divine redemption of fallen man, to verify them.

Yes, it is impossible to define or describe Scriptural inspiration as a subjective experience. The mode, as to any general account of it, is unknown. "Our theory is not to have a theory." But I do find abundant testimony on the historic surface of the New Testament Scriptures for the strong and unalterable conviction, sure as the historical reality of Jesus Christ our Lord, that a humanitarian naturalistic view of Scripture is wholly and gravely inadequate to meet the mysterious facts.

I find our Lord and Master Himself handling the Old Testament Scriptures with the manner of one who not only owns their general significance, but personally cherishes, I dare to say reveres, their authority, even in details of expression; and I find Him doing this, not only in the early stages of his course, but even more in the latter, in the last. And I see Him doing it nowhere more fully and unreservedly than when He has overcome death, and (Luke xxiv.) come back from the unseen in the power of an endless life. And when, exalted into heaven, He "sends" the blessed Paraclete, his own promised Representative, the Spirit of Truth, I find that one main result of the gloricus emission was the inccssant use by the Apostles, of the writings of the prophets, in precisely the spirit, no less and no more, of their Master before them.

"Nyassaland."—A Reply.

By Rev. D. KERR CROSS, M.B., C.M.

With many others who take a deep interest in the work of Christ in East Central Africa, I have been much pained at the communications which appeared in The Christian of April 25 and May 2, under the hand of Captain Hore. To me it seems specially sad at the present moment, when the whole question of the possession and development of these lands, and of the suppression of slavery, is sub judice, to say one word in defence of the Arab. My own idea was to have let these papers die a natural death, but I have been urged to say a word. The articles refer to but two themes, (1) the best entrance into the country; and (2) the slave trade carried on by the Arabs.

Notwithstanding all that Captain Hore has said, there remains this one fact as regards the best entrance into the dark interior, that the traveller or missionary can enter the East Coast at Quilimane, or the mouth of the Zambesi, and work his way by water up to the extreme north of Tanganyika, and only be compelled to journey on foot a distance of 270 miles. Surely this must be much easier than the long wearisome journey of some 800 miles from Bagamoyo to Ujiji. Most of the London Missionary Society's men on Tanganyika who have travelled both ways have been my guests, and I have repeatedly heard them say that the two routes are not to be compared. Captain Hore himself, in a letter written to my colleague, the late Rev. J. A. Bain, on the completion of his journey from Nyassa to Tanganyika, remarked that the journey of 200 miles across was to him nothing but a delightful picnic all the way. Very different is this from the descriptions I have heard given by missionaries of the other way, viâ Zanzibar to Ujiji. The only drawback to the success of the Nyassa route is the imperfect means of carriage on the rivers and lakes at the hands of the company which professes to carry. If steamers are run regularly and successfully, I do not think a better entrance to the interior could be desired.

Specially sad, I think, are the remarks at the close of the first paper. I do hold, in contradiction to Captain Hore, that the commercial element, as I have seen it in the Nyassa region for the last four and a half years, has had a most beneficial effect on the country, and is such as I would do all I could to encourage. Nor have I ever seen any "influences of Europeans disturbing the quiet of their (missionary) native audiences, clogging and hindering all their lay organisation and eventually so disturbing the country as well nigh to annihilate their work." This to my mind is a cruel insinuation against men who have risked their lives in Nyassaland for the good of the people. As a missionary, I should never desire to be yoked with more excellent men than those I have associated with during the last four years at the north end of lake Nyassa.

Captain Hore's is the first voice I have ever heard raised in defence of the Arab and his slaving policy in Africa. Surely the Captain has not seen the same Arabs as I have seen them, or he would refrain from characterising the statements of slavery that have lately been given to the world as exaggerated. To me, half the horrors of slavery, and the slavery as it is going on around my little home at N'Cherenji at this moment, has not been told, nor can ever be told. It is quite true, as Captain Hore says, that the horrors of the slave trade of the far interior are committed, not by Arabs, but by natives and by disreputable half-castes. That is, the respectable Arab does not actually himself "gird up his loins" and hunt for slaves, but he puts the knife into the hand of maddened savages and urges them to stab. The Arabs cautiously approach the most powerful tribe in the country, and arm that tribe with, I am sorry to say, old English flint lock and cap guns, and send them forth to pillage and devastate the country around. At the present moment work such as this is going on all over the plateau between lakes Nyassa and Tanganyika, where I have been privileged to work.

Witness the Awawemba tribe. That tribe has been armed by Central Africa trading Arabs, and has been for years, as Captain Hore himself must know, scouring the whole plateau for slaves. I have known the people there to be cooped up in their filthy stockaded villages for three days on end, and not one venturing forth, all because the Awawemba were in the neighbourhood with their guns. Over and over again I have heard of women being captured by these marauders while in the wood, and have seen the mangled bodies of murdered men. During the last year five villages within a day and a half's journey of the mission station at N'Cherenji have been devastated; men murdered or driven to the hills; women, boys, girls, and cattle captured and carried off. I could give the names of these villages, as I know them well, and many of the women and young people carried off have been at my meetings.

Not only so. I know that Arab traders are settling down at Chikanamalira's country, and in that of Mwenewungu at the south east of lake Rukwa, and beginning a similar work. Last November I visited these countries and learned that already one village has been attacked by Chikanamalira's people, and I was inside two villages that had been lately destroyed by Mwenewungu. Only a year ago a harassing story was sent home by my dear late lamented colleague, Rev. J. A. Bain, from Ukukwe country to the north-west of Nyassa of a raid made by Merere on the Awakukwe people. Villages were destroyed, men murdered, women ravaged, and other deeds of cruelty perpetrated that one dare not mention. Who is carrying on such works of death? I answer it is the Central African Arab.

One other thing I am delighted to report; that only last mail brought cheering news from the men who have laboured with Captain Hore in their noble work on Tanganyika. It is that they have now washed their hands clean of the Arab. Hitherto, I am led to believe, they had employed as personal servants certain Zanzibaris. These doubtless were good men, but still Mohammedans, and, not attending the services of the mission station, could not have a healthy influence on the people around. One writes, "Thank God we are done with the Awarungwana."

One other thing: it strikes the natives I have come in contact with as a peculiar thing to see white men so greatly identified with Arabs and Zanzibaris. They scarcely ever see a traveller enter their country unless he has with him a large body of these as servants. They believe the white men are working for their good, but it is beyond them to understand how they should always be so greatly identified with those who do them so much injury. Perhaps the success that has attended the work of the Gospel and legitimate trade in Nyassa (and we have had some success; witness the large schools at Bandawé and work at Blantyre) is greatly due to the fact that we have allied ourselves with the people, depending on them for food, carriage, and shelter, and have washed our hands clean of the Arab.

Captain Hore asserts that the slave trade in Africa is African. True, there is a mild form of slavery in the country, but it is nothing when compared with the slavery as carried on by Arabs. I can testify that domestic slavery is almost unknown in the tribes I work with at the north of lake Nyassa. The Awanyakyusa have no slaves.

Sir,—As a partial reply to Captain Hore's statements in your issues of April 25 and May 2, I may remark that while Professor Drummond's view of the access afforded by the lakes route to the heart of Africa (which may be taken to be somewhere about Lake Albert) was held by many at the time he wrote, the founding of the East African Company has changed the conditions, and we shall probably see readier access from Mombassa to that region.

With regard to the Zanzibaris, the missionaries on the spot have just had to part with them, and to employ natives about their stations to work the steamer, &c., which seems to be a distinct advance on their employment of foreigners, and rather confirms Professor Drummond's views (see April number of the magazine of the London Missionary Society).

Of the road between Lakes Nyassa and Tanganyika, Mr. Hore wrote in 1884, when he says 35 miles (afterwards extended to 52) were completed: "I shall not soon forget the impression created on me when I first saw the work. Coming as I did from the interior, and not unacquainted altogether with the work of pick and shovel, &c., the road appeared to me to be a most wonderful undertaking, as indeed it is under present conditions, and with such appliances only as are available here. It is a most interesting and valuable work, securing the admiration and respect of the natives, and exercising upon them a wonderfully civilising effect."

Mr. Hore recommended that, as from Mwini Wandas to Tanganyika it is all smooth, a rapid work, cutting the trees, &c., was sufficient. Complications with the Arabs, who with their half-castes and slaves advanced into the country, and commenced war with the white men when they protected the natives, have delayed the carrying out of this part of the work. Even if no road work had been done, the discovery and survey of this great natural highway was an important step in African civilisation, made as far back as 1879.

The public are beginning to see this, and will become aware of the increasing importance of the route by Lake Nyassa, which in many ways is being improved and cleared of difficulties.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

William Ewing.

DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES.

In the evening papers of Wednesday, May 7, and in the morning journals of this day, May 8, a paragraph appeared in the police reports for the 7th which ran very much as follows:—At the Thames Police-court, to-day, a respectable-looking man applied to Mr. Mead for advice. He said he had two children in Dr. Barnardo's Home, and had made several communications to see them, but had been unable to do so.—Mr. Mead said if he found Dr. Barnardo was in the wrong he could give no effect to it, as he had no jurisdiction in that court. The applicant could go to the Royal Courts of Justice, which was the only jurisdiction in the kingdom to deal with the case. If the applicant had not sufficient money to employ a solicitor, he had better ask to see one of the Masters.

In reply Dr. Barnardo addressed the following letter of explanation to the leading London journals:—

"Dear Sir,—The application at the Thames Police-court to-day by a respectable man is a fair sample of many recently reported in the daily press. This man's two girls were admitted to our Institution while he was undergoing imprisonment of 18 months, as it is said, for the fourteenth time! His unfortunate wife declared that she had been driven to life on the streets by her husband, who lived on the proceeds of her infamy. Rescued herself by the agents of another charitable institution, her two girls were, at her own passionate request, transferred to my keeping, with the result that the 'respectable man,' their father, applies to-day to the police-court to regain their custody! Can I be blamed if in the interests of these two little female children now in my care I resist to the utmost of my power such an application?—Yours,

"Thos. J. Barnardo."

SOLDIERS' HOME, WINCHESTER.—The work in connection with the Soldiers' Home, which has now been in operation for thirteen years, has of late been greatly extended, and manifest blessing has rested upon the efforts to reach the surrounding villages. Many of these are in great spiritual darkness. Besides the Soldiers' Home, we have several halls and mission-rooms, where the Gospel is preached almost nightly. Our colportage work is being owned and blessed of God. So widely scattered are the houses in the rural districts that it has necessitated the employment of a Bible-carriage. All these agencies entail considerable expense. (Misses) L. and E. Perks.

Dr. Pentecost in Aberdeen.

Dr. Pentecost closed his work in Scotland, for the present, with a mission in Aberdeen, which he undertook at the cordial invitation of the Evangelical Association of the city. It was hoped that he would be able to give us a month, but so numerous were the applications for his services that we had to be satisfied with little more than a fortnight. This was a great disappointment to us, even at the first, but our regret deepened as the work advanced, and we saw the immense promise that lay in it. At the very time when there was the sound of abundance of rain, the worker was obliged to leave us. We are nevertheless profoundly grateful for the blessing vouchsafed through him.

At the very outset, the mission awakened deep interest on account of the known ability and power of the evangelist, and specially in consideration of the blessing which had attended his work in other places. The committee expected great things, and devised liberally. The Music Hall, the largest building in the city, was taken for the whole time of the mission, and the meetings were conducted in it nightly, with the exception of two or three evenings, when the hall was otherwise engaged. On these evenings the meetings were held in the South Established Church. The West Free Church was secured for the afternoon Bible-readings, and the Y.M.C.A. Hall for the workers' meetings on Sabbath mornings.

The Sabbath morning meetings were largely attended. The daily Bible-readings were also well attended, the estimated number present never being much, if any, below 600. On the week-day evenings, the audience which assembled in the Music Hall was invariably good, ranging from 1000 up to 2000. On Sabbath evenings the space available, even on the opening night, was taxed to the utmost, but on the third Sabbath, half an hour before the advertised hour, the hall was literally packed with an eager crowd. Over 3000 assembled, and hundreds were obliged to turn away.

This large and increasing attendance indicated the deep and growing interest of the community. Every address was felt to be a solid contribution to the understanding of Scripture truth, and was listened to with the deepest attention. Dr. Pentecost's comprehensive knowledge of Divine truth, his ability in the exposition and application of it, his wide acquaintance with the field of religious and philosophic thought, his experience in dealing with men in regard to Divine things, the aptness and beauty of his illustrations, and his forceful utterance—all conspired to render his discourses very attractive and helpful. Many believers will assuredly find pages of their Bible brighter and more precious through his teaching.

As to results, we desire to speak with caution. Between 200 and 300 came forward openly to acknowledge the Lord Jesus as their Saviour. Time only will declare the full import of these declarations, but we feel constrained to say that even some of the youngest who came forward expressed themselves in a way and manner that deeply touched us all and filled our hearts with a deep holy joy.

Two or three manifest advantages accrue from the evangelist's mode of dealing with inquirers, which has already been described in your pages. First, it ensures the capable handling of the difficulties that may hinder them. Further, hundreds will remain to an after-meeting so conducted, who would not wait to come to close quarters with any and every Christian worker that chose to accost them. Moreover, a clear issue is set before waverers, and a distinct opportunity afforded of making a decided stand for Christ. A confession so made is fitted to give definiteness to the act of faith, while it adds an argument for maintaining the position taken up. Difficulties, doubtless, attach to this as they do to every method, but it is a fair question whether the advantages in this case do not outweigh the difficulties.

At the Bible-readings a modification was adopted. After the statement, as at the evening meetings, instead of asking individuals to come forward, cards were given to those who wished to become Christians, and who were prepared to take the matter before the Lord and settle it as in his presence. At least fifty to sixty cards were taken, and the bulk of them were returned in token of surrender to Christ. We rejoice that so many saw their way to confess their faith in the Saviour, but all felt that perhaps not the least notable results would only be afterwards apparent. There was so much of the presence of God at these meetings, and such a deep, quiet earnestness pervading each assembly, that many hearts were certainly being moved towards God, and many were being led to surrender secretly to the Lord.

We must not overlook the refreshing enjoyed by believers. The work in their hearts was blessed and manifest. Had there been no other fruit of the mission, on this ground alone there would have been abundant cause for thanksgiving to God. Our trust is that we may not lose the ground we have gained. As touching our brother, Dr. Pentecost, we hope and pray that after his Indian campaign he may be brought to us again, by the will of God, and that then we may be privileged to see the deepening and extension of a work which has been begun by his all too brief stay amongst us.

FAIR-GROUND A MISSION FIELD.

Dear Sir,—Amidst the various efforts in the world's great harvest field, may I bring before your readers the mission field of the fair-ground? Fifty thousand travelling show-people are gathered together in various fair-grounds during the year. Most of them are without any settled home, and, as it is almost impossible to gather them together except on the Sunday, I plead for continued and extended Christian effort during the summer, when so many fairs are held.

We are fighting a great battle with vice and sin, intoxicating drink being the great foundation. We are endeavouring to remove this great barrier out of the way by bringing this people together on the Lord's day; by free teas, open-air meetings, personal visitation, the distribution of Scriptures, tracts, books, Gospel cards, &c.

The Lord is touching hard hearts, and many a wanderer is being led from sin to the Saviour. Many have already passed through the gates into the eternal city. I shall be glad to supply report and a copy of the showman's paper, free of cost, to any address.—Yours in service, Elizabeth Millington, Hon. Sec.

Layerthorpe-grove, York.

THE LOWESTOFT SAILORS' AND FISHERMEN'S HOME is an excellent Institution, having for its chief object the shelter and help of shipwrecked and distressed sailors and fishermen of all nations. The twenty-sixth annual report states that thirty-three men and one woman were received last year, making 2,535 shipwrecked mariners taken in since the Institution was founded. The Home also furnished accommodation for sailors and fishermen paid-off from their vessels; also men coming from the country seeking berths. During the year ending March 31 last 640 fishermen slept in the Home at a nominal charge; some entirely free. The Home is the centre of many useful ministries, all superintended with commendable diligence and tact by the honorary manager, Mr. William Johnson.

AFTERWARD!

Leave the "Afterward" with Jesus!
In the present serve thy King!
Be thine aim and one endeavour,
Glory to his name to bring!

If it bringeth much of sorrow,
He will share it all with thee;
Never doubt his sweet compassion,
Or his loving constancy.

Ne'er a moment more than needful
Will his own be ever tried;
But his image shines more clearly,
When the fires have purified.

If it bring thee joy and gladness,
Priceless treasures, sweet and pure,
Learn to prize them as glad foretastes,
Of those joys which aye endure.

Be content to leave with Jesus
All life's "Afterward" may bring!
Thou hast promised heart-allegiance,
E'en till death, to Christ thy King!

Then, hereafter, when with Jesus,
In the saint-thronged courts above,
Thou shalt learn—oh! blissful knowledge!—
That the "Afterward" is Love!

A NEW DEPARTURE IN HUNGARY.

We have in Budapest a very largely attended evangelistic meeting weekly, and Jews come in surprising numbers. The people are brought in from the streets and lanes, highways and hedges, and hear the Word of life. Attacked and commended by the press of the city, we have held on our way, and the growing interest manifested by the public is most cheering. Sometimes I have, at the close of the meeting, invited those assembled to join us in the good work of inviting others. It has appeared almost as if the people might have replied: "But where have you got room for any more? Is not the hall full already?"

I desire now—somewhat after the McAll system—to open a second hall for another evening in a crowded thoroughfare of the city. As visiting is conducted diligently on the territorial system, we may hope, working from a new centre, to bring in quite a new assembly to hear the Gospel. For rent and furnishing of such a hall, and appointing of an evangelist if necessary, we need £250. A great door is open. Shall we not enter? Andrew Moody.
Rudolf Quai 8, Budapest.

Y.W.C.A., BELFAST.—This Association is seeking to enlarge its borders by the acquisition of larger premises. A suitable house has been secured, we understand, at 9, Donegal-square East, by the trustees, and it is hoped that the Association, by the help of the friends of the work, will be able to purchase the freehold. For this they will require some £2000. Those who are desirous of having a share in this much-needed extension may communicate with the treasurer, Mr. John Workman, J.P., Lismore, Windsor-avenue, Belfast.

PENDLETON RAGGED SCHOOL.—The twenty-seventh annual meeting of the work carried on in John-street Hall, Pendleton, Lancashire, was held recently, Mr. John Muir presiding. In point of results, the school had in no previous year been so successful. The endeavour is to get hold of the children who attend no place of worship, and especially those who are thrown on the streets on Sunday evenings. The attendance during the year numbered 38,000, there being on one Sunday over 3000 children present. Not without a great amount of earnest labour is the school kept open. We are glad to observe that it has warm friends among those who know how great is the need, and how praiseworthy are the efforts which Christian people put forth to supply it. The secretary of the school is Mr. John Sugden, 46, Market-street, Manchester.

"A BURIED TEXT."

CORRECT answers have been received from W. F. H., D. W., B. E. H., R. P. C., E. B., and T. B. The enigma was taken from an exceedingly useful and interesting collection of Scripture exercises in verse and prose, by Miss Lucy Taylor, called PLEASANT HOURS WITH THE BIBLE (2s. Religious Tract Society). We commend it very heartily to our young readers as a help in their study of the sacred oracles. We give below another and more difficult exercise for solution. Competitors should send in the name of the person, and the Scripture references.

RESCUED SLAVES AT ADEN.

BY REV. J. DOBIE.

MY DEAR YOUNG FRIENDS,—I am sure you would like to hear about a visit which I paid to the mission-station near Aden, founded by the late Hon. Ion Keith-Falconer, and now being worked by the Free Church of Scotland.

Since it came into England's hands Aden has become very prosperous, and the population has enormously increased. Indeed it has become too populous, and a place called Sheikh Othman, about five miles off, was selected as a place to which the surplus population might be sent, should any difficulties arise as to the supply of food for the town in time of war.

All round about Aden, there are Arab tribes occupying an area of land 200 miles by 40, numbering 130,000 souls. Over these Great Britain has established a protectorate, and pays them 12,000 dollars a year so long as they do not misbehave, and we only interfere for the purpose of quelling any local disturbance that may arise.

It was in the hope of attracting these tribes to the truth of Christ that Mr. Keith-Falconer established his mission-station at Sheikh Othman, which enjoyed the double advantage of being removed from the town of Aden and yet of being on the high road for natives carrying their produce from the interior of Arabia for disposal at Aden. But, alas! Mr. Keith-Falconer did not live to see his work even well begun; but, had he lived, with his noble spirit and his great learning, he would by and by have become a great power among these benighted and fanatical tribesmen.

I was told at Aden that there were a number of Abyssinian slaves at the Mission, and this greatly increased my interest in it; and apparently this interested the people of the place as well, for the instructions given to my coachman as I left the hotel at Aden were to "go to the slaves," and he in turn, on arriving at Sheikh Othman, asked not for the Mission, but for "the slaves," and everybody appeared to know all about them. When I drove up to the door of the mission-house I was immediately met and received in the most warm and friendly manner by the Rev. Mr. Gardiner, who is in charge of the Mission. It was washing-day, and the boys were off their regular duties, some engaged in drawing water, some scrubbing the clothes, and others hanging them out to dry in the sun. But they speedily gathered round Mr. Gardiner and me as we engaged in conversation.

The girls, however, were busy at their lessons, and we went upstairs to the schoolroom, and there they were seated in a row, very comfortably and prettily dressed, and with slates and pencils in their hands, under an Abyssinian mistress, who was herself a rescued slave and is now a Christian. When I first saw them, poor things, I thought with sorrow of all the sufferings which they had endured, and I thought many of my dear young friends at home would like to know about them. The teacher told me that, like herself, they were from the province of Galla, which is on the uplands of Abyssinia, bordering on the Soudan. Some of them had been sold by their parents to pay off debts, others had been bartered for something else, and others had been carried off by force, and all of them had been driven hundreds and hundreds of miles down to the coast, and put on board ship at a place called Tajura, an African port south of Aden, to be taken to Mecca on the Red Sea, and there to be sold. My heart was full of sympathy with them as I thought of all this, and I inwardly blessed the British gunboat which had rescued them from their cruel position.

Some of them were really handsome and quite light coloured. These were of pure Galla origin. Others, through intermixture, had acquired the black complexion and the flat noses and thick lips of the Soudanese. The female teacher had been so long away from her native land that she had forgotten her native language, but it had all come back to her from conversation with her pupils. The Galla language, it appears, has no letters like English, and there are no helps to the study of it except one very bad grammar. But Mr. Gardiner and Mr. Lockhead, with praiseworthy energy, had apparently mastered it so far as to be able to converse fluently with the children; and they in turn had learned to write Galla both in English and in the letters at present in use in Abyssinia. For my benefit they wrote on their slates in Galla a portion of Psalm ciii., two of them sang a duet in their own sweet tongue, and then they all sang together in English the hymn "Jesus loves me," and also in the Galla language a Christmas hymn composed by the native male assistant in the Mission.

But time was passing, and it was beginning to get hot, and I bade the children good bye. The missionaries gave me a most hearty invitation to stay with them during my visit to Aden, but I thought it better to hurry on to the port on the Red Sea from which I am now writing to you, and from which I am just starting for the interior of Arabia, before it becomes too hot to accomplish my purposed journey in comfort. Everyone who loves his fellow creatures, and who loves the truth of Christ, must rejoice that in the providence of God the chains of slavery have been struck off these tiny hands and feet, and that, though they are far away from home, these children are now in such kind and tender keeping. May we not also hope that some of these children, when they have received a Christian education, may be sent forth into their native regions and help to spread the light of Christ in darkened Africa? That would be a great and blessed result of their deliverance from the cruel slave raider. And it is one of the ways in which God has ere now brought light into lands of darkness.

I left the Mission premises delighted beyond measure with my visit, and with only one regret—that, owing to the amount of sickness amongst them, the children in all probability will have to be removed to a more healthy locality. Mr. Gardiner, it appears, will have to part from them, and this, I could plainly see, cannot be done without much mutual sorrow; because now not only has he succeeded in mastering their mysterious language after great labour, but, what is perhaps not less important, he has gained a complete hold upon the warm affections of boys and girls alike.—Church of Scotland Record.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., May 18, Eph. v. 15—33; Mon., May 19, Eph. vi. 1—12; Tues., May 20, Eph. vi. 13—24; Wed., May 21, Hosea vi. 1—7; Thurs., May 22, Hosea xiv. 1—9; Fri., May 23, Joel i. 1—14; Sat., May 24, Joel ii. 1—17.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Messrs. Hankinson and Hutchinson, Corn Exchange, Hereford to May 19; Ross, May 20, 21. Mr. H. Hutchinson, Pershore, May 22; Reading, May 23; Rev. W. S. Standen and Mr. H. Hutchinson, Emmanuel Church, Wimbledon, May 26 to June 3. Rev. J. Outram, Kenley, May 19—22. Mr. H. Hutchinson, Tent, Valegrove, Chelsea, June 2—13.

A LITTLE CRIPPLES' PARTY.

GOD has abundantly owned the labours of Mr. Boyer, who superintends the Drift Children's Mission in East London. One of the most interesting departments of the work is that of the Cripples' Band, divisions of which are under the care of ladies, who occasionally visit the poor children, and oversee the "Toy Exchange," which has been established for their special enjoyment. A few days ago a treat was provided for such of the cripples as could be got to the large school-room of Stepney Meeting House. About seventy little sufferers were present, some having been conveyed in perambulators and carts, lent by friends. The sight was a very touching one, and will not soon be forgotten by those who witnessed it. Through the kindness of the president of the Mission (Mr. Simeon Clayton, of Bow Common-lane) tea was provided, and the occasion was one of unusual pleasure to the strange guests.

After play, the little cripples sang of the "Good Shepherd," and the "Beautiful Home on High." They were amused in various ways, and were ultimately sent home happy with presents of flowers and toys. Many came from garrets and rooms in dark, narrow courts, and it is hoped that the ray of sunshine in their lives will be a blessed memory to them, and the sample of future enjoyable experiences. One boy of eight years had lost a leg; a girl of thirteen could use none of her limbs, except the right hand; another, a victim of spinal affection, was not able to stand. In many cases the parents were of the thriftless class, and of degraded habits, and most of the children showed sad signs of want of nourishment and clothes; and a sight of them made it clear that visitation among their homes would inevitably afford delight to Christians who may be in search of opportunities to spread light and joy in dark and cheerless places.

[We very heartily commend this remarkable work of Mr. Boyer's to the practical sympathies of our readers.—ED.]

JEWS IN NEW YORK.—In a recent letter Rev. Jacob Freshman, pastor of the Hebrew Christian Church, New York, writes:—"The Lord is giving us his favour in our hard work among the Hebrew people. Our meetings are well attended, and we have earnest inquirers constantly among us. Several have lately come out publicly confessing our glorious Messiah."

RATCLIFF WELCOME HOME.—At the last muster of the "Christian Lifeboat Crew," Miss Child told how during the past month detachments of the crew had gone to Crouch End, Lewisham, Westminster, Bow Common, Highbury, and Turnham Green. Letters were received from these and several other places telling about the results of the visits. The various divisions are doing good work. At Eastbourne the work is much owned of God.

MAY MEETINGS.

British and Foreign Bible Society.

THE BIBLE was grandly magnified in Exeter Hall on Wednesday last week, on the occasion of the annual meeting of the British and Foreign Bible Society. One after another, the speakers eulogised the Book, not only for what it is, but also for what, in the hands of God's Holy Spirit, it effects in the moral and spiritual world. Not only is God's Word a hammer whereby hard hearts are broken, but it is a soothing balm for wounded souls; like the leaves of the tree of life, its precepts and promises are "for the healing of the nations."

The EARL OF HARROWBY, who presided, dwelt upon the anxieties and encouragements of the work. Surveying the Continent, he spoke of the tone and feeling of the millions of people in France, Spain, and Italy. In those countries there is a growing alienation from the Papal system, and, concurrently therewith, a greater willingness is shown by the populations to buy the Scriptures and read them for themselves. Not only, however, is the Society circulating the book in larger numbers than ever, but the native agencies in several countries are advancing. In Germany, the home of so much destructive criticism, faith in the Bible was never so strong, and the circulation of copies never so large. Lord Harrowby pointed out that as a result of modern discoveries and commercial development, Christendom is being daily brought into closer relations with the heathen and Mohammedan world. What, he asked, will the reaction of that contact be upon Christendom? Except strenuous efforts are made by followers of Christ the present balance of influence must be considerably affected.

Rev. JOHN SHARP, secretary, read a brief abstract of the report. The issues of Bibles, Testaments, and portions rose to a total of 3,792,000, a considerable advance on those of the previous year. The figures of recent years have been swollen by the special and temporary returns of the "Penny Testament." When these are withdrawn, the normal issues show strong and rapid progress. The expenditure of the year amounted to £227,666. At the Paris Exhibition over a quarter of a million of portions passed into the hands of visitors, and thus the nature and work of the Society were made known, perhaps more widely than before. In Hungary the issues have been the largest on record, and the same is the case with several other countries. In China and Japan, as well as Persia and India, Bible work is a movement full of interest, and in many places the colporteur has come to be regarded as the bearer of veritable messages from heaven.

THE ARCHBISHOP OF YORK

delivered a vigorous address, going to the root of things by showing why the circulation of the Bible is a matter of so much earnest concern on the part of Christian people. The Tübingen School has so receded from its first positions that it is impossible to regard as a science the criticism which led to such conclusions. We should look at these matters from the centre outward, and not, as the critics have done, from the periphery inwards, with the hope of destroying the centre itself—that is, destroying the supernatural. We turn to Christ Himself, the centre of our religion. It is not criticism that must give us evidence about Him, but Christ Himself must be heard. As surely as He convinced those to whom He spoke on the shores of Galilee will He convince us in this nineteenth century, and lead us and govern our consciences if we give ourselves to Him. I believe the Bible, New Testament and Old, because of Christ Himself. Our Lord came, so to speak, from the bosom of the Jewish religion, upon which He pronounced in the course of his ministry. He attested the Old Testament, and we cannot throw aside that which He attests without assailing his office as a prophet.

REV. F. W. MACDONALD, of Birmingham, in a powerful speech, enlarged upon the place of the Bible in the economy of redemption. The Bible is immeasurably greater than those who oppose it, also than those who serve it. Christ refused to grant a sign to those who required one of Him, but upon the poor and humble and believing He multiplied signs and wonders. So, to-day, those who are hostile know nothing of the proofs of the working of Christ upon which those who follow Him can lay their hands. As to the Old Testament Scriptures, Christ told the Jews of his day that He had come to fulfil them, not merely to fulfil certain predictions, but to complete them, gather up in all their fruition and power—and that they "testified of Him." The Jews laughed Him to scorn, would not recognise his claim, and had Him crucified. What do the centuries say as to the two interpretations of the Old Testament? In the hand of the Jew it has been a letter without spirit, lifeless, voiceless; it has not been carried through the world, and the Jew has not smitten rocks therewith so that the people might drink of forth-flowing water. On the other hand, with the Christians the book has moved through the world, has been at home in every country. Moses and the Prophets have dwelt with the Gentiles, feeding their piety, nourishing their moral life, and breathing Divine consolation into them. In the name of Christ the Old Testament gives forth hidden virtues which, with the traditional interpretation of the Jews are not evoked. We find in the Old Testament the Christ to whom we have first been introduced in the New, and find in the Law, the Prophets, and the Psalms, witness borne to Jesus Christ as our Lord and Saviour.

PASTOR C. H. SPURGEON

declared his personal reverence for the Book. He said: I hate the science of comparative theology. I know but one God; all the rest are idols. I hate all comparisons of "sacred books"; I know but one such book, all the rest are pretenders. The Bible has passed through a good deal of criticism. I do not know why it should have been criticised with such severity when so many other books have been allowed to escape almost scot free. Had they been criticised after the manner the Bible has been, not a fragment of them would have been left; now, after all, not a fragment of the Holy Scriptures are gone! Sometimes I marvel at the men who are critics. One said to me, "I do not agree with Paul" in a certain matter. Who was that individual? I should have to take off my spectacles and borrow a magnifiying glass to see him; yet he "did not agree with Paul!" In an age of rushlights I should not have been more surprised if one had said it did not agree with the sun! But the books of Scripture are not to be treated so. It is not for every Jack, Tom, and Harry to criticise Daniel, Ezekiel, and the very Christ of God—but impudence is certainly not a very rare quality nowadays. Illustrating the extent to which individual Christians have proofs of the reality of the Word of God, the speaker gave his own testimony, and mentioned the case of an old lady whom he recently visited. Her Bible had occasional marks of "T. and P." in the margin. Asked what this meant, she said, "That means 'tried and proved'"; she then told of her times of trouble and distress, and said that, believing the promises, she had pleaded them in prayer, and proved them true. Enlarging upon the wonderful character of the Book, Mr. Spurgeon told of two young men who were asked what book they would like to have if shut up alone for twelve months. One said he would take a Bible, and on the remark being made, "Why, you are not a religious fellow," he rejoined, "No; but the Bible is no end of a book. Other books you can read once or a few times, perhaps, but the Bible you have never done with, however many times you read it."

Having urged loyalty to the Book, the speaker said he sometimes hoped that it would be by way of the Bible that all believers in Christ would one day come together again. Each might love the Church to which he belonged, but in proportion as all came to the Word of God there would be a coming near to one another on the part of believers. After pointing out that Scripture principles will make citizens dutiful, Mr. Spurgeon urged Christians to avail themselves more often of the privilege of giving away copies of the Bible. Twenty years ago he gave a twopenny Testament to a cabman, and fifteen years later he heard that it had been blessed to the man's conversion.

REV. JOHN MCNEILL introduced to notice the excellent adjunct of the Society, the London Bible and Female Domestic Mission, now thirty-two years old. He compared the critics to the Israelites when the manna fell from heaven. They said, "What is it?" Moses came along and told them to eat it. So the Bible is not properly an object of discussion, but rather a life-giving message from God. He related his own experience. The son of a Scottish peasant, his early days were passed in an atmosphere of love for the Bible; he recited some stanzas from Burns' poem, "The Cottar's Saturday Night," because it described his experience. He reached Christ along the road of an infallible book.

With much power, Mr. McNeill compared the Bible to the burning bush in which God appeared to Moses. In the spirit of the critic, Moses said at first, "I will now turn aside" and see why this is. But God forbad him, and said, "Draw not nigh hither." God virtually told him to approach near enough to hear and see well, but no nearer. So with the Bible. If we would not make its saving light to turn into destructive lightning, we must not be too venturesome. As the fire rose in the bush, so something arises in the Book in which God reveals Himself. Many a man of critical temper has gone to the study of the sacred page, and, indeed, of Christ Himself, and returned without seeing anything supernatural. We need a reverent spirit, so that we may observe a proper distance, and then, if we curb our natural curiosity, we shall hear God speaking to us in the Bible as in no other book.

It is hardly needful to add that the several speakers eloquently urged the claims of the Society upon the generosity of the Christian community. Mr. Spurgeon specially appealed to the wealthy, telling them that though they might be "worth" a great deal, he could not hold them to be really of great worth unless they contributed liberally to the Society's funds.

Anti-Sunday-Travelling Union.

THE organisation formed to persuade people not to travel on Sundays, unless in case of urgent necessity, and to take a pledge to that effect, has a membership of more than nine thousand. At the annual meeting in Exeter Hall last week, Mr. GAINSFORD BRUCE, M.P., occupied the chair. There was a large attendance of men and women who had evidently the courage of their convictions. The chairman attributed most of the toil in which 400,000 railway, tram, cab, omnibus, and steamboat men have to engage on that day to the thoughtlessness rather than the wickedness of the public.

Mr. G. F. CHAMBERS said the Society sought to deal directly with those who travel on Sundays. Miss EVERED POOLE, in a quiet but eloquent address, deplored the apathy, if not positive hostility, of Christians with regard to the sanctity of the Sabbath, and repelled the usual objections made by opponents. What the working-classes need is not a day of travel and excitement, but a day on which to rest and to make friends with the best of friends. Rev. HENRY SHARP said the Sabbath was protected by both promise and command, and the test of a man's love for the Saviour is whether he keeps his commandments. Among the other speakers were Miss Mason, Rev. Arthur Hall, Rev. Mr. Walters, and Mr. Terry.

West London Mission.

THERE is no mistaking the spirit which animates this organisation. The practical tone and the enthusiasm of Friday's meetings were spiritually elevating to all privileged to attend. "Grand social Christianity," a phrase we borrow from a report full of stirring details, simply told, well expresses the Christlike watching, in varied ways, for the bodies and souls of the poor which is the aim of the workers.

In the afternoon we found Cleveland Hall filled with those who had come to hear addresses from some of "The Sisters of the People." Rev. HUGH PRICE HUGHES explained that the occasion was not the general anniversary, which is held in the autumn, but a "May Meeting" associated with the Cleveland Hall branch. There is need for taking an additional house for the purposes of the Sisterhood, and adding to the number of members, who are overworked and grieved by discovering needs with which they are physically unable to deal. In order to thus advance, and to meet expenses to October, £1000 will be needed, in addition to regular collections. The greatest difficulty was to bring home to friends, not what had been done, but what might be done with adequate resources.

Mrs. WHELPDALE, after expressing warm sympathy with the work, called upon Mrs. Hughes, who narrated experiences in the inquiry-room. A friendless girl, on her way to commit suicide, was advised by a policeman to come to the Mission, and is now holding a responsible post in a charitable institution. For an ungodly husband, who tried to hinder his wife's Christian course, special prayer was made; he secretly visited St. James's Hall, and was converted. A girl who, for business gain, had told a lie about her age, was counselled to take the right but difficult course of confession, and found deliverance in her employer's forgiveness. Difficulties, communicated in sacred confidence, are resolved, as Divine light streams into the strange places of London life.

Sister JEANETTE said the medical department comprises menial work, mothers' duties, providing food, finding work, hastening recovery from sickness by removing the causes of worry, watching orphans and widows. Drink first, then constitutional delicacy, aggravated by overwork and bad pay, are the causes of misery among English and foreign poor in London.

Sister AGNES said that, even with halls open all the week, many persons are unable to attend; hence the need of house-to-house visitation. Changed homes and lives cost hours of toil and thought, for chains of habit are hard to break; but conscience gradually develops, lives of sin are arrested, differences between husband and wife are adjusted, wrongs are repaired, timid testimony is strengthened, and men are converted through exhibitions of practical godliness.

Nurse AMELIA (whose remarkable introduction to the Mission is given in Advance for May) described life in the Convalescent Home at Bisley, Gloucestershire, established for the poor, where she cares for the soul as well as the bodily health. Her influence has extended to the village; and meetings of various kinds, with growing attendances, are graciously used of God. On the occasion of a picnic, the nurse entered a cottage and led an old man to the Saviour, while her patients were praying outside. The villagers were anxious to fill with garden produce empty hampers which she had to return to London; and the village children are delighted to show little ones from London over the country.

After tea, in the commodious schoolrooms, friends made their way to St. James's Hall, which rapidly filled for

THE EVENING MEETING.

There was half an hour's music by the orchestral and military bands, under Mr. Heath Mills. After prayer and the hearty singing of "Onward, Christian soldiers," Mr. Percy Bunting read a statement of receipts and expenditure in the Mission generally, to March 31. The former had somewhat diminished, probably in part from special work in the provinces, while the latter had not increased; but, as success is an argument for extension, the prayers of the faithful ought to be followed by individual exertion to the fullest extent in supporting the work.

Mr. ISAAC HOYLE, M.P. (chairman), said the motive of the "forward movement" in London, Manchester, Birmingham, and elsewhere is not to strengthen Methodism, but compassion on the multitude. Sympathy bridges over the distance between classes and denominations. Royal Commissions may disclose national blemishes, but only the Good Physician can apply the remedy.

Rev. MARK GUY PEARSE said the Mission had not created, but had developed, gifts; and parents might well use it to finish the education of their daughters in the highest sense. We cannot keep religion unless we try with all our might to give it away. Christian women will find ways of usefulness without waiting for organisation. Sister Edith visited the infirmary before she entered the Sisterhood. As to the late hour objection, until the devil goes in for eight hours a day we cannot afford to demand that female workers shall be at home by nine o'clock.

Rev. W. D. WALTERS said he had found twelve months' work in the Mission an inspiration to his own spiritual life. The work increases membership in the churches, revives the work of God in the circuits, and expresses the spirit of our age—real progress with all our might.

Rev. HUGH PRICE HUGHES declared the Mission to be entirely unsectarian, and emphatically a temperance organisation. Three thousand men and women had signed the pledge since the work began, and there were two thousand children in their Bands of Hope. It would be a good thing to have a house open at all hours, day and night, so that tempted souls might know there were always Christian hearts ready to sympathise and succour; but that would need an increased staff. As the Government is in a great hurry to "compensate" liquor-sellers, Christians must use every opportunity of opposition. The Mission will certainly be represented at the Hyde Park demonstration, for it is not possible to exaggerate the evils of the liquor trade in Soho; and if it were cleared out of the way, Christian work would be comparatively easy. The Mission was almost entirely free from any abuse of charity. Sometimes all that a man needs is respectable dress. The late hour at which meetings have to be held reveals the monstrous fact that young people in London have to work from twelve to sixteen hours a day, some on Sunday also, in West-end houses of business. In great cities the people are worked to death. A refuge is needed for fallen girls, where they may be lodged while inquiries are made concerning them, for doubtless in many cases they would be gladly taken home by parents. Experience shows that when such women are convicted of sin, remedial action must be prompt, or evil companions will strive to drive away good impressions. The West-end is the very vestibule of hell, but Mr. Hughes blessed God that the Mission is established therein. He wanted to see an educated and wealthy brotherhood; for there is no happiness for the man who is doing nothing, or making more money than he has use for. Mr. Hughes paid a tribute to the liberality of domestic servants and business young men and women towards a Mission which does not pass through a single week without known conversions to God, and which is in the centre of the world's wickedness, where, God being manifestly with it, it will remain.

After a few words from Dr. H. S. Lunn, Rev. PETER THOMPSON deprecated the regarding of what had been accomplished as a grand success upon which to settle down. The work is only just beginning, and, though generous help and self-sacrificing devotion has prevailed, Christians have not realised what has to be done. In face of the statistics of pauperism and public-houses in St. George's-in-the-East, it was amazing to find Mr. Ritchie heading another attempt to "compensate" those who ought to compensate everybody else. The Mission was going in directly for the overthrow of the liquor traffic and the honouring of Christ instead. Mr. JOSIAH NIX, organising secretary, who was very warmly received, had heard touching prayers offered for blessing upon the "Sisters." He had to seek grace to listen to the troubles of the people in Soho, and asked every man and woman to oppose "compensation" with their might. Nothing would pay better than money invested in men and women.

Church Missionary Society.

THIS great Society keeps well its high place in public favour. Its anniversary gatherings on Tuesday, last week, were held as usual in Exeter Hall. The great auditorium was crowded out morning and evening; in the morning, the overflow was more than the Lower Hall could receive.

The SECRETARY had an almost herculean task in presenting a report of the year's work and advance. He could only deal in generalities with the limited time at his disposal. "Expansion and extension," he said, had been the watchwords of the year. The following extract will give an idea of the wide scope of the Society's work:—

By expansion the Committee designate fresh developments of existing work; by extension, fresh work altogether, either in new fields or in new departments or agencies; but no hard and fast line can be drawn between them. Among the most noticeable developments in respect of method may be mentioned (a) the continued increase in the Society's staff of lady missionaries, sixteen having sailed (or joined in the Missions) during the year, making sixty now on the roll, against twenty-two three years ago; (b) the scheme for the employment of Associated Evangelists, which, though as yet only begun with one small party, promises ere long to supply valuable auxiliaries to the work; (c) the plans adopted by some of the younger missionaries, notably in Africa and China, for working on simpler evangelistic lines—plans which the Committee have heartily approved, while continuing to recognise most fully the value of the older methods; (d) the arrangements for raising the standard of the Society's High Schools and Colleges in India, the Committee being unshaken in their conviction of the untold value of these institutions to the evangelisation of India, if worked fearlessly and faithfully as primarily and directly aimed at the salvation of souls—a conviction deepened by some striking conversions that have occurred in the past year; (e) the increase of Medical Missions, the Society having now on the roll twenty fully qualified medical missionaries, against six in 1880.

Geographically taken, the recent examples of expansion and extension comprise (a) a plan for attaching English missionaries to Sierra Leone for work among Mohammedans; (b) a good reinforcement to the Yoruba Mission; additional missionaries for (c) Egypt, (d) Palestine, (e) Baghdad; (f) a band of Cambridge men for the interior of Eastern Equatorial Africa; (g) another Cambridge band for the heathen towns and villages of Tinnevelly; (h) the first little band of associated evangelists in Bengal; (i) plans for further extension on the Afghan frontier; (k) the strengthening of the work in Hong-Kong and in the Kwan-tung Province of China by the doubling of the missionary force; (l) important extension and development in the populous north-western districts of the Fuh-Kien Province, where pioneers from Oxford and Cambridge have gone forward into populous cities hitherto unreached by the Gospel; (m) the occupation by English missionaries of four interior cities of Japan, and (n) the new Bishop Poole Memorial Girls' School at Osaka.

The important advances on the Niger were also referred to. In connection with India, a warm recognition was made of the labours of Rev. J. Barton, of Cambridge, at Tinnevelly; and of Rev. G. C. Grubb, in India and Ceylon. These and other special efforts are deemed of great importance, in view of the influences in India, tending towards sacerdotalism and externalism. Rev. S. A. Selwyn's mission to West Africa was thankfully spoken of. Then the Secretary passed to Equatorial Africa, which has bulked so largely in the most recent operations and developments of the Society. Mr. Stanley's explorations, the lamented death of Mr. A. Mackay, and the departure of Bishop Tucker, formed topics of special remark, and it was said that the prospects of Central Africa are brighter than might have been looked for under the circumstances.

During the year, 66 new workers have gone forth, including 23 ladies. The accession to the ranks of so many men of University training is matter of hope, but the report adds that "The supply for systematic training of young men of spiritual power and force and character, though of insufficient education, is still below what is required." The financial account was described as being "satisfactory beyond expectation," though the income did not quite meet the expenditure. We see it stated, however, that a donation of £5000 was given by a friend in the course of the day.

SIR JOHN KENNAWAY

was president of the meeting. Great things, he said, had been attempted, and much had been done. Gaps are being made in the ranks of the workers, but others are coming forward to fill them. Africa was the first field of the Society's work and success, and special attention has been drawn to it during the year. It is now scarcely the Dark Continent; a cordial reference here by Sir John to Mr. Stanley's return met with rather a cold response from the audience. The aggressive spirit of Rome in that region, he continued, may well prompt the Society to emulate its zeal. A very touching reference to the Society's loss through the death of Alexander Mackay evoked evident sympathy. After a passing reference to the great fields of India and China, the chairman said that, notwithstanding all that has been done, it is as a drop in a bucket compared with the vastness of the need.

BISHOP BICKERSTETH,

of Exeter, in moving a resolution calling for fresh and strenuous efforts, said that in his own diocese a third part of the parishes had no missionary organisation, and probably that is true of the whole of England. He felt very thankful for the work of a residentiary canon in Devonshire, who is giving himself to stirring up missionary zeal; would there were such a worker in every bishopric throughout the country.

THE EARL OF HARROWBY

was loudly cheered in an emphatic reference to the evangelical principles of the Society and to the worth of the Protestant Reformation. The very working of this Society proves that the evangelical section of the Church of England is not at all the moribund thing that some speakers and writers would make it out to be. He thought that in an age of intellectual doubt it was most gratifying that so many University men are coming forward to take a part in this work. All over the world there is a spirit of inquiry about Christianity, and in the native churches the dream of our forefathers is beginning to be realised. The increase of lady workers; the growth of medical missions; the multiplication of converts; the wide dissemination of the life-giving Word; the growing esteem in which missions are now held in the eyes of statesmen, consuls, and explorers; the adaptation of the evangelical faith to the spiritual needs of all sorts of heathen people—these things were alluded to in turn, as causes of genuine thanksgiving. Then the other side of the shield was displayed—the miserable inadequacy of existing agencies to cope with the overwhelming need. Coming to the money question the Earl said that it was calculated by Mr. Giffen, a trustworthy statistician, that the three kingdoms put by every year for personal objects 240 millions sterling. Added to that there are the 135 millions spent in spirituous liquors. Is it not humiliating to think, in face of these facts, that only a paltry million and a half is given annually to help on the cause of missions in connection with all the churches? A scathing reference followed to certain "civilising" agencies, e.g., strong drink, opium, firearms, and infidel literature, and an earnest appeal was made by his Lordship that the churches should rouse themselves to counteract such deadly civilisation by the spread of Gospel truth. Much good would be done by making known in every parish and every congregation the most interesting facts culled from the reports of the great evangelical societies.

AFRICA.

A second resolution, touching the claims of Africa, China, and Japan, was moved by Rev. W. ALLAN, of Bermondsey, who confined himself, however, to the first-named country. The baneful liquor traffic among the native races came in for a share of remark and animadversion. Mr. Allan went on to speak of the "recent developments" in African C.M.S. Missions, in increased economy, in the multiplication of lady workers, and in the growth of the Niger Mission. In connection with West Africa, he alluded with much pleasure to the visit of the Rev. S. A. Selwyn to that region. Mr. Selwyn, he said, is expected back in a week to report on his mission.

CHINA

found a representative in Rev. J. C. HOARE, son of the venerable Canon Hoare, of Tunbridge Wells, who himself was greatly cheered as he took a seat on the platform. Mr. Hoare pleaded strongly for an extension of the field in Mid-China, while the expansion of the existing churches must not be neglected. The time has come, he contended, for going forward into new territory. During his fourteen years' service in Mid-China he had seen a doubling of the number of converts. A striking fact in his experience has been that nearly all these new converts had been first led to think of the spiritual claims of Christ through the influence of the Chinese themselves. The native pastorate is now so fully established that it is possible for European missionaries to give themselves very largely to instructing students, or to aggressive efforts in preaching the Gospel and planting churches in new districts. Mr. Hoare is very emphatic on this, that English missionaries make very poor pastors of native flocks. But they have a very important place in guiding the Christian training and instruction of those who are, in turn, to build up the Christian faith and life of the people. Mr. Hoare appealed for more men who should go into the regions beyond. At the same time he extolled the office of the educational missionary as most important, and thanked God for the share in it that had fallen to his lot. It is not for Christian workers to pick and choose, but to be ready to go whenever the Master and his Church may send them.

INDIA

came last but not least, and its claims were well put forward by the youthful Bishop HODGES, just appointed to the diocese of Travancore and Cochin. He was happily able to report the existence of a large body of believers in the region of Travancore, so that his prospects are evidently bright. Amongst other agencies at work he was delighted to number Y.M.C. Associations, which are active and aggressive. The six European clergy are busy with educational and other work. The bishop appealed for some one to go out and work among the Brahmins at Trichur. There was a fine, manly yet modest ring about the utterances of this young missionary prelate, and the churches at home will certainly watch his future career with much interest. He evidently has a true conception of the duties of his office, and we feel sure God will bless him in the performance of them.

He was followed by Dr. SUTTON, medical missionary at Quetta, who cited many deeply encouraging facts in connection with his work of Gospel healing. A brief address by Rev. W. H. BARLOW concluded the most interesting proceedings.

The evening meeting was presided over by the Dean of Norwich, and was marked by much enthusiasm.

Sunday School Union.

NATURALLY, in a retrospect of the work of the past year, at the annual meeting held last week in Exeter Hall, a prominent place was given to the World's Sunday-school Convention and the several schemes of importance to which that notable gathering gave rise. With all this and other matters of interest in the recent history of the Union most of our readers are sufficiently familiar. The returns for the close of last year show that in the United Kingdom and the seven Colonial Unions there were 6313 schools, 149,262 teachers, and 1,452,622 scholars. It may also be mentioned as an encouraging fact that the number of scholars in the connected London schools who made a public profession of their faith in Christ during the year was 4372, and of those in the country schools 12,416, making a total of 16,788.

As President of the Union for the current year, Mr. EDWARD RAWLINGS occupied the chair. The period of the year, he said, reminded them that as teachers they were engaged with the attractive and valuable springtime of young lives, and in the endeavour to unite these by love to Jesus Christ. He was glad to note that after a service of eighty-seven years there were no signs of feebleness or decay in their organisation; but that, on the contrary, there were manifest tokens of increased vigour and renewed exertion. Prayer is the great lever for aid and guidance in their work; prayer not merely on appointed days, but every day. Their duty was faithfully to sow the seed, and leave the result to God, who alone could make their labours effectual.

Rev. C. H. KELLY said the Sunday School Union was to the Sunday-schools what the Evangelical Alliance was to the churches. It did not interfere with denominational leanings, but sought to make all Sunday-schools cooperate more efficiently in bringing the young to the Saviour. There was some fear that the revolutionary measures in national education would be disastrous to the Sunday-schools; but it had turned out that the enactments served to make their Sunday-schools more effective by enabling them to confine their attention more closely to their proper work of the moral and spiritual training of the young. Teachers might rest assured that if they started out making the young have truth for their motto and Christ for their guide their labour would not be in vain in the Lord.

An address dealing chiefly with the pastoral duties of the Sunday-school teacher was delivered by Mr. BENJAMIN CLARKE. Instruction in the Sunday-school must be individual to be of any permanent value. The teacher must visit the homes of his scholars, so as to become intimately acquainted with their social surroundings, and so be enabled to direct his instructions in the class in sympathy with individual conditions and needs.

Rev. R. M. THORNTON, of Camden-road Presbyterian Church, said that Sunday-schools had come to stay. He would say to teachers, "Magnify your office." Whatever good they might desire to be characteristic of the national life must be put into the schools. If purity, thrift, temperance, godliness were to prevail, they must be promoted by being taught in the Sunday-schools, and enforced by the example of converted, devoted Christian teachers.

Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A.

THESE are the days of "new departures." To be abreast of the times the Y.M.C.A. friends at Aldersgate-street resolved this year to spread their anniversary proceedings over a whole day. Last Friday at noon a large company came together in the Association lecture-hall, attracted by the fame of Rev. John McNeill, the chief speaker. Mr. Robert Paton presided, and, as the custom is, some time was spent in earnest prayer; special remembrance being made of Association work.

MR. MCNEILL'S ADDRESS was based on the old-time story in 2 Kings iii. which relates to the expedition of the three kings, and the ultimate defeat of the Moabites. What has this narrative got to do with us in the heart and hurly-burly of London today? Everything. God's people are found in great trouble, and that as the result of their own unwisdom. Combination of itself will do no good; it may only increase the muddle. One grand Christian denomination would not necessarily defeat the devil. If it made the mistake of leaving out the leading factor in the whole concern, it would be powerless. These kings overlooked the Lord God Almighty, in the person of his servant Elisha, and therefore Moab nearly overcame their combined forces. Let any Christian worker try to do some great exploit for God, relying alone on his own strength and wit; then defeat is certain. God's difficulty is not the opposing forces of evil, but the bringing of his Church out of its pride and self-sufficiency.

"Is there not a prophet of the Lord?" those potentates were at last constrained to ask. Elisha's sarcastic reply was very suggestive. God is not to be mocked, and, if we ignore Him and his ways, He must humble us before He can use us. "Haud in wi' yer auld freen the Holy Ghost; for if ye let Him go, ye'll no' get Him back sae easy." Thus spake an experienced minister to a young brother just buckling on his armour. Let us put God at the head, and then He will interpose on our behalf. "Make the valley full of ditches"—get ready for blessing. If we get into the proper attitude before God, He will be true to his promise, and revival will come. Instead of falling a prey to our foes, they will be scattered before the power of the Almighty One.

A hearty word in advocacy of the work of the Association closed the address and the engagements of the hour. A collection was made on behalf of the funds of the Association.

THE MANSION HOUSE MEETING.

The weather became very unfavourable during the afternoon, and that was enough to account for the fact that the attendance at the Mansion House meeting at 5 p.m. was not overflowing. But the presence of so many ladies, as well as gentlemen, indicated a very deep interest in the work.

Earl COMPTON, M.P., made a most excellent and sympathetic chairman. He took a brief peep at the work of the Association during the year. Those who are its select clients, he said, form about a sixth of the population, and number in the City alone some 300,000. The circumstances of their daily life lay them open to special temptation, and they have a special claim for help. His lordship was much applauded as he alluded to the prominent part occupied in the Association's programme by spiritual agencies, while their social, physical, and intellectual needs are well cared for. It is not necessary to be a milksop in order to be a Christian. What a splendid product is an honest, manly, God-fearing young man. There is much evil to be overcome, and many wrongs to be righted; it is to our true Christian young men that we must look for a foremost place in such holy enterprises. Lord Compton closed with a cordial word of appeal for larger support to this important work among the young men of the City.

THE REPORT.

Mr. R. BURN, the general secretary, said the past year had been one of considerable advance, especially in the translation of associates into full-fledged members. Various special Gospel efforts were referred to, and Rev. F. B. Meyer's valued work in the Bible-class was heartily acknowledged. The lectures and the classes have been a means of much help and instruction. A ladies' auxiliary, under the presidency of Louisa Lady Ashburton, was founded during the past year, and is likely to prove most beneficial in the future. Wealthy men having been giving generously of late to various educational and social institutions; why should not the Y.M.C.A. have a share in such benefactions? A touching story was told by Mr. Burn of a young woman who came up to London from the country to try and redeem the wrecked life of her brother, a victim of the drink. She was directed by a policeman in Aldgate to the Aldersgate-street Association; the young man is now being visited, and there is much hope of his restoration to a better life.

THE ADDRESSES.

Rev. W. H. WEBB-PEPLOE, after a kindly reference to the need of financial help, dwelt impressively on the necessity for such work among the great majority of London's young men. "Society," in the wide sense of the word, will not meet the case of the lonely young man. In his inmost soul, a man must ever stand alone and apart from his fellowmen. At the Fall, man sought to stand alone, and God gave him his desire. What greater hell could there be than to be doomed to unending loneliness? Isolation of soul is the real cause of human despair and of suicide. How important that this craving for fellowship should be met in a right and effectual way. Most young men are led into evil by perversion of their natural yearning for fellowship. The Y.M.C.A. steps in with the true remedy—the great revelation of a life that combines all legitimate enjoyments, physical and social, with the holy joys of perpetual union with God in Christ. Mr. Peploe ended his weighty remarks by a renewed commendation of Y.M.C.A. work.

Rev. F. B. MEYER was the second set speaker on the programme, but he gave way to the collection. After pressure, however, Mr. Meyer resumed for a little space. He said he was gratefully surprised at the interest that had been shown by the young men of Aldersgate-street in the study of systematic theology on Saturday afternoons. He also thankfully referred to the apprenticeship he served in City life as a Mincing-lane clerk when a young man. Then came a very warm tribute to the services rendered to the Y.M.C.A. by Mr. George Williams; and specially to Aldersgate-street by the big-heartedness and geniality of Mr. Robert Burn, the general secretary. A serious and earnest appeal was made to employers to discharge their responsibility towards the young men in their employ. Mr. Meyer threw out the hint that Christian ladies should occasionally brighten Y.M.C.A. rooms by their presence, and provide an antidote to the attractions of the music-hall and other places. He asked also whether London householders could not make a practice of inviting lonely and friendless young men to dinner and tea at their comfortable homes on Sundays.

The customary votes of thanks to the Chairman and the Lord Mayor, which were very hearty indeed, enabled Mr. George Williams and Mr. Farwell, of Chicago, briefly to advocate the claims of the Institution.

A largely attended meeting of young men was held in the lecture hall of the Y.M.C.A. in the evening, when stirring addresses were delivered by Mr. George Williams, Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston, Mr. J. V. Farwell, and Rev. A. Ramsay, of Highgate.

Mrs. Meredith's Institutions.

THAT crime is an enormous factor in our midst, notwithstanding all the influences brought to bear upon it, was the powerful argument which Sir HENRY SELWIN IBBETSON used, as chairman of the Exeter Hall meetings in favour of Mrs. Meredith's exertions to rescue women and children from a state of life which associates them with the degradation of our prisons. Help is furnished in various ways to discharged female prisoners, and care is exercised over and training afforded to children, when their parents are convicted of crime; but the lack of adequate support must indicate that the work is comparatively little known.

In reading from her report, Mrs. MEREDITH referred to her large laundry as particularly useful to women who have no hope of getting back into social life; but, owing to removal of plant and machinery from Nine Elms to Clapham, credit taken by customers, and other causes, there is a need of £2000 to clear debt incurred. Country support is needed, because many females committed to prison from the country remain in this London Mission. There is provision for the sick and poor in a dispensary and in home visitation. Houses in the neighbourhoods of prisons are taken for the reception of discharged prisoners, and are each under the direction of a lady resident.

Dr. ANDERSON regretted that the State does nothing towards the reclamation of convicted women, which must be more economical than the cost of detention. Rev. Dr. Bullinger quoted an eyewitness's testimony to the satisfactory condition of the children under Mrs. Meredith's care, accompanied, as it is, by educational progress. Colonel Howard Vincent also bore testimony to the value of the work, and cordially commended it to increased financial support. Colonel Petrie was afraid that the work did not appeal to the public as a very romantic undertaking; but Mrs. Meredith must not be left to bear its whole burden.

Rev. H. PELHAM STOKES referred to his experience concerning the Jerusalem Deaconess House. The suspicion and prejudice of Orientals had been, to a great extent, overcome through the medical mission work. Holiday visits to the missionaries would greatly cheer them. Miss Ade, a deaconess, who has lived among Jewish women of the city and neighbouring villages, described encouragement in her work. Miss Lloyd also, while lamenting that the native authorities prohibit the use of a school which is in readiness, finds medical care the only thing which provokes no opposition. Hence lady helpers who will set about learning Arabic are needed, and increased contributions for a larger staff of nurses, in order to take advantage of the favour with which Englishwomen are received.

THE LATE MR. ALEXANDER M. MACKAY,

C.M.S. MISSIONARY, UGANDA.

THIS week our sketch has for its subject one of God's heroes, in whom holy daring and trustful patience were grandly combined, and to whom the work of spreading the knowledge of the Gospel in regions of darkness and ignorance was nothing short of a whole-souled passion.

ALEXANDER M. MACKAY was born in 1849 at Rhynie, Aberdeenshire, where his father, Rev. Dr. Mackay, was Free Church minister for many years. He received his early education at home, both parents contributing their share in the instruction of their children. Before he was ten, young Mackay had acquired a fair knowledge of the elements of a good English education. Dr. Mackay being one of the best known geographers of the day, it is not surprising that his son developed unusual skill in map-drawing, and, indeed, grew up with enlarged ideas of the world and the duties of life.

Hoping that, should it be God's will, his son would be a minister of the Gospel, Dr. Mackay sent Alexander at an early age to the Grammar School of Old Aberdeen, as a preliminary to a University career; it was hoped that the young man would secure a bursary or scholarship, and thus be enabled to enter the University without expense to his father. Although he did well at school, Alexander failed at the competition. Rendering English into good Latin was not exactly his forte. Had he secured a scholarship he might never have gone to Africa as a missionary. His failure was the turning-point in his career.

Dr. Mackay resigned his ministerial charge in 1867, and removed with his family to Edinburgh. Alexander was put to the study of practical engineering, in the meantime attending classes at the University, and the Mathematical Institution and School of Arts. The prizes he took were not only an encouragement to himself, but evidence to his friends of the satisfactory progress he was making. In 1875 he went to Berlin in order still further to pursue his profession. All these moves conduced to his equipment for the great work which in God's providence was in store for him.

The young man had already given his heart to God, and resolved to go among the heathen as an engineer missionary. Thinking that Madagascar offered a hopeful field of labour, he applied to the London Missionary Society, but there was no opening. Then, in April, 1875, seeing in THE CHRISTIAN the Church Missionary Society's "Appeal for East Africa," he offered himself, adding, "It may be you have got a man to your choice; if so, I am at your service to be sent anywhere else you may find." In reply, Mr. Mackay was told that an engineer was not then required. A few months later, Mr. Stanley's letter from Uganda appeared, challenging Christendom to establish a mission there. For this sphere Mr. Mackay at once offered himself, and was accepted as a missionary and engineer. His father saw in this opening for his son an answer to many prayers, in which his mother, for some years dead, had had a fervent share. Thus given to the Lord for use in Africa, the young man agreed to go without salary. The well-equipped party, which arrived at Zanzibar in June, 1876, included Mr. Mackay's esteemed friend, Dr. John Smith, of Edinburgh, who had joined it as medical missionary.

On account of sickness Mr. Mackay was not able at once to proceed with the rest of the company to the interior. While at the coast he lost no time, but was occupied for a year or so in making a road to Mpwapwa. When the news was received of the assassination of Lieutenant Shergold Smith and Mr. O'Neill, with nearly all their followers, in the course of a tribal quarrel, he bravely pushed forward to join Rev. C. T. Wilson, who was then alone in Uganda. After many delays he arrived at Mtesa's capital, which was his home until July, 1887, when events occurred which caused him and others to retire to the south end of the Victoria Nyanza, where Stanley found him in September last, and where he died a few weeks ago.

Not only did Mr. Mackay join Mr. Wilson at Ruboga, but reinforcements arrived from England, and in the spring of 1879 there were seven missionaries in Mtesa's kingdom. Difficulties soon arose through the hostile influence of Arab traders, and the arrival of a party of French Romish priests. The latter greatly perplexed the king by their repudiation of the Christianity he had been taught. In the meantime Mr. Mackay was at work with a small printing press, from which he drew reading sheets by which the people were instructed in the religion of Christ. Of course they had first to be taught to read, and in this Mr. Mackay exerted himself nobly. There was no stability in the surroundings, however, for at the close of the year, under the influence of a sorceress, Mtesa and his chiefs returned to their heathen superstitions, and publicly prohibited the profession of Christianity.

The following year, 1880, was a period of great trial, but everything was done to teach the youth of the country. The Arabs put Mackay's life in danger by declaring him to be an insane murderer, fugitive from England. The wicked charge was, in God's providence, "lived down." In the next year a new era opened for the Mission on the return of some envoys that Mtesa had sent to Queen Victoria. Rev. P. O'Flaherty accompanied them, and for some time the two were the only missionaries in the country, greatly prospering in their secular work for the elevation of the people. They described themselves as carpenters, builders, smiths, wheelwrights, farmers, gardeners, sanitary engineers, printers, physicians, and surgeons. Linguistic work was vigorously prosecuted, portions of the New Testament, and hymns and texts in Luganda, being extensively circulated. Through the blessing of God some spiritual fruit was seen, and by the end of 1884, as many as eighty-eight natives had been baptized.

In 1883 the Mission was strengthened by the arrival of Rev. R. P. Ashe, and gradually the influence of the missionaries was asserting itself. Evidence of this was afforded in the following year on the death of Mtesa. The custom on such occasions was to kill the brothers of the succeeding son, but the chiefs spared their lives on choosing Mwanga as the new king. A period of much trial ensued, Mwanga coquetting with the Romanists and patronising barbarous practices. Alarmed at rumours of German annexation, he ordered that a white man of distinction, who had entered his kingdom by the "back door," i.e., from the east, through Usoga, should be killed; and thus Bishop Hannington was cruelly murdered. Suspicion and jealousy prevailed, and, as a result, there was persecution of the Christians; Romanists as well as Protestants were tortured and put to death, some by the sword, and some by fire. Mwanga possessed all the vices of his father, and none of his virtues; and he would have put Mackay to death, but he appreciated his great usefulness in mechanical and other undertakings.

Mackay's influence with the king was plainly evident in 1886, when an atrocious persecution was raging. He insisted upon obtaining an interview with Mwanga, and pleaded for the lives of the native Christians, in bond and awaiting execution. Some fifty or sixty converts having been put to death, he wrote:—

It grieves me to think that a massacre of native Christians elicits so little feeling in our Christian country, while the murder of one or two Europeans arouses intense interest. It should not be so. Let some of our friends at home fancy themselves exchanging places with us, and see their friends, with whom they yesterday talked and ate and prayed, to-day ruthlessly seized and hacked to pieces almost before their eyes, and their members left lying to decay by the roadside so as to produce an abominable stench for days. No such realisation is, I fear, possible in England; at any rate no such realisation exists, otherwise mighty efforts would be made, further than a passing sigh, to put a stop to such a monstrous state of things, however distant.

What anguish of soul we have experienced no words can express. This dreadful massacre has not, however, come unexpectedly. Ever since the king came to the throne, things have tended that way. At the beginning of the trouble a large armed band arrived to search the place. We had just got warning a few minutes before, and hastily sent away the readers who had come that day. Now, every night a few come from their hiding-places to see us, and our sleep is much broken. One or two were allowed their liberty on payment of a fine; we have helped to advance the amount; while to a chief who is himself a Christian, and who was ordered to hand up two of his boys for execution, we advanced two tusks of ivory, by the payment of which he has been let off meantime.

Nevertheless, the Mission work progressed, and even in the midst of bitter persecution men came out on the side of Christ. And such Christians! They had counted the cost, and chose rather to "suffer affliction with the people of God than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season." Simple though they were, they "endured as seeing Him who is Invisible," and those who were not called upon to seal their faith with their blood showed it by their distinctly Christian manner of life. Messrs. Mackay and Ashe were alone in the country, and their position was one of extreme danger. Mwanga, who was described as a bang-smoking, drunken tyrant, was possessed with the idea that they wanted "to eat the country," and he openly gave out that he would not tolerate their teaching, although he meant to detain them to work for him. They were most unwilling to leave the country while they could stay so as to effect any good; but on account of the political discussions connected with their mere presence, to stay was also an impossibility, except as the veriest slaves.

At last they decided to withdraw for a time as a protest against the horrible murder of the native Christians. The king, however, refused to let them go. By means of large gifts Mackay secured royal audiences, and requested that at least one of the missionaries should be permitted to leave. "Whom will you leave behind?" demanded Mwanga. "The other white man," meaning Mr. Ashe. "No," replied the king, "he likes sitting in his room, and does not come to see me." Mackay protested that if the king would be likely to see him, Mr. Ashe would go to the court every day. "I like you very much," Mwanga added; "you shall stay here always." "If you like me, you will let me go away." "No," said the king, "if I hated you I should drive you away and treat you like I did that Arab," referring to an Arab trader who had been hounded out of the country. "If you will stay," continued the tyrant, "I will give you a lot of cowrie shells." "I don't want cowrie shells," replied Mackay, "I want your friendship." "I'll give you cows." "But I don't want cows." "I'll let you go on teaching the people," he said as a last bribe. Mackay returned the king no answer, but again preferred his request for permission to leave the country. This, however, the king absolutely refused, and it was evident that his mind was made up. Mackay then asked the king to let "the other white man" go, and to this the king ultimately yielded, and within four days Mr. Ashe had left Uganda.

Mackay was mercifully preserved through these trying times. He spent his time printing little books and teaching the people. The king complained and the chiefs conspired, but God restrained the evil which so often threatened to overwhelm his faithful witness. Allowed to retire shortly afterwards, on the understanding that Rev. E. C. Gordon would take his place, Mackay went to the south end of the Lake. Mr. Gordon was joined by Rev. R. H. Walker, whom the king received with great honour. Mwanga's cruelty led to his deposition in September, 1888. Troubles followed, for after a brief period of quiet, during which Christians were appointed to high office, the Mohammedans took the reins of Government. Then the new missionaries had to fly, and were welcomed by Mackay at Usambiro.

After several changes, Mwanga secured the throne again; having in the meantime been baptized by the Romish priests, he called upon all Christians to rally round him. Mackay wrote:—

At Ukumbi there are sixteen Roman Catholic missionaries, sent by infidel France. Christian England, which takes "such a deep interest" in Buganda and Central Africa, has furnished the mighty force of two Protestant missionaries (Mr. Gordon and myself). How many out of our number of two are expected to be ready to respond to Mwanga's invitation, and go to supply the spiritual wants of the Protestant Christian Church in Buganda? Both of us are far too few for the work to be done at this station, Usambiro, which we dare not abandon. Are we then to abandon our people in Buganda because our friends in England like to hear and read about them, but will not move a finger to come to their aid?

Exactly a year after the expulsion of the Mission, the Christian converts, and those under their influence, re-entered Uganda, and replaced Mwanga on the throne, Against the advice of Mackay, they engaged in active warfare against the Mohammedan usurpers, and, on proving victorious, sent for Mr. Gordon and Mr. Walker (the latter being at Nassa with Mr. Deekes) to join them. The high offices have been assumed equally by Roman Catholics and Protestants, and full liberty has been given to missionaries to settle in the kingdom and teach the people. Nevertheless, in the words of Mr. Mackay, in a letter dated January 2 this year, "Mwanga is still a heathen at heart, and eager to rid himself of the control which not only our people, but the Roman Catholic converts, seem determined to exert over him." The Times on Saturday last announced that Mwanga and the Christians had been again expelled; but the Church Missionary Society has this week received information which shows that their retirement was only temporary, and there is every reason to believe that Uganda is now under the influence of the Imperial British East Africa Company, and open to the Gospel.

Last month the news came that Mr. Mackay had entered into rest, succumbing to an attack of malarial fever. In the words of Mr. Ashe, for some time his colleague:—

Few, if any, know the almost unendurable trials, both small and great, which he had to undergo; though he was never very strong, and suffered from frequent and repeated attacks of fever. Yet he never lost heart, and had a marvellous power of inspiring confidence in other people. He was absolutely and entirely free from insincerity or cant, was a most diligent teacher, and used regularly to preach in turn with me when we were alone in Uganda. He was never in a hurry, and yet one work after another was taken in hand and finished. The amount of physical labour he would go through was astonishing. Nothing was a trouble to him, and he would not hear of the word impossible.

Mr. Mackay will certainly be known as a great missionary, as he was assuredly an accomplished and able man. Mr. Stanley paid him one of the highest tributes in his letter from Ugogo, October 15 last. Having declared that Mackay was "the toughest little fellow you could conceive," he said:—

Mackay plods on, despite every disadvantage; sees his house gutted and his flock scattered, and yet, with an awful fear of breach of duty, clings with hopefulness to a good time coming, when the natives of the country will be able to tell out to each other the good news of "peace and goodwill to men."

In the latest report of the Church Missionary Society we read:—

He was the only remaining member in Africa of the first missionary party sent out, and who had throughout the whole fourteen years borne a leading part in the Mission. In all that he did, he displayed a devotedness, a courage, a resourcefulness, and a practical ability not inferior to that of any of the great men who have given their lives for Africa. With the Uganda Mission, his name, alongside those of Shergold Smith, and Hannington, and Parker, will ever be identified. Very touching is his last response, received since the news of his death came, to the suggestion that he should come home and enlist recruits for the Mission himself:—"What is this you write, 'Come home'? Surely now, in our terrible dearth of workers, it is not the time for anyone to desert his post. Send us only our first twenty men, and I may be tempted to come to help you to find the second twenty."

Letters received since his death tell of efforts to impress upon the natives the duty of carrying forward Gospel work, and report progress in the translation of the fourth Gospel. His revered father, now resident at Ventnor, Isle of Wight, has Divine consolation as he looks back upon his son's career, which God so abundantly owned and blessed. May the Lord raise up many more such men, full of faith and the Holy Spirit, to carry forward the difficult and dangerous work of evangelising Central Africa.

Religious Tract Society.

LORD KINNAIRD presided over the ninety-first annual meeting of the Religious Tract Society, which was held on Friday evening last, in Exeter Hall. There was a large gathering, and in the course of the evening upwards of six hundred children from the Hornsey Board Schools rendered melodies, under the direction of Mr. Joseph Proudman. Rev. Dr. GREEN, one of the secretaries, read an abstract of the report, showing that the Society's operations are extending, and being attended with much spiritual blessing.

It is hardly needful to say that the facts and figures of the report were large and significant. The free income for missionary purposes amounted to £17,787, besides which the Society appropriated in the form of grants no less than £19,670, provided from its trade receipts. The expenditure in all departments was £208,756. The issues of the year in books, tracts, leaflets, cards, and separate numbers of periodicals, amounted to 62,435,000, of which 25,289,000 were tracts; from foreign societies and depôts some 15,000,000 publications were issued, making a grand total of 77,000,000 publications, in 199 languages and dialects. From many fields testimony is borne to the usefulness of the Society's publications. Often the tract prepares the way for the Scriptures; often it explains their meaning. "In every mission on new ground," writes Mr. L. B. Armstrong from Spain, and the same is true of other countries as well, "'the first sod' is turned by the 'spade' of the Religious Tract Society." From Athens Dr. Kalopothakes tells of an intelligent Greek who said of the tracts he had received that "they helped him to understand God's Word." Many of the most important publications of the Society are guides to the study and interpretation of Scripture. "Understandest thou what thou readest?" it was asked of a Bible-reader in ancient days. "How can I," was the reply, "except some man should guide me?" To be that guide is the greatest function and the supreme ambition of this Society.

The Chairman having, in a few hearty words, spoken in high terms of the Society and its work, Dean LEFROY delivered an address, in which, in Apostolic words, he declared that the organisation had been "a succourer of many, and of myself also." For many years he had spent his holiday on the Continent, and many times been indebted to the Society for the tracts which he had distributed in France, Germany, and Switzerland. He rejoiced that the Society was alive to the special needs of the time, and supported it because its object is missionary, because its methods are suited to changing circumstances, and because it is defensive of the truth in its purity and power. Notwithstanding all the weakness of division there is in the Church of Christ a unity in diversity, and a oneness amid multiplicity. The Religious Tract Society represents this, and is therefore worthy of cordial Christian support.

Mr. F. A. BEVAN spoke of the Society as furnishing the ammunition for the war with sin. He testified from experience when he told of the great care that is bestowed upon the books and tracts that are brought out. He said he sometimes thought that too much trouble was expended upon them, and that it would be better for some of the tracts to go forth to the world just as they are written. This, however, does no honour to the proverb: "In the multitude of counsellors there is safety." The necessity for careful revision in some cases goes far to justify similar conscientious pains in all cases. As president of the London City Mission, he felt greatly indebted to the Society, which last year supplied the Mission with tracts worth £4700 for only £1100. He was pleased to know that the distribution of these silent messengers had been blessed of God to many souls.

Rev. ARTHUR HALL delivered a cheery address to the children present, giving his early experience of tract work. He earnestly appealed to them to devote their lives to the service of Christ, and showed that youth is pre-eminently the time to begin that blessed service.

London City Mission.

THE annual meeting of this well-known organisation was held on Thursday last, in Exeter Hall. The report, of which an abstract was read by Rev. T. S. HUTCHINSON, secretary, stated that the number of missionaries on March 31 was exactly 500, an increase of nine in the course of the year. Eighteen new districts were occupied, nine of those previously occupied having been forsaken. The total receipts for the general fund amounted to £54,129, which was £3,464 less than the expenditure. Many interesting cases of conversion were reported. One missionary tells of a potman changed through the gift of a New Testament; of two bright young men, sons of publicans, who have come out boldly on the Lord's side, and are preaching the Gospel on week days, praying for the conversion of their parents; also of a working man whom he had often tried to stop in a mad career of drunkenness, who met him in the street, and told him of the change which had taken place in himself and his family. Another writes of a landlord who had kept a public-house for sixteen years, who has given up the trade, has taken a coffee-house, and with his wife attends regularly a place of worship. The special efforts include missions to public-houses and coffee-shops, to different trades, and people of varied nationalities—among sailors as well as land folk. The committee ask for an additional £10,000 per annum, which they need for maintaining the work on its present scale.

In some opening remarks, the chairman, Mr. F. A. BEVAN, referred to the present magic number of the missionaries, comparing the five hundred workers with the "five hundred brethren" to whom our Lord appeared after his resurrection, commissioning them to "go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." He rejoiced that during the strikes of the year, the missionaries exercised a soothing and healing influence. He showed that there is room enough in the field for more workers than occupy it, and therefore expressed a hope that missionaries and superintendent ministers would do their utmost to maintain the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace.

Mr. W. S. CAINE, M.P., dwelt upon the work of the Mission under four heads—drunkenness, gambling, uncleanness, and infidelity. Though there may be very little practical infidelity among the working classes, there is much irreligion. The people are, however, amenable to the influence of the missionaries, and especially to that of men of such a type as the thousand and more who, during the year, were induced to commence family prayer at their home. If the Mission agents had done nothing more than rescue 358 fallen women, and lodge them in asylums, or restore them to their homes, it would have done enough to justify the confidence of its friends. Gambling is a hideous vice, which has been the ruin of numberless young men; but if it is to be attacked successfully, it will not be sufficient to strike at the betting practices of the working classes. The speculative spirit which pervades modern commercial life must be attacked, as it is the cause of much evil, along with the resort of the greatest of our land to the racecourse. Above all, the drink must be fought, for it is a fruitful source of sin. All workers for Christ should be teetotalers; anyone going to war with the devil in London without abstaining from intoxicating drink is like a soldier with a wooden leg. In conclusion, Mr. Caine maintained that everyone who has received the gift of God is bound to be a city missionary.

Rev. E. H. HOPKINS struck another note. Those who would witness for Christ must live the Christ life. Nothing but supernatural power can convert the city from darkness to light, from ungodliness to righteousness. The weapons of our warfare are not carnal; they are not of modern make, but belong to the old Gospel. It has been said that the most pressing demand of the day is the adaptation of Christianity to the age, but he rejoiced to know that the missionaries read their duty differently, and were convinced that what is wanted is the adaptation of the age to Christianity.

Rev. JOHN MCNEILL spoke some earnest words to the missionaries, pointing out important lessons conveyed by the injunction of Paul to Timothy: "Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine; continue in them: for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee" (1 Tim. iv. 16). Coming so closely into contact with iniquity the missionaries require this caution. The man who plunges into the water to save a drowning fellow risks his own life, although those who go deep into the sea of sin are in no danger if they descend in Christ's name. Having encouraged the missionaries to a due estimate of the importance of the work of calling men to turn to God, he asked them carefully to watch their lives, so that men may "take knowledge of them, that they have been with Jesus"—may see in them reproductions of the life of the Lord Himself. As to the doctrine, it should be plain—none of the sham, pinchbeck, Brummagem Gospel of to-day. Moreover, it should be couched in the language of the people. When Christ said to the deaf man who stammered in his speech, "Ephphatha" (be opened), He used the homely, fireside speech. There is to-day much preaching that fails to pierce the dull ears of drowsy sinners; what is wanted is clear Gospel words that will burn their way to men's hearts. Mr. McNeill expressed a hope that the missionaries, knowing the evils of which drink is the cause, would do their utmost to cultivate a sound opinion against compensation to publicans. He said with regret that he had not found in England a warm, quick pulse on moral questions.

Rev. S. PEARSON, of Highbury, son of a London city missionary, having given an address, some words were spoken by Mr. GARDINER, missionary to navvies. The latter said that gambling is on the increase among those for whose welfare his labours.

London Butchers' Festival.

IT is many years since Mr. Varley instituted what has come to be known as the "Butchers' Festival," by annually welcoming knights of the cleaver at Notting Hill Tabernacle, in order that, after making them happy, he might point them to Him in whose presence is "fulness of joy." It is gratifying to know that, though Mr. Varley is at present far away, the gathering is still held year by year, a committee of Christian men having taken the work in hand, in the same earnest spirit in which it was begun. It is a pleasure this year to report a very successful festival. It was held on Tuesday, last week, at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, and twelve hundred men of all grades sat down to tea—three hundred and fifty more than last year.

Mr. T. WOODLEY presided, and the proceedings were hearty throughout. Mr. T. SAYERS, the hon. secretary, told the men that the object of the gathering was not their momentary enjoyment, but rather their everlasting salvation. A goodly number of those present responded "Hear, hear" to this statement of sympathetic solicitude, thus affording corroboration of another remark, to the effect that there are among the porters and others of Smithfield a goodly number who rejoice in the salvation brought to them in years gone by through the instrumentality of Mr. Varley. Mr. Sayers went on to observe that the committee hoped one day to be able to do for the butchers what has already been done for other sections of the toiling community. An institute might be a centre of many important agencies for good.

Stirring addresses were delivered by Rev. T. Evans, and Messrs. G. F. Cook and Heyman Wreford (Exeter). The men were urged to cease to do evil—give up strong drink, gambling, and swearing—and to let Christ rule in their hearts and lives. Part songs were contributed by Christian friends, and Miss Josephine Simon rendered some sacred solos. "Music hath charms" for journeymen butchers as well as the more cultured classes, and it was pleasant to witness the enjoyment experienced by the men when "There is a green hill far away," and "Angels ever bright and fair," were warbled forth by the kind lady vocalist.

Miss Weston's Work.

Admiral Leopold McClintock, in presiding over and opening a cheery and well-attended meetings in Exeter Hall, last week, said that throughout his seventeen years' acquaintance with Miss Weston, she always seemed a part of that calling which she loves and serves so well.

Miss Weston, while speaking appreciatively of work by societies, had always proceeded on personal lines, wherein woman's influence over the wearers of blue jackets is used for God. Seamen prove to be wonderful agents for spreading real religion. One such has risen from the post of sick steward to the superintendence of a Medical Mission in New York; two others are ordained ministers in British Columbia, and another was used of God in the conversion of a Japanese gentleman who was subsequently made spiritually useful to one hundred of his fellow-countrymen. Temperance effort occupies a prominent place in the work as a powerful weapon of Christian warfare, and every ship in the Royal Navy is represented in that respect. The monthly letters and publications are highly valued, as are the happy, self-supporting Christian Homes at Portsmouth and Devonport, the need of which is seen in that "Jack" is often a stranger in the port where he lands. The Devonport "Rest" stands upon the site of three public-houses, closed as the result of a contest between "two weak women with a coffee-pot and seven stalwart publicans with beer-cans." Last year 79,000 men were accommodated with beds. The best way to discourage the drink is to show kindness to the drunkard. £10,000 is required to erect a necessary wing at Portsmouth. One man testified, "The Sailors' Rest has been the means of saving me, body and soul."

Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., said that, in his experience as a Lord of the Admiralty and a traveller, he never found a seaman anywhere who did not know Miss Weston. She has more widespread influence for good in the Navy than any other living soul, and has rendered great service to the temperance cause generally, in that reformers are able to point to a class of men undergoing hard service without intoxicants. It is a noble work to lead "from drink to Christ" the British seaman who represents his nation abroad.

Canon Fleming referred to early association with Miss Weston when she was a young girl under his first pastorate at Bath. "Jack's" warm heart and strong hands, used for our well-being, should command our best care. A religious sailor was once accounted a knock-kneed kind of thing, but many "tars" can and do now "stand up for Jesus," as the result of this unique work. Rev. Mr. Matthews, a naval chaplain, had found a vast improvement in seamen's habits during his sixteen years connection with the Navy, but drink remains the blue-jacket's curse. Young men adopting the seafaring profession need to be warned against temptations which will beset them in this respect. There had been remarkable progress in fighting the evil, but there must be no rest in the battle against it.

Free Distribution of the Scriptures.

For the first time in its history as a Society, Mrs. Robertson's Association for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures this year had a "May Meeting." It was a comparatively little company that met in the lower Exeter Hall on Thursday evening, last week, but the theme was transcendent enough to have attracted the largest assembly of the season.

At this meeting a very impressive little statement was made on behalf of Mrs. Robertson, by her friend and helper, Miss Stoddart. We give some portions of it as constituting a plea for the work of this Association, more touching and weighty, perhaps, than any of the speeches that followed:—

"'A gift is as a precious stone in the eyes of him that hath it; whithersoever it turneth it prospereth.' 'I have given them the words which Thou gavest Me, and they have received them.' Surely the first duty of the Church of Christ must be to give these words to the world. The great question is how to reach the nations sitting in darkness who have no light. More than 1800 years ago the command was given by the King to go out into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature. The best preacher is God's own Word, the two-edged sword of the Spirit; yet at the present time one thousand millions of the inhabitants of the world have never been told of the invitations of the Gospel and of the blood of Jesus Christ which cleanseth from all sin. At the present time not eight millions of Bibles, Testaments, and Gospels put together are circulated in the course of a year by all the societies and agencies in existence, whereas the annual increase of population exceeds ten millions.

MILTIONS ARE PASSING AWAY out of time into eternity without having seen a copy of the Word of God.

"In the East amongst Mohammedans it is an absolute necessity to give the Scripture, as they are subject to persecution when they purchase; this is not the case when they receive the Book as a gift. In Eastern countries a gift is often considered a piece of necessary etiquette when entering a dwelling. This makes a delightful door for the entrance of that Word which giveth light. It can scarcely be expected that amongst Roman Catholic nations, and nations belonging to the Greek Church, purchases would be made in any large quantities. As to the heathen, how few of them know of its existence. In 1871, when travelling in Italy, we were struck to find how very few possessed so much as a Gospel, and found that many did not know what the Testament was. The present of a book was accepted with great politeness, but at that time it was so little known that, in some instances, it was immediately torn up when they discovered what it was. All that has passed away. They have found out that it is a good Book, and it is eagerly sought and longed for wherever a distribution has been made. The responsibility upon Christians of having the Word of God themselves, and knowing that others have not got it, is simply overwhelming. The highest seraph in heaven would gladly wing his flight to this world to do the work which is given to Christians to do—to preach to every creature the way of salvation through a crucified Redeemer, by giving the Word which our dear Saviour has given to us.

"The number of copies circulated by means of the Association for the free distribution of the Scriptures from the commencement of the work in 1876 amounts to 77,000 Bibles, 495,740 Testaments, 441,000 Gospels. All the work is done through voluntary agents, and thus the whole of the funds contributed are expended in the purchase of the Scriptures. Earnest Christians all over the world are only too thankful to do this happy work, and the Lord Himself has laid it upon the hearts of those who have kindly contributed the funds for this purpose. For this we cannot thank and praise Him enough."

An address by Rev. F. B. Meyer which followed was full of telling points. The history of the Association, he said, indicates how much one consecrated woman may do. By this agency the Scriptures are put into the hands of the people without the intervention of any human voice, which may be helpful or may be misleading. The Bible needs no "preface" to explain it; it speaks for itself in tones that cannot be mistaken by the listener. It needs no vindication, as do other books. It needs no commentator or explainer. Though we are thankful for Christian apologetics, because they show how sure is the foundation on which the Book stands, the Bible itself is God's great witness to the world. It may be sent where the living human witness can never go. Surely the Church of Christ might well see to it that copies are placed in every community throughout the world before this generation passes away.

Sir Robert Phayre, who presided, spoke at some length on the wonderful sustaining power of the Word of God in times of trial, as illustrated by incidents that occurred during the great Indian Mutiny. Mr. Robert Paton made an earnest appeal for more generous public help for this good work. Last year only £1,755 were subscribed, and every penny of this was expended in copies of the Scriptures, as Mrs. Robertson has herself defrayed all secretarial expenses. Letters are constantly being received for workers, telling of individual cases of blessing resulting from the distribution of the Scriptures supplied by the association.

Mr. Edward Clarke, of the Spezia Mission, had many encouraging facts to tell in connection with Bible distribution, as seen by himself in different parts of Italy. He is one of the many friends who are helped by the bounty of the association. Mr. J. E. Mathieson said that no fewer than sixty-five of the nations of the earth had been embraced in the scope of the Society's work. He appealed to Christian friends to study Mrs. Robertson's very interesting report just issued, and to have a share in this most blessed privilege of freely giving to the great world in its printed form that message which has been so precious in their own experience. Mrs. Robertson's address, we may add, is Chesils, Christ Church-road, Hampstead, London, N.W.

Christian Instruction Society.

The annual meeting of this Society was held last week in Eccleston-square Church, Mr. Thomas Deuce in the chair. The report of the secretary, Rev. Dr. Wickson, showed that the past year had been one of great prosperity. Special services had been held in a number of churches by the Mission preacher, and two evangelists had been appointed to fields of labour—one in Clapham, and the other in Pimlico. A most generous offer had been made by the treasurer to pay half the salaries of evangelists to the number of twelve employed and paid by the Society. Interesting details were given of the works accomplished by the Society's agents.

The attendance at places of worship had largely increased. Sunday-school, Band of Hope, and kindred work had been diligently and successfully attended to. Liberal grants of Bibles, Testaments, and religious tracts had been made to branch associations, and conferences for the deepening of spirituality, and inciting to greater effort on behalf of those not under religious influence had been held.

Able addresses in support of the Society's work were delivered by Revs. Dr. Tyler, Dr. Hills Hitchens, J. Lawson Forster, Bevill Allen and W. A. Meaton, and Mr. George Nokes.

The Salvation Army.

THE external features of a Salvation Army meeting in Exeter Hall have a wonderful family likeness—a sweltering crowd, scarlet jerseys, coal-scuttle bonnets, flags, brass instruments, drums, battle songs and choruses, impassioned prayers, and vehement responses. Leaving these aside, almost the only thing left of the annual May review last week was the statement by General BOOTH. On these occasions he is chairman, secretary, treasurer, and advocate rolled into one. For a full hour and a half he held the platform and kept the great audience attent as he expatiated on the difficulties that have encompassed the efforts of himself and his comrades, or sketched in outline the wonderful progress of the Salvation war. On the first point the General waxed quite pathetic over the sorrows that beset headquarters, not only from carrying the cares of churches, but from persecutions of the sinners, sneers of the Pharisees, and perils from false brethren of their own household. Many of Mr. Booth's remarks were evidently aimed at a recent legal action, and a recent pamphlet. The crowning sorrow of all, he said, was the continued affliction of his beloved wife, who had so often in recent months been down at the very brink of the river of separation. The loss of Mrs. Booth's help in the war was also a sore trial to all her family and to the Army comrades, for no one was gifted with greater ability in making the Gospel message reach the hearts and consciences of the people. Passing to the

STATISTICS FOR THE YEAR,

Mr. Booth reported there are now 2799 Army corps, an increase during the year of 103; 8880 officers, an increase of 872; with 1600 staff officers. There are sixteen homes of rest, thirty slum posts, four prison brigades, three food depôts, and five night shelters. During the year 163 officers have been sent abroad. Mr. Booth spoke of special advances in the Argentine Republic, in Belgium, and in Scandinavia. He seemed to expect great things in the future from the hardy Norsemen, and even ventured on the prediction that one day they would descend from their northern fastnesses on Europe, not as military invaders, but as bearers of the message of salvation. Germany is another country in which much is looked for in the near future. Mr. Railton's assumption of the command there was referred to as a hopeful appointment. Good tidings are coming, too, from Switzerland and from France, despite many difficulties, especially in the former country. After some further references to troubles in the Law Courts, Mr. Booth was led into a disquisition on the "Compensation" proposals of the present Government, which he very roundly condemned. The remarkable extension of Army operations in India next received attention. During the last four months 2000 people have been at the penitent form in that country, and 74 out of every 100 of these have been raw heathen. Lord Harris, the new Governor of the Bombay Province, has offered, we were told, to subscribe to the rescue department of the work. All the varied endeavours of the Army in India only cost £6500 during the year, of which £4000 was raised by the natives themselves. The General reported the utter collapse of the split in America, and somewhat testily hinted that the malcontents, now called Crusaders, might betake themselves to Palestine or anywhere else. Mrs. Ballington Booth has been pleading in person the cause of free speech before a committee of the Boston legislative assembly, and wound up her plea by quoting the lines respecting the Pilgrim Fathers:—

"I call it holy ground,
The soil where first they trod;
They left unstained what there they found,
Freedom to worship God."

According to the report, added Mr. Booth, her speech made a great impression, and the committee wept. News had just come to hand that the Toronto authorities have resolved to make a monthly grant towards the support of the Army Rescue Home.

Having judiciously praised the devotion of his officers, not forgetting the rank and file, and having announced that the silver wedding of the Army would be celebrated at the Crystal Palace in July, Mr. Booth spoke of the repeated expansions at headquarters, and said he would not rest satisfied till all their London official work was gathered under one roof, and where they could have a hall of their own to hold 10,000 people. From that he passed to the question of Army literature. Their soldiers did not read trashy novels, but were faithful in their study of "the inimitable War Cry." There are twenty-nine War Crys now published in thirty-two countries. The foreign issues total up a weekly circulation of nearly 264,000, while of the English War Cry and Little Soldier there are over 414,000 printed every week. The monthlies mount up to 90,000 copies, and the annual circulation of all their periodicals reaches the immense number of over 37 millions. All the buildings of the Army are duly and legally settled on trust. The total income of the Army for the year has been three-quarters of a million sterling. And yet Mr. Booth is not satisfied, for the latter part of his remarkable statement was an ad miscricordiam appeal for £5000 to meet immediate and pressing necessities. It may be said here that the "canaries," and other channels of giving put in motion, produced nearly half the amount asked for.

The subsequent engagements of the evening included a fiery address in Singhalese by a converted Bhuddhist priest from Ceylon; a word or two from Commissioner Tucker; the unanimous passing of a resolution against compensating those publicans who may be obliged to stop poisoning the people; and the dedication of twenty-five new officers to the war in different parts of the world.

The Sailors' Society.

THE LORD MAYOR presided at the seventy-second annual meeting of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society, held on Monday last week, at the Mansion House. The total receipts of the year amounted to £16,720. Extracts from the report were read by the secretary, Rev. E. W. MATTHEWS. At the Victoria and Albert Docks Auxiliary, Lady Louisa Ashburton, who had spent some £20,000 in erecting a large mission hall and coffee establishment, with sleeping accommodation, has completed the usefulness of the place by fitting a Sailors' Rest and Reading-rooms. The Millwall Dock Auxiliary will also, it is hoped, be soon provided with its own Rest and Reading-room.

At the new docks of Barry, near Cardiff, the directors have granted a free plot of land on which to erect a Sailors' Rest and Bethel. At Shoreham, Falmouth, Dublin, and at various foreign ports, either rests have been opened or boats provided for carrying on the work of the Society. There are in all now seventy-four stations in sixty-eight ports, and 115 agents.

The LORD MAYOR expressed warm sympathy with the work of the Society. One of the speakers, Mr. W. BARNETT, late of the Argentine, said that in Buenos Ayres, where sailors were shamefully robbed by crimps and others, the shipping lay for two and a half miles, and often three deep. A Sailors' Mission was greatly needed in that port. Rev. Dr. MONRO GIBSON asked the Lord Mayor, in the name of the meeting, to forward a petition to Parliament praying that a Bill might be passsed to create a National Pension Fund for Seamen, by deducting a small percentage from their wages at the close of each voyage. Captain CLARKE, R.N., in the course of a vivacious speech, stated that all the agents of the Society were, as far as he knew, total abstainers.

South American Missionary Society.

THE BISHOP OF RIPON presided over the thirty ninth annual meeting of this Society, which was held on Friday last, at Sion College. The report mentioned the fact that the Provisional Government of the United States of Brazil had issued a decree guaranteeing liberty of worship to all religious denominations. The expenditure of the year was £11,435, leaving a deficiency of nearly £1000. In the course of a brief address, the Chairman expressed a strong conviction that the longer missionary work goes on, the more will people understand that it carries with it a benediction, as well as a protest on behalf of humanity—a benediction on man, and a protest against the unjust and degrading views which man sometimes entertains regarding his fellow-man.

Mr. HENRY MORRIS said that one of the most cheering letters ever received from the Bishop arrived a few days ago, giving an account of his visit to Terra del Fuego, Wollaston, and Keppel. Mr. Aspinall had exercised both medical and surgical skill among the people around him, and he had assisted the Argentine Prefecture. He had applied himself most diligently to the study of the language, and was able to speak to the people in their native tongue about the wonderful works of God.

Rev. H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE believed that England had not yet realised the dignity and honour of having committed to her such a great work on the South American continent. Rev. A. E. Barnes-Lawrence also spoke.

Moravian Missions.

IN 1745 the Church of the United Brethren was formed out of what was left after the martyrdom of John Huss. From the fastnesses of Moravia and Silesia they resolved in 1467 to send forth missionaries to perpetuate the Reformed faith. Their zeal grew as time went on. Even the small remnant that had fled to Saxony in 1722 ten years later sent out messengers of the Cross to the West Indies and to Greenland, and these became the pioneers of Protestant missions to the heathen in every part of the habitable world. No people were too obscure, no condition could be too miserable, for their benevolent apostolic efforts. Long ago the Moravians lived and died among the lepers in order to preach to them the Gospel of Jesus.

The London Association in aid of the Moravian Missions held its annual meeting in the Council-room of Exeter Hall last Friday. Mr. T. A. DENNY presided, and gave an interesting sketch of the Moravian Church. Rev. W. WETTON COX read the report. One in sixty of the adult members of the Moravian Church go into the mission field. Her converts from heathenism outnumber the parent Church by more than two to one. It would occupy too much space to note what has been done in the various regions of the earth by the Moravians during the past year. Everywhere from the Arctic regions to the tropics their labours have been signally blessed. For needed extensions £2000 must be raised in addition to the usual contributions.

Dr. DONALD FRASER said that besides the ordinary pleas for missions, there were peculiar claims on the part of the Moravian missions. When the large churches of Christendom were either disputing among themselves, or quietly settling down in ease, the little Church of Moravia struck out boldly, and became the pioneers of modern missions. The Moravians had sent out the greatest number of missionaries, in proportion to their number, and these men had been remarkable for the simplicity of their lives and the thoroughness of their work. Rev. MARMADUKE C. OSBORN dwelt on the magnitude of the work among the vast number of those who still sat in darkness, and on the apparent insignificance of the agencies hat were brought into action for the conversion f the world. A grave responsibility will rest pon the British people if the evangelisation f the world should come to a deadlock for vant of money.

Rev. W. R. MOWLL attributed the success of he Moravians to the simplicity of their mes- age, and to the fact that the men themselves lemonstrated sincerity of heart and life. Dr. RITTON said that God was ever ready to bless nissions that gave evidence of self-sacrifice.

Ragged School Union.

EXETER HALL was en fête on Monday evening, when this splendid institution had its anniver- sary and distribution of prizes. The expected presence of a member of the reigning house, in the person of Princess Mary of Teck, drew a bumper house; for it is still true that our Eng- lish people dearly love to see a "lord" or a "lady." The platform was decorated with flags, flowers, and shrubs, and, with its back- ground of merry, musical young people, pre- sented a very pretty sight.

During the time of waiting for Her Royal Highness, Mr. KIRK, the energetic secretary, read a résumé of the year's work. The Christian public have contributed over £12,000; but it was none too much. There are 190 ragged- school missions, with nearly 4000 teachers, who, week in and week out, have been busy "teaching the young ideas how to shoot." Then there are 220 ragged churches for adults as well as children, with 24,000 attendances; while the mothers' meetings had 7000 attend- ances. The six Holiday Homes have during the year received 3200 London waifs for a stay in the health-giving country. Besides, there are day schools, Bible-classes, crèches, lads' clubs, penny banks, and other kindred agencies that have been an untold boon to these young scions of London raggeddom. After the secretarial statement, Lord KINNAIRD, who is president of the committee this year, made an earnest and effective plea for the good work and for its hearty support. His lordship inci- dentally remarked that the great Polytechnic in Regent-street grew out of a little ragged school in the purlieus of Drury-lane. The Princess was somewhat late, and this afforded Mr. Proudman an opportunity to display his skill in marshalling the youthful choir. The children carolled like larks on a May morning. Presently, to the strains of the National Anthem, the Royal party arrived on the plat- form, and received an English welcome.

The most interesting function of the evening of course was the distribution of certificates and prizes to young people from different schools, who had shown good behaviour in school and had kept their situations with credit. Representative teachers from some seventy schools filed along the platform, and received the certificates from the hands of the Princess. The total number of the prizes were 727; the winners constituted the choir.

A speech followed from Hon. EVELYN ASHLEY, a son of "the good Earl" of Shaftesbury, who referred affectingly to the old and early days when ragged schools were "ragged," and when scarcely a bishop could be found on its platform. Now the Union has got so far up in the social scale as to secure princesses among its friends. Still, its good services and its sympathetic action are greatly needed. As long as this great Babylon contains so many poor and friendless "atoms," so long will this Union have plenty to do. Mr. Ashley made an excellent speech, quite in the hearty and thorough-going style of his father of blessed mem ory. Rev. J. REID HOWATT "qualified himself" for another invitation, by making a brief and humorous speech in laudation of the grand schemes carried on by the Union; laying special stress on the work of the Holiday Homes.

Sir T. FOWELL BUXTON, Bart., in thanking Princess Mary and her daughter for their presence, said it had been his good fortune to see the Princess in small school-rooms down Whitechapel way, and she was as welcome there asi n Exeter Hall. Mr. C. MONTAGU, as an old ragged-school boy, seconded, and Her Royal Highness, having bowed her acknowledg- ments, left the building.

Later on Mr. ALDOUS impressively addressed the children, and there was a rough-and-ready but hearty speech from Mr. THOMAS JOHNSTON, a ragged-school worker of Manchester, and once a ragged boy himself.

Bible Christian Missions.

REPRESENTATIVES of the body known as Bible Christians assembled in convention on Tuesday week in Waterloo-road Chapel. The proceed- ings were mainly devotional in the early part of the day, and Rev. Dr. J. O. Keen presided. Rev. F. W. Bourne read a very thoughtful paper on "The Deepening of the Spiritual Life amongst Ministers and People." To this end the Bible must be studied intelligently with meditation and fervent prayer. The Christian must live in the world as not of the world, and be so filled with the love of God that he will be kept from the evil. Rev. J. H. Batt, in commenting on the paper, counselled ministers against entering into worldly amuse- ments, as these blunt the fineness of spiritual touch in dealing with souls. Rev. W. B. Reed said that what was wanted was not new things, but more of the old things. Rev. J. Dymond magnified the work of the Holy Spirit in fur- thering holiness and converting souls. Mr. Horswell said he was impressed by the fact that the "forward movement" was no new departure but a recurrence to what had been done when he was young.

After an hour's interval a paper was read by Rev. W. H. Tickell on "The Difficulties of London Work," seeing they were a body few in number, scant of means, and lacking in social prestige. Rev. I. B. Vanstone did not take a despondent view of the situation, but called for the exercise of a spirit of cheerful co-operation and self-sacrifice. After some remarks by Mr. W. H. Gregory,

A paper was read on "Methods for Exten- sion," by Rev. J. Dymond. He would have Bible Christian meeting-houses all over London, at distances not greater than two miles apart, where the poorest of the poor should be made welcome. There must be more spirituality—a consecrated ministry backed up by a sympa- thetic people. Temperance, mission bands, house-to-house visitation, and schemes for the social welfare of the people were also advo- cated. Rev. A. Trengrove thought it would be expedient to have the advice of a council of all evangelical churches, so that the work would not overlap, but proceed wisely. Rev. J. Honey stated that he had mapped out localities where new centres of work could be established with the greatest advantage.

In the evening a large audience came to- gether in Exeter Hall for the meeting of the Missionary Society. Great enthusiasm pre- vailed, both among speakers and hearers. The Society has at present 136 missionaries, be- sides other workers, and over 10,000 members. The report of the home missions is more en- couraging than for some years past. Several missions have witnessed times of revival and ingathering. As to the Colonial missions, it was reported that the Society had done much good in South Australia; that there had been growth in Victoria; that the work in Queens- land had received an impetus through addi- tional help, and that the prospects of the Con- nexion in New Zealand were promising. Strenuous efforts are being made on behalf of China.

Mr. W. VAUGHAN, who presided, called at- tention to the social upheaval of the masses, and the need of home mission work. Several resolutions were proposed, supported, and passed with acclamation, bearing on the need of increased support; and also a resolution against granting compensation to liquor dealers.

Metropolitan Tabernacle Colporteurs.

DURING the past year, the eighty-four colpor- teurs of the Metropolitan Tabernacle Associa- tion distributed over half a million books, pamphlets, &c., and held nearly 10,000 religious services. At the annual meeting in the Metro- politan Tabernacle on Monday evening, Mr. C. H. SPURGEON stated that the Association had steadily gone on increasing. Colportage had proved to be the cheapest and the most effec- tual way of getting at the people both in country and city. It deserved and ought to receive cordial sympathy and support from the Christian public.

The bulk of the speaking was done by the colporteurs themselves. One from Dorking told of personal dealing with the unconverted. His recital in provincial dialect of the conver- sion of a wicked old woman was touching. A worker from Bethnal Green gave roughly drawn pictures of slum life. Deep shadows and bright lights were presented in his narrative in close proximity and in rapid sequence. A Suffolk colporteur had his knapsack on his back, and seemed filled with enthusiasm for his work. Yet there was keen shrewdness beneath his ardent zeal. He could adapt himself to win the favour and co-operation of clergymen of the Church of England, and to find a welcome where a less adroit man would turn aside. "Happy Jack," of Sussex, had been a railway guard, and had obtained his nickname on ac- count of his taking in good part whatever hap- pened to be his lot. As an illustration of his way of reaching people he told how, when re- pulsed at a farmhouse at a busy season, he lent a hand at churning, and so ingratiated himself into the esteem of the family that he was able to do some good work for his Master.

The men chosen for colporteurs in this Asso- ciation are clearly those who have not only a general aptitude for the work, but certain special qualifications, and to this fact, under God, the great success has been largely due.

Protestant Reformation Society.

AT the meeting of this Society, last week, in Exeter Hall, Sir ROBERT PHAYRE presided, and cited Christ's example for the Society's witness- bearing during about sixty-three years. As heathenism and Judaism united to oppose the Saviour, so Romanism and Ritualism combine to withhold from the young that Book which has given us civil and religious liberty, and upon which our future as a nation depends. Rev. Mr. CLEMENTS read a voluminous report, bristling with details of effective work in the visitation of Roman Catholics; educational classes, fol- lowed by examinations; newspaper discussions, lectures, and other defensive and aggressive operations.

Rev. CHARLES STIRLING, in moving the adop- tion of the report, said that England, favoured through her selection as the chief depository of Divine revelation, needs to be scrupulously careful of God's honour thus committed to her, recognising that present ecclesiastical and political peril endangers true freedom. Captain Manning's experience showed the necessity of warning against error as well as teaching truth. Rev. BURMAN CASSIN said both retention and repudiation of truth is often superficial. Roman- ists and their imitators dread nothing more than the letting in of light from the Word of God; but this must be done without bitterness, and is especially needed among the young, and when Romish emissaries abound everywhere.

Rev. Dr. WAINWRIGHT, in moving a resolution against the attempts now being made to bring England again under Papal supremacy, quoted witnesses of varied but high position in proof that no man of sound mind and adequate information can be a Papist, or be dubious of contending for the purity and sanctity of every English home, and for the safety of the Empire and its institutions. Macaulay recognised the inherent strength of Protestantism when pure; but where are now the men who dare to preach against Popery? The effort is rather to restore it. Old landmarks removed show how the tide has borne in upon us one who, losing his own peculiar territory, heads a crafty Papal invasion of England. After a few earnest words from Canon Hussey, Canon Christopher spoke highly of Commander Williams, the Society's agent, for his work at Oxford, and commended the whole organisation to increased support.

Monthly Tract Society.

"YOUR tracts have wrought a quiet but a real and good work. If your donors and supporters knew the urgent need of such a work, your agency would grow rapidly." So runs a minister's testimony in the report of this Society, read last week at Exeter Hall. Details of work among the many nationalities gathered at the Paris Exhibition, given by Mr. MACKENZIE, the secretary, were exceedingly interesting. The grand total of more than five and a half million general, foreign, and Protestant publications distributed in a year may well be supplemented by prayer and expectation, as suggested.

The chairman, Mr. S. GURNEY SHEPPARD, urged that infidelity, priestcraft, drink, and the spiritual necessities of "the poor rich" are reasons for the extension of this unsectarian agency for disseminating the pure Gospel. Rev. J. HILLMAN described the many ways in which he had rejoiced to satisfy soul-hunger, through the word of God, as contained in the grants, which had also benefited young converts, as a suitable means of gratifying their desires to carry the Gospel to others. He loved the Society because it is Protestant, pure, and practical.

Rev. W. H. BROAD said that for half a century God's stamp of approval has been put upon the method, purpose, and labours of this representative Society, which cares for the intellect as well as for the heart. Rev. W. LANCELOT HOLLAND recognised the Society's happy practice of using current events as tract topics, and the practical wisdom of circulating "The Romish Tenets of Father Ignatius" at that monk's lectures. In common with other speakers he advocated increased circulation of warnings against convents and "holy locusts" (Jesuits) at home, Romish schools abroad, and treachery in the Established Church.

Rev. Dr. BOWMAN STEPHENSON pointed out that England's religious freedom cannot be undermined without endangering civil liberties; also that rich sinners need special comiseration, because they are more than usually inaccessible to the truth, and have peculiar disadvantages spiritually. Pastor FRANK H. WHITE counselled vigilance for a sound foundation, the providing of "books with teeth," cited ancient and modern instances of tract usefulness, and condemned ritualistic encroachments and waste of means.

Women and Temperance.

THE anniversary of the East London Women's Christian Temperance Union was celebrated on Monday last, at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road. In the afternoon there was a conference, presided over by Viscountess LYMINGTON, and in the evening a public meeting, with Mr. F. N. CHARRINGTON in the chair.

Miss E. RICHARDSON read an abstract of the report of last year's work. The membership is small compared with the large field occupied, but the influence exerted by the Union is widespread and deep. If only a slight impression appears to be made upon the general public, it is certain that many who have been victims of the drinking custom have not only been raised from a state of degradation, but have been inspired with a holy zeal in the women's war against the demon of alcohol. The temperance missionary of the Union has been chiefly employed in visiting the Thames and West Ham Police-courts, where she has met with many sad cases, in some of which her counsel has proved a great blessing. During the year the Union has been strengthened by two new branches being affiliated thereto.

Canon FLEMING spoke timely words on the influence of woman. He acknowledged his own deep and lasting indebtedness to a widowed mother. How many women are so ruined through drink that they are bereft of all that ennobles the sex! He solemnly said, the longer I live, the more I hate the drink; and the more I see of its curse, the more ready I am to do anything in my power to keep people away from the evil thing. Declaring himself on the side of "no compensation," the Canon spoke words of encouragement to the members of the Union, telling them that the work was emphatically within their proper sphere, and he hoped their example and precept would be greatly blessed in East London.

Lady ELIZABETH BIDDULPH, who, to use her own words, is "an out-and-out 'blue-ribboner,'" said she felt disposed to cry when she contemplated the fact that the one result of the recent revived prosperity of trade was so great an increase in the consumption of drink as to give the Chancellor of the Exchequer an additional two millions in revenue. Her ladyship vigorously advocated total abstinence for all classes of the community.

Other friends followed with words of counsel and cheer. Miss Rose Braine rendered solos, and some inspiring hymns were sung by the audience.

CHRISTIAN FREEDOM.

BY REV. G. MATHESON, D.D.*

"Paul, the prisoner of Jesus Christ."—EPH. iii. 1.

MAKE me a captive, Lord,
And then I shall be free;
Force me to render up my sword,
And I shall conqueror be.
I sink in life's alarms,
When by myself I stand;
Imprison me within thine arms,
And strong shall be my hand.

My heart is weak and poor,
Until it master find;
It has no spring of action sure,
It varies with the wind.
It cannot freely move
Till Thou hast wrought its chain;
Enslave it with thy matchless love,
And deathless it shall reign.

My power is faint and low,
Till I have learned to serve:
It wants the needed fire to glow,
It wants the breeze to nerve;
It cannot drive the world
Until itself be driven;
Its flag can only be unfurled
When Thou shalt breathe from heaven.

My will is not my own
Till Thou hast made it thine;
If it would reach a monarch's throne
It must its crown resign:
It only stands unbent
Amid the clashing strife
When on thy bosom it has leant,
And found in Thee its life.

* From SACRED SONGS, a collection of fresh and vigorous sacred verse (Blackwood & Sons).

Rev. Philip Gast, 12, Noel-street, Islington, pastor of Spencer-place Chapel, Goswell-road, who labours in St. Luke's and Clerkenwell amongst the poorest of the poor, would be glad to receive hospital letters for sufferers, and especially convalescent letters—there are so many sad cases well known to him.

Notes from Cambridge.

ON Sunday, May 11, missionary sermons were delivered in the churches of Cambridge, Archdeacon Moule, B.D., of Shanghai, preaching at St. Benet's Church in the morning, and Holy Trinity in the evening; Bishop French, of Lahore, occupying the pulpit at Great St. Mary's. The Bishop spoke from Isa. lviii. 11, 12, and laid great stress on the need of the Church being filled with the Holy Spirit before being capable of giving out to others. His personal reminiscences of Jerusalem, Nazareth, Shechem, and Macpelah were peculiarly interesting; likewise the references to his own work in India.

Archdeacon Moule addressed the members of the University Missionary Union, at Ridley Hall, on Saturday night last. The room was packed. The speaker said the great need of China was trained native evangelists. Europeans would more and more have to concentrate their efforts on this branch of the work. Speaking of his own work, he said that three chapels in Shanghai were crowded, and that in a city given over to wickedness. The station was undermanned, yet he could look back with thankfulness to the thirty years he had spent in China as a period of increasing blessing. An encouraging feature of the present time was the leavening, by the native Christians, of the heathen mass around them.

The Baptist Missionary Association hold their annual meeting on Monday next, at 7.30, in St. Andrew's-street Church. The speakers are Rev. R. Glover, of Bristol; Rev. D. T. East, of Jamaica; Rev. J. Potter, of Agra. Mr. C. A. Foster will be in the chair.

We are proud of the noble conduct of one of our number in the missionary cause. On Tuesday, May 6, Mr. J. Hill, of Corpus and Ridley Hall, was asked by the C.M.S. if he was prepared to go out on the following Friday to Africa; he answered to the summons at once. Mr. Colter, of Mr. Douglas Hooper's party, was unable to proceed, and a substitute was needed at once; Mr. Hill has proceeded to East Africa to take his place.

A Presbyterian Church is being built in Downing-street; formerly the Presbyterian services were held in the Guildhall.

Mr. Edwin Arrowsmith addressed a well-attended meeting up here on Wednesday the 7th. He urged the importance of the influence which University men have over boys, being employed now; that men who could not speak had in the C.S.S.M. an ample sphere of work. To get recruits for the seaside services a committee was formed among undergraduates last term.

On the same day the Y.M.C.A. held a sale of plants in aid of the South American Missionary Society.

A circular has been issued by the Cambridge Intercollegiate Committee in aid of funds to send a representative to Mr. Moody's Conference at Northfield this year. The Committee wish to step out of the lethargy of past years, and send a proper delegate to confer with the 500 students from fifty universities there present. All contributions will be received by Mr. R. F. Bevan, Trinity College.

The Roman Catholic church here is almost finished. It will, we fear, be a great source of mischief in our midst. The interior is most lavishly got up, and I counted no less than four "altars" besides the "high altar." The names of "English martyrs" are inscribed on scrolls upon the pillars; many of them are names utterly unknown. We shall need the prayers of your readers that Cambridge may remain a stronghold of evangelical faith.

The Church Missionary annual sale was held in the Guildhall on Tuesday and Wednesday, May 13 and 14.

THE MORALITY CRUSADE.

THE National Vigilance Association continues vigorously to pursue its war upon corruption in literature, pictures, and advertisements. Steadily but surely it is securing the adhesion and assistance of men of position and influence, as well as of societies engaged in cognate pursuits.

On May 7 the mansion of Mr. Frank Morrison, at 8, Cromwell Houses, South Kensington, was thrown open to an "At Home," for discussing the suppression of obscene books and pictures, and the working of the Indecent Advertisements Act, as well as for the adoption of a plain of campaign for the future. Some staunch supporters of the cause who were expected were prevented from attending; but between sixty and seventy gentlemen assembled, including Lord Kinnaird (who presided), Lord Nelson, Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., Mr. H. J. Wilson, M.P., Dr. Young, L.C.C., and several clergymen, ministers, and barristers-at-law.

In this, as in all movements for the moral elevation of the people, the salient feature which has to be met and overcome is the want of appreciation of the evil itself. This has been the difficulty before the Vigilance Association. Obscenities in literature, it is abundantly proved, have led scores of lads into crime, and to prison; the issue of offensive photographs, and the publication of objectionable advertisements in newspapers have suggested vice to hundreds of previously pure minds. Yet, when the Association has instituted prosecutions, juries have gone in favour of the accused. Mr. Coote, the secretary, cited a case the other evening. A vendor of photographs was brought before Mr. Vaughan at Bow-street; that magistrate pronounced the photographs to be obscene and ordered their destruction; for the time being, however, they were retained as evidence at the trial, and when submitted for the inspection of the grand jury, that body threw out the bill of indictment, and were thus able to overturn the magistrate's ruling, exempt the accused from his trial, and restore to him the photographs which Mr. Vaughan had condemned.

It had been pleaded that the Association was aiming at the destruction of "classical literature," and the condemnation of "works of art;" but several of the speakers showed that the books upon which the Association had founded prosecutions were not bonâ fide translations of classical works, but a collation of the most objectionable excerpts from those works. The great work of the Association, therefore, is the creation of a healthy and moral public opinion, so that parents and guardians of the morals of the young might realise the vast and lamentable damage that is done day by day to the youth of both sexes.

In this work the Association has succeeded, so far as the time of its existence has allowed. Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., was especially commendatory of the aims and actions of the Association. He pointed out that Parliament had so far yielded to public pressure as to pass the Indecent Advertisements Act, on the whole a very good act, though not powerful enough, and at present not sufficiently enforced. Then the Press, though still very ready to ridicule any champion of pure literature, had partly eliminated objectionable advertisements. Mr. Smith had a strong conviction that the recent eruptions of foul literature were the outcome of the oceans of divorce case details which the London daily papers published some years ago; he therefore argued for an extension of legislative powers, so that newspapers should be placed under control as well as the publishers of books. Mr. Coote, the secretary, gave some very encouraging details of the work of the Society in London, and its nearly 150 provincial branch committees.

THE NEW WIMBLEDON.—The Cow Cross Mission Home of Rest, at St. John's, Woking, is within a mile of Bisley Common, where several thousands of the Guards are now encamped for rifle practice. The village of Knaphill lies between us, and is the resort of hundreds of soldiers and civilians on a Sunday evening in summer. Very soon we shall have an enormous influx of visitors with the volunteers in camp on the Common. We purpose re-commencing open-air services on Whit-Sunday; but my health is shattered, and we need helpers. WILLIAM CATLIN.

DEAN CHADWICK ON EXODUS.*

WE regard this as a valuable addition to the "Expositor's Bible Series." It is assuring to read in the preface that "Jesus Christ did certainly treat this book, taking it as He found it, as possessed of high authority, a sacred scripture." Dr. Chadwick has no doubt whatever as to its authenticity; and very frequently, throughout the course of the exposition, the claims of the "advanced" critics are referred to, and shown to be untenable. Equally does the author expose the ignorance and emptiness of the sneers of sceptics against the supposed mistakes of this book. Referring to the word "borrow" (iii. 22), of which so much capital has been made by sceptics, he shows what absurdity would result if the same word were translated borrow in other places. Here are some—"He borrowed water, and she gave him milk (Jud. v. 25). "Because thou hast borrowed this thing, and hast not borrowed long life for thyself; neither hast borrowed riches for thyself, nor hast borrowed the life of thine enemies" (1 Kings iii. 11). "Thou hast borrowed a hard thing" (2 Kings ii. 10). Neither the advanced scholarship of the critics, nor the ignorance of the sceptics has destroyed the canonicity and authenticity of the book of Exodus.

We are also thankful to note the evangelical tone which generally marks this exposition. We say "generally," for there are places where the purity of his evangelicalism is obscured. For example, "Divine Fatherhood" is spoken of as "always a reality, while our sonship is only a possibility for human enjoyment or rejection" (p. 104). Such statements are hazy, and seem to ignore the one supreme fact of the new birth by which we become actually the sons of God. The author also thinks he finds in the fact that none of the passover lamb must be left until the morning a reason for the rule that the communion elements must be all consumed (188). Speaking of the people who "were baptized unto Moses," a footnote explains, "Not the adults only, nor yet by immersion, whether in the rain cloud or the surf" (212).

Yet these things are the exception. For the most part the evangelical tone is most refreshing, even when certain ritualistic teaching might have tempted him away. We are thankful for the following repudiation of the pretensions of an order of priests:—"Nowhere in the New Testament is the name by which He is designated bestowed upon any earthly minister by virtue of his office. The presbyter is never called sacerdos. And perhaps the heaviest blow ever dealt to popular theology was the misapplying of the New Testament epithet (elder, presbyter, or priest) to designate the sacerdotal functions of the Old Testament and those of Christ which they foreshadowed" (408). To this many other quotations might be added, which would show how faithfully the author defends evangelical truth.

We are thankful for such an exposition. It is scholarly and able, and written in a bright and vigorous style, which is easy and delightful to read. Its tone is devout and healthy, while it abounds in practical teaching, and skilfully applies the lessons of the book to questions of present-day importance.

* THE BOOK OF EXODUS. By the Very Rev. G. A. CHADWICK, D.D. Hodder & Stoughton. 7s. 6d.

A RESCUE HOME in connection with the mission work of the Society of Friends has been opened at 71, Greenwood-road, Dalston; already five sisters have found a shelter in it. Parcels of left-off clothes, or material for making clothes for the inmates, will be welcome. The hon. secretary is Mrs. Richardson, Greenwood-house, 71, Greenwood-road, Dalston, E.

ANTI-INFIDEL TRACT ENTERPRISE.—Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh, of the Anti-Infidel Tract Enterprise, writes to say that "At this season of the year many calls reach us from open-air workers for a supply of our anti-Infidel tracts. The treasury of our 'Gratuitous Distribution Tract Fund' is considerably overdrawn, and we are not in a position to respond to the most pressing of these appeals. Every subscriber of 5s. will receive an assorted parcel of tracts of the value of 10s. As free-thinkers readily supply their leaders with funds for the purpose of attacking Christianity, we feel it is only necessary for us to make our need known to your readers, to have it supplied." Catalogue and specimen tracts sent on application to Mr. Bradlaugh, 70, King's Cross-road, London.

Obituary.

PASTEUR PHILIPPE CORBIÈRE.

THIS well-known pastor expired a few days ago at Montpellier, at the age of 83. He was the author of a history of the Reformed Church in Montpellier, in which, alas! the Protestants are not the power they once were. Formerly they were in the majority; though they are not now so numerous, they are nevertheless very influential. M. Corbière's ministry in the town extended over a period of at least fifty years. He was known to everyone, and not in vain did he labour in the cause of the Gospel.

PROFESSOR ANDRÉ.

We regret to have to record the death of Professor André, at Littlehampton. During the last dozen years Professor André has been known in this country in connection with the Alpine Choir, whose entertainments have been the means of greatly extending the use of the mandoline, guitar, and zither. The choir frequently appeared at temperance meetings in London and the provinces. Professor André, who was a composer of popular melodies, has been living in retirement in the quiet Sussex watering-place, and died somewhat suddenly of heart disease at the age of sixty.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. and Mrs. Woolley have conducted an eight days' mission at the Gainsborough Working Men's Mission. Much good is expected to result.

Mr. Herbert Veasey, of Torquay, has recently conducted a twelve days' Gospel Mission at Croyde and Georgeham. The meetings were well attended throughout. There has been much blessing among saved and unsaved.

Malmesbury, Wilts.—Tent services in this town by Mr. John Elliott are most encouraging, although this is the fourth mission conducted here by the same evangelist. Large numbers are drawn together. The meetings continue another week.

Pedwell, Bridgwater.—The cause of Christ here has been helped through the visit of Mr. Kelshaw, evangelist, who has been conducting mission services for the past fortnight. Many have been convinced of sin, and have declared themselves on the Lord's side.

Mr. W. D. Dunn commenced a series of meetings at Hawick on May 4. The meetings grew every night in interest and power. Christians have testified to blessing received. Backsliders have been restored, and a goodly number of sinners have been brought into living contact with Jesus. We look for greater blessing still in the concluding week of the mission.

THOMAS FISHER.

UNION TABERNACLE, WANDSWORTH-ROAD, S.W.—On Monday, last week, many visiting friends joined the members of this church at a prayer-meeting. The blessing which has attended the work here among young women was a source of special joy; for years past scarcely any have entered the Bible-class without being brought to a knowledge of Christ. Short addresses were given at intervals, and the réunion, which lasted six hours, was a season of spiritual refreshment to many. Mr. Boyer, of the Drift Children's Mission, has begun a series of meetings for the young. He is as successful in Wandsworth-road as in East London in securing juvenile attendance at meetings and interest in the Gospel.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on the following:—A month's services at Cumberland Hall, Hotwells, Clifton, by Mr. James Jones, of Wednesbury.——Special services during June among the Militia at Horfield, in connection with the Soldiers' Christian Association, Bristol.——Evangelistic meetings at Bewdley.——A ten days' Gospel mission in Kinsale, co. Cork, by Messrs. Flook and Smith, of the Irish Gospel Mission, May 17 to 27.——Services to be held for factory girls at Pontymoile, Mon., that those girls who have already decided for Christ may be preserved from the evil influences around them.——Two evangelists desire special prayer for Warmland, Sweden, where they will soon hold meetings.——A mission by Mr. William Forbes, at Union Tabernacle, Wandsworth-road.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. Daniel Lewis Lloyd, Principal of Christ College, Brecon, has been appointed to the Bishopric of Bangor.

Bishop Temple, owing to impaired eyesight, has offered to resign his see, but the Archbishop of Canterbury has advised him to the contrary.

The Record says that quite a number of statements are in circulation as to recent perversions to Rome, the names of four or five clergy being freely canvassed. It is hinted that in some cases a large proportion of their flocks will follow them, and the Bishop of Lincoln's case is alleged to be responsible for many of these changes.

PRESBYTERIAN.

In the handsome church at Algiers, erected by the late Sir Peter Coats, on a recent Sunday, an Arab and Mussulman, and a student of medicine, was publicly baptized by Rev. J. Boyd, of Wemyss Bay.

BAPTIST.

Rev. A. E. Clarke, late curate of St. Mark's, Preston, who recently seceded from the Church of England, owing to his change of views on the subject of baptism, has accepted the pastorate of Coupland-street Chapel, Greenheys, Manchester.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

In Antananarivo, the capital of Madagascar, the English Friends have an extensive Medical Mission, in charge of Dr. Fenn and Dr. Moss. In conjunction with the Norwegian Mission a Medical College has been established, and already it has turned out a considerable number of well-trained native physicians, whose influence will be, with God's blessing, very powerful for good, especially in the distant provinces of the island, where much pioneering work has still to be done. A new hospital is being built.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. Dr. Stevenson, of Brixton, has been compelled through ill-health to relinquish his duties for a time.

Rev. Dr. Brown, of Bunyan Meeting, Bedford, has been elected Chairman of the Congregational Union for 1891.

The Young Men's Union in connection with West Kensington Church (Rev. A. Norris, pastor) propose to hold open air services during the summer months on Sunday evenings, after Divine service, in the North-end-road.

At New Tredegar the Congregationalists are commencing a forward movement. On Saturday week Rev. J. T. Phillips, the pastor, and a number of members of his church, began a series of open-air meetings to present the truths of the Gospel to outsiders.

The memorial-stone of a new mission-hall (in connection with Abney Church, Stoke Newington), situated in the midst of workmen's dwellings, on the site of the old ragged school, was laid on Saturday. The hall is to seat 250 adults; there will also be an infant schoolroom to accommodate 100, and a soup-kitchen, &c.

METHODIST.

Rev. Dr. Lunn's offer to work for the West London Mission without receiving a stipend has been declined by the Finance Committee.

At the annual meeting on behalf of Wesleyan Home Missions, Mr. H. H. Fowler, M.P., presided, and said that of all the problems of the day, none was graver than the attitude of the working classes, the bulk of the nation, to Christianity, and the attitude of the Church, in the broadest sense of the word, to the nation.

Home mission work is being vigorously carried on in many parts of Sussex. At Newhaven a lay agent is labouring with no small measure of success; and since the appointment of Rev. Joseph Howard to Lewes, special attention has been given to the line of Methodist outposts, which stretch for twenty miles from Newhaven to Waldron.

The President of the Wesleyan Conference has just nominated the sub-committee of the Foreign Missions Committee which is to deal with the Indian controversy. It is to sit in London during Whit-week. He has taken the greatest trouble to secure gentlemen who have no official, personal, or family interest in the issue. Rev. Hugh Price Hughes thinks the President has succeeded admirably in his delicate and difficult task.

The memorial-stones of a new Wesleyan chapel at Witchampton, Wimborne, were recently laid. Rev. Carr Glyn, rector of Witchampton, at the invitation of the superintendent minister, laid one of the memorial-stones of the new chapel, after which he delivered an address full of cordial Christian sympathy. Mr. Glyn has also lent the church schoolroom for Sunday-evening services while the new chapel is in building.

Since Bradford-street Chapel, Birmingham, has been made into a Mission, the work has greatly revived under the ministrations of Rev. A. Bingham and Rev. F. L. Wiseman. On Sunday evenings it is a cheering sight to see the old sanctuary filled with worshippers; best of all, sinners are being saved. On a recent Sunday evening a number of men and women testified to the power and love of God. Some half dozen men said they had been scoffers at religion and all that was good, but since they had found Christ they had deeply repented of their past conduct, and were trusting by faith on the Son of God.

SALVATION ARMY.

The returns for the last six months are nearly complete, and show that over 107,000 persons have gone out to the penitent form since the beginning of November.

General Booth is about to issue a pamphlet of sixty-four pages, entitled, "Orders and Regulations for Soldiers;" price one penny. This will be a complete statement of what is authoritatively enjoined upon the rank and file of Salvationists.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

Dr. Edward F. Hoernle has been appointed to assist Rev. Dr. Lowe in the superintendence of the operations of the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society.

A very interesting biographical sketch of Rev. W. Elmslie, father of the late Professor Elmslie, from the pen of Mr. Alexander, editor of the Aberdeen Free Press, appears in The Free Church Monthly.

The Free and Established Church Assemblies meet in Edinburgh on Thursday next. The Free Church moderator is Dr. Thos. Brown, of the Dean Church, Edinburgh. Dr. A. K. H. Boyd, of St. Andrews, is to preside over the Established Assembly.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

The district meetings of the Irish Methodist Church report a net increase in membership, and nearly twice the average number of candidates for the ministry.

Y.M.C.A. work in Ireland is being vigorously sustained in many places; cheering reports reach us with respect to Kingstown, Cork, Carrickfergus, and Belfast.

The Cork convention for the deepening of the spiritual life, recently held, was a time of much blessing, and tended to unite members of the various churches in a remarkable degree.

Dr. O'Sullivan, now Bishop of Tuam, was originally a Roman Catholic; but, coming under the influence of the late Dr. Bernard, he became a Protestant, and gradually rose from being a Scripture-reader to occupy his present position.

The Bible and Colportage Society of Ireland has held its thirty-first annual meeting in Belfast. The report showed that the past year has been one of general progress. The colportage association of the General Assembly has also held its annual meeting, and has had a prosperous year.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Colonel Stuart Wortley, a well-known leader in rescue work.—Rev. George Hughes, Carlisle, for fifty-three years in the Wesleyan ministry.—Rev. C. H. Tyler, rector of Rodney Stoke, Weston-super-Mare.—Rev. John Jagger, Wesleyan minister, Barton-on-Humber.—Rev. W. P. Tiddy, for nineteen years Continental agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society, and subsequently pastor of the Congregational Church, Camberwell New-road.—Rev. John Parker, retired Presbyterian minister, Sunderland.—Rev. John Pogson, Barrow-in-Furness, for nearly forty years in the Wesleyan ministry.

Systematic Bible Teaching.—An expository lesson is given on Wednesday afternoons from half-past two to four o'clock, during May and June, in the Conference Room, at 21, Warwick-lane, Paternoster-row, E.C.

Albany Institute, Camberwell, is being built to provide accommodation for good work which for some years has been carried on in an old coach shed. The object is to win young men and others to Christ, and not in vain have devoted men given their time in conducting Bible-classes and meetings of various kinds. Some well-known friends of Christian work have given assistance, but £250 is still needed. Mr. Spurgeon, who knows the excellence of the endeavour, writes that the friends "must be helped through." Communications should be addressed to Mr. G. B. WILMOT, 34, Brunswick-square, Camberwell.

THE IRISH SUNDAY CLOSING BILL.—The friends of temperance in Ireland are determined to do all they can to prevent the exclusion of Dublin, Cork, Waterford, Limerick, and Belfast from the provisions of the Sunday Closing Bill. Already various public bodies and several influential public meetings have most strongly protested against the proposal.

SOUTHSEA CONFERENCE.—The invitation to this gathering, having for its objectthe deepening of the spiritual life in believers, has just been issued. At the morning meetings (May 27, 28, 29), the three "whats" of the Apostle Paul, in Eph. i. 15-23, will engage attention:— (1) What is the hope of his calling? (2) What the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints? (3) What the exceeding greatness of his power to usward who believe? For the evenings, three representations of Christ "in the midst," by St. John, will be considered:—In the midst of sinners, John xix. 18; of churches, Rev. ii. 1; the throne, Rev. vii. 17. There will be preliminary and closing meetings on May 26 and 30. Reports of work will be given on the Conference days, and there will be helpful expositions and addresses. Copies of the programme may be had from Rev. Frederick Baldey, vicar of St. Simon s, Southsea.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope many of our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes, which of course are entirely different from these.

SUNDAY, MAY 18.—Psalm IX.

MUTH-LABBEN probably refers to the tune to which these words were set. The Chaldee version adds "concerning the death of the champion who went out between the camps," referring the Psalm to the death of Goliath of Gath, whose fate aroused the Psalmist's muse in the review of after years to a very triumphant pitch. In the LXX. this Psalm refers to the death of the Divine Son, and recites his victory over death and the grave and all our foes.

THERE IS A PREDOMINANT NOTE OF PRAISE (1-6, 11, 12, &c.).—Let us not praise with a divided, but whole heart. And we must incite praise by recounting all God's works. Let memory heap fuel on the altar of praise. The Lord has indeed rebuked our arch enemy (comp. 6 and Zech. iii. 1), and his strongholds are now wastes, come to a perpetual end (2 Cor. x. 4; Col. ii. 15). What a contrast between our dead foes, and our ever living King (7).

There is an assertion of trust (7-12, 18).—"Refuge" is high tower. The oppressed, the humble, the needy, and the poor have strong encouragement. Calamity drives them to God, and makes them familiar with the secrets of his character. The more we know of God the more we can trust Him. Doubt is born of ignorance. Leave God to vindicate you, He will not forget (12).

There is petition for further help (13, 14, 19, 20).—What a contrast between the gates of death (13) and the gates of the holy city (14)! What a striking example of 15th verse is given in the story of Haman (Esther vii. 10)! He who lifts the righteous hurls down the wicked. It is a sin to forget God (17). There is a striking emphasis in the two closing verses; the Hebrew for man might be rendered weak, mortal man (Isa. li. 13).

MONDAY, MAY 19.—Psalm X.

This Psalm is full of sorrowful complaint, and befits God's people in all seasons of distress.

THE MALICE OF THE FOE IS POWERFULLY DESCRIBED (1-11).—The treatment which the unjust oppressor deals out to his prey is set forth in many rich and striking images. Now, it is the serpent with venom under his tongue (7); now, the bandit secreted in ambush (8); now, the lion in his den, and again the hunter snaring the unsuspecting prey (9). And all the while God seems to stand afar off and hide his eyes from the tribulation caused to his own, so much so that all the thoughts of the wicked, that there is no God, seem abundantly confirmed (4, 11).

THE PRAYER OF THE OPPRESSED (12-15).—God is asked to lift up his hand from rest in the folds of his robe. He is the helper of the helpless and hapless, who commit themselves to Him. Let us commit ourselves to Him that judgeth righteously (1 Pet. ii. 23). It is supposed that the suppliant entreats that the oppressor's boast (11) may be answered in another way than he thinks, in the complete extirpation of every vestige of his sin (Matt. xiii. 41).

THE BOAST OF FAITH (16-18).—What in ix. 19 was a prayer is here taken as an accomplished fact. Forget not the humble (12) is here recalled: Thou hast heard the desire of the humble (17). The preparation of the heart in prayer is his work, and so of course He is able to hear and answer. When we abide in Jesus, and the Holy Ghost flows through our hearts as sap through the vine, we are taught how to pray, and whatsoever we ask we receive. True prayer begins with God, and returns to Him again.

TUESDAY, MAY 20.—Psalm XI.

When John Welsh and his fellow-captives were summoned from their prison on the Firth of Forth to appear before the court, they sang this Psalm as they walked by night under guard to their trial. It is worth reading in the rugged Scotch version. It is a debate between fear and faith, and probably dates from the time when David was being persecuted by Saul.

THE COUNSELS OF EXPEDIENCY.—(1) Timid friends, anxious for his safety, urged him, not simply to flee to the literal mountains, which he did, but to desert the cause of God, and to renounce his faith, which he never did. Birds escape the dangers of the plains by winging their flight to the caves or woods of the hills. Such counsels were constantly given to Nehemiah (Neh. vi.). And the enemy has ever sought to dislodge the faithful servants of God by fear (Job ii. 9, 10; Luke xiii. 31). Luther's diaries abound in similar references. And there is much force in the reasons alleged. The bow is already being bent, the darkness is in favour of evil stratagems (2, R.V.), and the foundations of social order are undermined. Righteousness cannot avail, why should it not be relinquished?

THE ANSWERS OF FAITH (4-7).—The revolutions of earth cannot shake his throne. He permits the wicked some licence that the righteous may be tested (Luke xxii. 31, 32). And when the limit is reached which his love apportions to his people's trials, then their persecutors will first be entangled in snares, from which they shall not escape, and then overwhelmed as Sodom was. But in the meantime, whilst in the midst of persecution and sorrow, let the righteous remember that the eye of God not only beholds their patience, but exchanges glances of tenderness with his suffering ones (Exod. iii. 7).

WEDNESDAY, MAY 21.—Psalm XII.

The opening words suggest that this Psalm is an Appeal for Help in Bad and Evil Days. There are days when sin seems rampant, sweeping all before it. The great and godly men one by one are taken away, and the ungodly reign supreme. But, when there is no help in man, let us turn to God with the cry which broke from Peter's lips when sinking in the waves. It is a very convenient cry, both from its brevity and its comprehensiveness. Help, Lord (see Micah vii. 2).

THE NEED OF HELP (1, 2, 4). — Deceit is specially the sin of Orientals. A double heart is literally a heart and a heart; and such practise deceit on neighbours whom they should love. On the contrary we are bidden to put away lying, and speak truth to our neighbours (Eph. iv. 25). Oh for perfect transparency of heart and life!

THE CERTAINTY OF HELP (3, 4).—The very prayer begotten in the heart carries the assurance of an answer. Besides, the world is so made that such daring wickedness cannot go unpunished. Let us never act as if we thought our lips were our own, for they too have been bought with the price of those dear parched lips which cried, I thirst.

THE ARISING OF HELP (5).—God hears sighs. One sigh will make Him arise, as the sighs of Stephen made Jesus stand (Acts vii. 56).

THE BLESSED PROMISE OF HELP (6, 7).—There is no mixture of error in the words of God, all dross has been removed; they may therefore be trusted to the uttermost. Bind the words of God to your heart, and go fearlessly forth into the midst of vile and wicked men, you shall be kept and preserved for evermore (Isa. liv. 17).

THURSDAY, MAY 22.—Psalm XIII.

This Psalm evidently dates from the Sauline persecutions. Four times the afflicted Psalmist cries, How long. It begins in the deepest dejection, but it clears itself as it proceeds, and the soul, lark-like, rises above the lower current of east wind, till it revels in the heaven of God's love. Pray on, troubled believer, it is marvellous how prayer is a ladder from the deepest dungeon into the most radiant day.

DEPRESSION (1, 2).—Saul's persecutions lasted over years, and no hope of termination appeared (1 Sam. xxvii. 1). David was as a man who spends 500 days passing through a forest, the tangled overgrowth hides the sun, and he begins to despair of ever emerging. Some say that this Psalm is the cry of the Church (Rev. vi. 10).

SUPPLICATION (3, 4).—How wise to hand over all worries and anxieties to God. If, instead of carrying them in our own heart, we made them all instantly known to Him, we should live more blessed and peaceful lives (Phil. iv. 6). He had bemoaned four evils, he now entreats four blessings (3). Oh for the enlightened eyes! (1 Sam. xiv. 27; Eph. i. 18). The holy soul is as eager for God's honour, as for its own vindication (4).

ASSURANCE (5, 6).—It is very delightful when we can sing, though not out of the wood, because so certain of the coming deliverance. Faith praises for the victory before the fight has even reached its worst. After lying for some time in the Bishop of London's coalhouse, Mr. John Philpot was rebuked for singing hymns in prison, and he answered: "I have so much joy than I cannot lament, but day and night I never was so merry before."

FRIDAY, MAY 23.—Psalm XIV.

The creed, character, and doom of the Atheist are here depicted; and the Psalm is so important as to be repeated (liii.), with slight alterations, which show this rendering more suitable for public use. The Hebrew word fool denotes one of withered intellect.

THE ROOT OF ATHEISM.—It begins not in the head, but in the heart (Rom. i. 21). Men do not like God; they try to ignore Him, and end by blatantly denying Him. The surest way of dealing with such is to treat them as rebels and sinners.

THE EFFECT OF ATHEISM ON THE CHARACTER (2-6).—Corruption as of a grave; abominable works; darkened understanding; filthiness of heart and life; persecution and shaming of the godly; but finally great fear. What a true catalogue of crimes! These verses are largely quoted by the Apostle (Rom. iii. 10-12) as true of all men, because the seeds of this awful crop are by nature latent in us all, awaiting favourable conditions of germination. God comes as a seeker, eagerly looking for those who abjure the ways of sin, and call upon Him; and these are picked out by Him as his choice jewels, for his own. The word because in ver. 6 should be better rendered but. The enemy may come up against the camp of the righteous, but God is in the midst of them; they cannot be moved (Ps. xlvi.).

THE BEST ANSWER TO ATHEISM (7).—The Church of God, of whom the Jewish people was a type, is too much in captivity to the world and the devil. Let us daily ask that our salvation may speedily come, the advent of which shall bring discomfiture to our foes, and long, glad rejoicings to us (Heb. ix. 28; 2 Thess. i. 8, 9).

SATURDAY, MAY 24.—Psalm XV.

This Psalm was probably composed with xxiv., to celebrate the bringing of the ark to Mount Zion. The first words are almost a repetition of the awe-struck question of the stricken men of Bethshemesh (1 Sam. vi. 20). And the rest of the Psalm gives a description of those who may dwell with God. If we would have fellowship with God, and dwell in his house all the days of our earthly life, let us see that this character is ours, by the grace of the Holy Spirit.

THE CHALLENGE OF THE SOLOIST (1).

THE ANSWER OF THE CHOIR (2-5).—The answer is given, first, positively (2), and then, negatively (3); so also, in the two following verses. It is very needful that we watch our walk, and work, and talk, if we would have fellowship with God. Those who would walk with God must be like God. We must abhor slander, evil, and reproach. When stories reach us, let them stop with us. Let us act as non-conductors. We must also mind what company we keep, withdrawing from the companionship of the vile, but drawing close to and honouring all who fear God, whatever their rank and sect, as children of the same Father, and therefore brethren and sisters in the same family. Usury, which is a very different thing to the taking of interest, and bribes are equally inconsistent with the vision of God. If only we are heedful of all these matters, we shall not only be able to dwell in the royal palace, as priests and kings, but we shall remain steadfast and unmoveable amid the changes and convulsions around. Here is the secret of permanence and rest (5).

AUSTRALIAN ABORIGINES.—A meeting in connection with the Maloga Aboriginal Mission is to be held in the Lower Exeter Hall, Strand, on Wednesday next, at 7.30 p.m., when Mr. Daniel Matthews will speak at length of the work of the Mission.

MISSIONARIES FOR CENTRAL AFRICA.—On Monday last week the C.M.S. received a telegram from Mr. Douglas Hooper, in Eastern Africa, begging for a further reinforcement to be sent by the French mail leaving on May 10, in time to accompany Bishop Tucker and Mr. Hooper's party to the Victoria Nyanza. This telegram was mentioned at the C.M.S. annual meetings at Exeter Hall, on Tuesday, and within 36 hours nine offers of service were received. Four men were selected, and actually started on Saturday evening for Marseilles. They are: Mr. J. W. Hill, a Cambridge graduate; Mr. T. V. Dermott and Mr. J. W. Dunn, who were shortly to be ordained to the ministry; and Mr. F. C. Smith, who has been under training as a lay evangelist. Previous to their departure a meeting to bid them God speed was held, on Saturday afternoon, at the C.M.S. College, Islington, under the presidency of Sir John Kennaway, M.P. The outgoing missionaries were addressed by Rev. A. J. Robinson, and commended to God in prayer by Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe.

International S.S. Lessons.

Sunday Afternoon, May 25.

THE MISSION OF THE SEVENTY.—LUKE x. 1-16.

GOLDEN TEXT: LUKE x. 11.

"OTHER seventy also."—Besides the Apostles sent out long before on a similar tour (ix. 1-6). "The kingdom of Christ aggressive, progressive, expansive: first, twelve Apostles, then seventy preachers, then five hundred brethren, then thousands!"—Van Doren. "Seventy."—So "seventy elders" assisted Moses (Num. xi. 16). "Two and two."—"The gifts of one to complete those of the other." Also for their mutual comfort and support. It was a most gracious provision.

THE DISCOURSE.—Instructions for the mission (2-12), and warnings to the unrepentant (13-16).

(1) Instructions for the mission (2-12).—"The harvest." A favourite image in our Lord's teaching, used in parables of the "sower" and the "tares," and in John iv. 35, 36, as though He lived with the great harvest ever in view! "Pray."—Suggestive hint of the sublime ministry of prayer! We see the over-ripe far-stretching harvest on the one hand; on the other, God insisting to fill those fields with reapers. What hinders Him? Lack of prayers—lack of true sympathy with God and man on the part of his people. YE, who are yourselves to be workers, ye only can pray this prayer with consistency, understanding, and full sympathy. "That He would send forth."—The Lord, not man, must send, if we are to do his work. "Thou shalt go to all that I shall send thee," &c. (Jer. i. 7). Beseech Him to accept you, and send you to do your task in the lot He has chosen. "Teachers should be very cautious how they speak about children 'being missionaries' to their parents, lest they foster self-will, conceit, and disregard of the fifth commandment. A pious child may bring his parents to Christ, but it will be rather by irreproachable conduct, and gentle demeanour, than by assuming to teach. Nevertheless, there is such a thing as a child's active work for Christ. Every gentle word of instruction, counsel, or warning given to a younger brother or sister, or playmate, every fearless refusal to join others in sin, every childish prayer for others, every trifle given from the child's own money to the missionary box, is a fulfilling of the command given us in this lesson."—Eugene Stock.

"Behold, I send you forth as lambs," &c.—"They took their lives in their hands, and this gave them power, by proving their sincerity." "They are to set out just as they are—weak and utterly unprovided. The first characteristic of a messenger of Jesus is confidence. Jesus, who gives them their mission, charges Himself with the task of defending them, and of providing for their wants."—Godet. "Scrip"—leather bag or wallet—is an old English word now obsolete. "Nor shoes," i.e., only the sandals they wore. "Salute no man by the way."—A complete Oriental salutation consumes from one to three hours. "They must travel like men absorbed by one supreme interest." The King's business presses, and time is short. "First, say peace," &c.—"By 'peace' the Jews meant all blessing and welfare. The entrance and the salutation are simultaneous. The prevailing impulse in the servant of Christ is the desire of communicating the peace with which he himself is filled."—Godet.

"It shall turn to you again," i.e., you, at any rate, will be blessed in blessing. "Eating and drinking such things as," &c.—"They are to regard themselves immediately as members of the family, and to eat without scruple the bread of their hosts. It is the price of their labour. They give more than they receive."—Godet. "Go not from house to house."—"When a stranger arrives in a village, the neighbours, one after another, must invite him to eat with them. There is a strict etiquette about it, involving much ostentation and hypocrisy: it consumes much time, causes unusual distraction of mind, and everywhere counteracts the success of a spiritual mission."—Land and Book. "Eating and drinking such things as they give."—Be neither fastidious, nor over-scrupulous, but accept freely and gratefully. "The labourer is worthy," &c.—Be independent. Though they give their best, you have given them far more. "Heal the sick... and say, The kingdom," &c.—Acts of mercy, and Gospel preaching should ever go hand in hand. "Come nigh unto you," i.e., all the blessings of Messiah could now be theirs for the taking. What a tremendous message? How it must have stirred men! Yet the words have a still clearer bearing on us. How near the kingdom to each!

(2) Warnings to the unrepentant (13-16).—Notice how through all this warning is revealed: (1) The full gravity of the present, and (2) the deep feeling Jesus had of the supreme character of his mission. Capernaum.—Jesus had made it his home, and "the cradle of the kingdom of God."—Godet. Of his recorded miracles, more were wrought here than in any other place. "He that heareth you, heareth Me," &c.—Man's attitude to Christ's heralds and their message is really the same as their attitude to Christ, and even to God Himself.

"What a grandeur, then, belongs to the work which He confides to his servants!"—Godet.

LESSONS.

(1) The world is to be saved by human agency, by men's prayers—prayers, (1) spoken, and (2) lived.

(2) There is no honour like the honour of taking part in this work. Are you working for Christ, or against Him?

(3) This harvesting of men is the great work of history. For this Christ lived, and died, and rose again. It filled his heart and hands. Have we felt its sublimity?

(4) Remember the stupendous part to be played by prayer.

(5) These seventy were personally chosen by Jesus Himself. Do you, the teacher, enjoy a clear personal relationship to the Lord Himself, (1) as his friend, forgiven, accepted, and blessed; and (2) as one whom He has thrust forth to do his work. On the distinct settlement of these questions depend peace, joy, and power.

(6) The qualities required of Christ's servants: (1) Absolute confidence in Him for protection and support; (2) single-eyed devotion (4-8); (3) hearts full of blessing, eager to give out the peace that was theirs (5, 6, 9); (4) courtesy; (5) independence, "The labourer is worthy," &c.; (6) dignity of King's messenger (10, 11).

(7) The kingdom of God is nigh to you and to me. Is nigh now. Study to make this very clear. So many children grow up not Christians, though yearning for Christ, only because they do not know they may go now, and as they are, to Him.

(8) Press the awful warning of the lesson. The rejection of truth may be a far more terrible sin than the doing of a great crime. Simply saying "No" to Jesus may be far worse to some than for others to live in horrible iniquity. How easy to say that fatal "No"!

Personalia.

Mr. Charles Cook is busy visiting the prisons of Russia. In St. Petersburg he has preached in all the wards, and distributed copies of the Scriptures. He has received permission to enter the prisons of Moscow for the same beneficent purpose.

Mr. Glenny, of the North Africa Mission, who has Messrs. Bridgford and Stephens with him, is visiting the stations of the mission. He began last week at Tlemçen, and on succeeding days looked in upon the workers at Mascara, Mestaganem, and Algiers. He also attended a three days' conference for workers amongst the Kabyle speaking peoples held at Djemâ Sahridj.

Mr. David Baron and Dr. Dixon have returned home after wanderings in the East extending over three months, distributing New Testaments among Jews. They found doors wide open everywhere, and many descendants of Abraham heard the Gospel for the first time. In Salonica, where two-thirds of the population of 120,000 are Jews, as well as in Constantinople, Sofia, and Philippopolis, not to mention Egypt and the Holy Land, the travellers had some very interesting missionary experience.

Pasteur C. W. Cremer, of Brive, Corrèze, France, is making a short stay in England. His work away in the heart of the country has secured the sympathy of several English Christians, who are rendering much-needed help towards the erection of a place of worship in Brive. There are three earnest workers in the town, but no others within a radius of fifty miles, while in the south-easterly direction one may travel 200 miles without meeting another witness for the faith in its purity. Communications to M. Cremer should be addressed to the care of Rev. J. F. B. Tinling, 21, Crouch Hall-road, London, N.

WORKS BY REV. J. CULROSS, M.A., D.D.

JOHN WHOM JESUS LOVED.

A SKETCH OF THE CHARACTER, WRITINGS, THEOLOGY, AND INFLUENCE OF THE BELOVED DISCIPLE.

With Chromo-lithographic Views.

Tinted covers, 2s.; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.; Cloth bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

Rev. C. H. SPURGEON says:—"Preachers abound; but divines are few. The printing press pours forth a mass of matter; but a real book is a phenomenon. We count ourselves happy, for we have met with a divine in Dr. James Culross; and in his work, entitled 'John, Whom Jesus Loved,' we have found a book. Many writers are mere echoes of other men's voices—they imitate the good steward in bringing forth things old, but things new are quite out of their way. One of the excellences of Dr. Culross is the freshness of his thought. The dew is on his branch; he is no withered bough of the autumn frost. His mind allows young flowers to break through its soil after their own fashion, and to blossom in their own sweet way."

"It is altogether without reserve that we commend the work before us. It is not a bottle of milk for babes, but a portion of meat for men. A half-dozen readings will only make it more interesting to those who meditate upon what they read."—The Sword and Trowel.

"THY FIRST LOVE."

CHRIST'S MESSAGE TO THE CHURCH AT EPHESUS.

With Chromo-lithographic Frontispiece.

Tinted covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, bevelled boards, 2s. 6d.

"Full of choice thoughts, beautifully expressed, this work breathes a truly Christ-like spirit, which will render it dear to all spiritually-minded readers."
Word and Work.

"The glow, as from a golden sunset, which the imagination sheds over his style, gives it a great charm."
The British Messenger.

"This work is instructive, suggestive, full of spiritual force, and at the same time strong and manly. These latter adjectives we find it impossible to use concerning many of the devotional books produced in our day. Because we may honestly use them in this case, we heartily commend this book for the refreshment of our busy teachers."—Sunday School Chronicle.

"BEHOLD, I STAND AT THE DOOR, AND KNOCK."

CHRIST'S MESSAGE TO THE CHURCH AT LAODICEA.

With Chromo-lithographic Frontispiece.

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; Superior Edition, cloth, bevelled boards, 2s. 6d.

"This very handsome volume on a subject of perpetual importance will be welcomed, especially by those who are acquainted with Dr. Culross's other excellent works. Dr. Culross has here pre-eminently exhibited his usual excellence as a religious writer. Clear in style and eloquent in argument, striking in illustration. Never wordy or tedious, never flat or cold, but always exhibiting great Christian affection, with the obvious sense of the fidelity his subject so solemnly demands. We are sure this work will be useful wherever it is read."
Baptist Messenger.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

HUNGARY.—In the province of Boscar thirty families, counting in all 240 souls, have passed from the Church of Rome into the Protestant community.

VICTORIA.—The bishops of Melbourne and Ballarat have directed the clergy in their diocese to refuse to officiate at any marriages of persons divorced under the new Victorian Act, or to issue marriage licences to such parties.

SWITZERLAND.—Complying with the request of the Government of Fribourg, the Pope has taken under his direction the faculty of theology just established there, and given it into the hands of the Dominicans. There are to be eight professors, varied in nationality, but all subservient to the Holy See.

PALESTINE.—The long-projected railway from Jaffa to Jerusalem is at last being laid. A French company is constructing the line, with the permission and promised protection of the Sultan. Though only a single line will at present be laid, such structural arrangements will be made as will facilitate the laying of a second line in course of time.

RUSSIA.—A society, having for its object the propagation of love of poverty, has been formed at Moscow. Members pledge themselves to spread the doctrine that all the true joys of existence may be obtained without money, and that wealth is in no sense desirable. These ideas will inevitably give dignity to habits of indolence, and they may also afford excuse for systematic dishonesty.

SICILY.—The environs of Messina have for ten years past been evangelised by two former priests of the Church of Rome—M. Varnier and M. Scuderi, the second of whom was converted through the instrumentality of the former. They have been privileged to see blessing on their labours, although persecution has also attended them. Where at first they were treated as "accursed Protestants" they are now received as true messengers of the Lord. The sick and the poor are specially looked after by these earnest workers.

SABBATH REST is being much discussed on the Continent, mainly in consequence of the assertion of social well-being. The postal authorities in Germany have suppressed the second delivery of letters on the Lord's Day, and made arrangements whereby those employed in the service will enjoy more rest than hitherto. There has been a similar reduction of Sabbath labour in Denmark, and in Copenhagen the subject has excited the interest of the trading community. It is hoped that before long legislation will compel the closing of shops on the Lord's Day.

BRITTANY.—Pasteur Lecoat's work in this interesting province of France is being vigorously prosecuted, though in the teeth of much opposition from Rome. The evangelical workers are but units, while the priests and nuns are thousands strong. In order to prevent the circulation of the Breton Bible, the Romanists are selling the "Lives of the Saints" at a price reduced by two-thirds from what was asked before the Scriptures were given to the people a few months ago. Over a hundred children, whose parents are for the most part Romanists, attend the Mission schools.

BOHEMIA.—The movement which a few months ago excited considerable attention, in favour of commemorating the pre-Reformation reform of John Huss, has fallen to the ground. Some of the leading spirits seem to have been actuated mainly by political motives, and, as a consequence, the proposal to erect a statue to Huss gave rise to suspicion in circles where an agitation for freedom of worship would otherwise have been tolerated. The occasion has furnished the Jesuits with a ground on which to attack Protestant principles, apparently with the result that Romanism is more firmly established than ever in the country. The disabilities of the Protestants include compulsory payment in support of Romish schools. Being thus burdened, members of the Reformed Churches have been unable to keep their own schools, of which 150 have ceased to exist during the past twenty years. With substantial assistance from Germany, the Lutherans have succeeded in maintaining their schools. As regards educational results, the Protestant institutions stand much higher than others.

DONATIONS
RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT TO MONDAY, MAY 12, 1890.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

GERMANY.—In the Prussian Upper House last week the largeness of the proportion of Jews in the public schools was held to imply a danger to Christian national education. Count von Pfeil maintained that the Jews would never merge with the Christian population, and called upon the Government to separate the two classes of children. The proposal was opposed by the Government, on the ground that it would promote disruption, and that the next step would be the separation of Protestants and Romanists in the schools. On a division, however, it was adopted by a large majority. The incident illustrates the tone, temper, and prevalence of the anti-Semitic movement in Germany.

THE SABBATH FOR PARIS.

An earnest desire is expressed by the Committee of the

PARIS CITY MISSION

for the appointment of a specially qualified Missionary to instruct the people of that Sabbath-desecrating city in the obligations, duties, and privileges of the Lord's Day. Evangelistic work in Paris has created a spirit of inquiry about the right observance of the Day.—Particulars will be gladly supplied, and contributions received, by the Hon. Secretary for England,

THE CHRISTIAN COMMONWEALTH says:—

"The friends of Mr. Moody in this country (and they are legion) will heartily welcome this volume. Indeed, the whole English nation ought to feel an interest in a work such as Mr. Moody is doing. This book gives us an inside view of Mr. Moody's life and character, which cannot be found anywhere else."

PRESS NOTICES.

"This is one of the most readable biographies we have had the pleasure of perusing. . . . Christian workers will find it a most helpful, stimulating, and instructive book. We have great pleasure in recommending this interesting work."
Irish Congregational Magazine.

"In its subject and in execution this biography is of no common order. We have found the study of so sweet and noble a life, a joy to our heart and a stimulus to our zeal. . . . The sketch is a vade mecum for any who seek to be saviours of the sin-sick, and helpers of the poor."—Cambridge Congregational Magazine.

"This book sets forth the labours of one of the truest and noblest of women. It ought to be in every Sunday-school library and every family."—Christian Commonwealth.

PEARLS OF WISDOM,

FROM THE PARABLES.

By A. L. O. E.

With 24 Full-page Original Illustrations.

Cloth boards, 3s. 6d.;
Bevelled boards, gilt edges, 4s.

"The precious pearls of divine wisdom are here set forth to the readers in unique setting of Oriental treatment, at once pertinent and instructive. We commend the volume to the special attention of ministers, lay preachers, and Sabbath-school teachers as a most helpful auxiliary to the elucidation of the Saviour's parabolic teaching."—Primitive Methodist.

"Never were the parables seen to better advantage, never did they seem so full of meaning, purpose, point, and never were their details made so winsome and stimulating. Religious teachers of all denominations will find the volume exceedingly suggestive and stimulating."
Oldham Chronicle.

A Special Cheap Edition of "PEARLS OF WISDOM" is also published, price 6d., in Tinted covers; 1s. in cloth; 1s. 6d. cloth boards, gilt edges.

PERCIVAL'S PICTURE GALLERY

By A. L. O. E.

With Coloured Frontispiece.

Elegantly bound in cloth boards, with gilt edges, 2s.

FOOTSTEPS OF TRUTH says:—

"Thank you, A.L.O.E., for introducing us to 'Percival's Picture Gallery.' We have walked through with great pleasure, admiring the chaste productions of a rich fancy, and the skilful interweaving of the moral with the picturesque. We recommend our readers to follow our example, which they can do for two shillings."

THE CHRISTIAN COMMONWEALTH says:—

"This book is a gem. The invalid artist, sketching his pictures and telling his wonderful stories, is a tender and beautiful portraiture. The get-up of the volume is a credit to the publishers. It will make a fine Gift-book, fit for any recipient."

(THIRTY-THIRD SERIES.)

CASE of MRS. GENNELS, REPORTED HOPELESS—LETTER from MR. C. SHAW, of GANTON, YORKS.

This friend (Mr. Shaw), who has recommended my treatment to many, writing me Dec. 15 last, says:—"I must inform you of a case that has come under my notice—the case of a young woman who had come home to her parents to die, for the doctors could do no more for her. She had lost a sister with Consumption several years before. I was passing the house one very fine day when she had been brought out to sit in the open air. Her attendant remarked to me: "She will not be long here." I persuaded her friends to adopt your medicine and treatment. They did so, and in a few months it made a complete cure. She returned home, and has had two children since. Her husband, a few days ago, told me that she was never better in her life. Her name is Mrs. Mary Gennels. You can make any use you please of this testimony."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

INDIA'S OPIUM REVENUE: What it is, and how it should be dealt with. By JOSEPH G. ALEXANDER, LL.B., Secretary of the Society. Price Twopence. 32pp.

This pamphlet has been prepared in response to requests received from many friends of the cause for a concise statement of the history and present position of our country's connection with the Opium Trade. May be had in quantities for distribution at a reduced price.

SUBSTITUTES FOR THE OPIUM REVENUE. By the same Author. Price Threepence. Intended to show that the immediate sacrifice of the Bengal Opium Revenue, except so much of it as is derived from the medicinal use of Opium, is feasible, as a matter of practical statesmanship, without any disregard of the legitimate claims of the people of India.

CONTRIBUTIONS will be thankfully received by the Treasurer at Messrs. Dimsdale, Fowler & Co.'s Bank, 50, Cornhill, E.C.; or by the Secretary, at the office, 6, Broadway Chambers, Westminster, S.W.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of the Right Rev. Dr. Westcott, Lord Bishop of Durham.

We hope there will be a large muster of the friends of home and foreign missions at the farewell meeting to Dr. Pierson and Major Whittle, at the Mildmay Conference Hall, this (Friday) evening, as announced in our forthcoming meetings.

Now that the "Day in the Country" season will very soon be upon us, with its urgent appeals for funds, we strongly commend a method of self-help adopted with great success by Mr. James Taylor, of the Ben Jonson Mission, Stepney-green, E. For some time prior to the "outing" he encourages children and parents to bring to the Mission a few pence weekly to add to the fund. Such trifles, which would otherwise often be ill spent, add materially to the sum collected; and the universal adoption of such a plan would greatly lessen the deficit which almost invariably attends such excursions, and cultivate a more lasting interest in the general work of the mission. At the same time we hope our readers will enable us to respond liberally to the multitude of appeals which annually reach us on behalf of these treats for the little ones.

The phrase in the address from the Chair at the late meetings of the Congregational Union, that "Independency knows nothing of a Christ that is to be," has been animadverted upon in many quarters. It is interpreted by a leader in The Nonconformist and Independent, as referring to men who "not finding Christ present enough in the Spirit, indulge in fondly feeble dreams of seeing Him in the flesh." We have never heard of any writer worth consideration who expected to see the Lord otherwise than in his glorified form; and among these, of the last generation, to go no further back, must be placed Edward Bickersteth, William Pennefather, and Horatius Bonar. He would be a most unreliable man who should speak of such men as "not finding Christ present enough in the Spirit." It may be unhesitatingly affirmed of many saintly men in the past, as of many successful workers in the kingdom of Christ now, that they are firm believers in the Second Advent, and the indulgence of "half-reproachful irony" with respect to them is a very unwise proceeding.

One of the most gratifying and hopeful things in connection with the meetings of the Congregational Union was the discussion on the proposal to appoint a day of united prayer for revived spiritual life. Most pathetic and tender were the utterances of Rev. G. S. Barrett and Rev. Charles New; while there appeared to be a unanimous desire that all hindrances to spiritual efficiency should be removed. The first Sunday in October was set apart as "a day of special supplication for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit on the churches and colleges."

The more we ponder over the matter, the more we are convinced of the unrighteousness of the Government proposals to reward the retiring publican. Licences to deal in intoxicants have been granted in the past with a most criminal recklessness, and in the face of continued protests from a large section of the best people in the community. If the trade were one that furthered the well-being of society, no one would wish to interfere with it; but it seems to us to be nothing short of infamous that when the public interest demands a decrease of this unholy traffic it can only be done by paying a king's ransom for the process.

The scheme of the Government is still further vitiated by its utter inadequacy. If by one supreme act of sacrifice the nation could wholly sweep away the traffic, and get rid for ever of its all-pervading curse, as was done in the case of the slave trade, Christian patriotism might prompt us to sanction the transaction. But these tinkering proposals can have no other effect than that of rooting the liquor traffic and its attendant evils still more firmly amongst us. It will bring about no appreciable diminution in the number of drink-shops, and will indefinitely postpone all action of a prohibitory nature, however much that might be desired by local communities. Once give the publican a legal vested interest in his privileged monopoly, and he can snap his fingers at temperance reformers who are disinclined to buy him out at a fabulous price.

One thing is certain—that the scheme is abhorrent to the great bulk of the Christians throughout the country. The loudest and longest cheers at Exeter Hall and elsewhere during the May meetings have greeted those who have raised their voices against it. We again entreat the Government to pause before they stamp their action with the indelible shame of making a compact with the authors of so much of our social and personal misery and sin. Better a thousand times that they should alienate the publican than lose the confidence of the nation at large.

There is a growing impression that the preaching of sermons, though a very classic form of Christian instruction, is by no means of essential importance. We hear of ministers in some directions revising their church arrangements so as to dispense with one of the customary two sermons on Sundays. The object is to facilitate Bible-class work—a very desirable object indeed. In some parts of Wales the Sabbath Bible-class for grown-up people has long been a popular institution, and, what is more important, a valuable source of religious instruction. Eloquent discourses concerning Scripture are all very well, but reverent study, with many minds engaged in giving forth thoughts, is calculated to prove much more profitable to the public at large—at once instructive to the immature, and edifying to those who are already acquainted with the Word of God.

Closely allied with this subject is that of expository preaching, which we are glad to see is receiving increasing attention in America. In the current issue of The Old and New Testament Student (Hartford, Conn.) a symposium on the subject has been begun. The editor well says:—

> Why do not the ministers of our times see that the people are starving for the Word, the real contents of Scripture? Why do they not see the egotism, the immeasurable self-conceit, which forms the basis of the present practice—a practice which deliberately substitutes the weak and ineffective fancies of man for the strong and overpowering words and thoughts of the sacred volume?

Expository preaching is that form of discourse by which truths or lessons are drawn from a chapter or paragraph rather than from a clause or verse. Rev. John McNeill's success lies largely in the power with which by this method he preaches the Gospel. Dr. Boardman, of Philadelphia, is said to have gone through all the books of the Old and New Testaments in this way.

It is well that those who cannot endure the supernatural should face the logical results of their method. A writer in the May issue of The Student examines with some fulness the Gospel story of Christ's infancy. Of rationalistic theories concerning the origin of this wonderful literature, he says:—

> Strauss sees the origin in the mythology of Zeus and his loves. Keim, with finer feeling, regards this account as a materialisation of what is true ideally—Christ was only the son of Joseph and Mary, but in Him the creative and energising power of God and the Spirit were present in a wonderful degree. To accept these conclusions requires fully as much devotion to a theory, as to accept the literal account. Eliminate all the miraculous, leave Christ the simple son of Joseph and Mary, and Christ, the historic Christ, the greatest miracle of all, remains.

Not as Son of David does Christ stand out among men, but as Son of God; not as the Prophet of Nazareth, but as the Word made flesh. Only by accepting the miracle which these words involve, can we have an adequate explanation of the life of Jesus.

Now that the authorities in Brighton have taken steps to suppress the hawking of newspapers on Sunday mornings, we hope they will proceed a little further in the direction of bringing about a better observance of the Sabbath, and adopt measures to stop the playing of secular music by the bands upon the piers on the Lord's Day. Unfortunately in these matters there is a tendency to strain at a gnat and swallow a camel; and it certainly would be more satisfactory if those who have the power were to deal with large abuses and influential offenders first, and take up the smaller ones afterwards.

It is significant that the German Emperor, in opening the Reichstag, makes reference, among other matters, to "the growing insubordination of the young," and to the necessity of strengthening paternal authority. Those who have spoken of "disobedience to parents" as among the "grievous things" predicted of "the last days," have been termed alarmists, but the danger must be becoming notorious when the monarch of a great people has reasons for emphasising it in addressing the national representatives

The readers of the Lives of Mary Lyon and Fidelia Fiske will be interested in learning that Mrs. Hiram Mead, widow of the pastor of the village of South Hadley, Mass., where Mount Holyoke Seminary stands, has been appointed to the vacant place of Principal to that Institution. Mrs. Mead, who formerly filled positions in Oberlin College and Abbot Academy, Andover, is a lady of womanly tenderness, descended from a Puritan ancestry, and has it as her aim to make Mount Holyoke what Mary Lyon designed—a college of high intellectual culture, but where all attainments will be consecrated to Christ. Mount Holyoke has been in the front of Christian colleges for young ladies, and our readers will rejoice that its world-wide influence and magnificent history are likely to be continued.

A financial journal states that the manufacture of opium by the Chinese themselves has been extending so greatly that every year the region which makes use of opium from India is contracting. The silk districts have within seventeen years changed the use of foreign opium for that of the native produce to the extent of one fourth of the whole amount used by them seventeen years ago. Their expenditure on foreign opium has been reduced from 13,000,000 taels to 10,000,000 taels. Great Britain, which has refused to deal with the opium traffic, may soon have to face a deficit in her Indian revenue, and find some other source of income. But what of the moral guilt of having helped to inoculate the Chinese with this terrible and fatal habit?

MAJOR WHITTLE AT MILDMAY.

AN eight-days' mission has been concluded by Major Whittle in the Conference Hall, Mildmay-park. The attendances were not as large as had been expected, owing probably to the mission having been fixed for the time of the May meetings. On the two Sundays, however, there were very large audiences, and on the second, in answer to special prayer here and elsewhere, there was a remarkable manifestation of the presence of God. Between 200 and 300 rose, desiring personal blessing.

On Sundays a workers' meeting was held at 9.30 a.m., and evangelistic meetings at 3.30 and 7; the evening one being followed by inquiry meetings. During the other days of the week (except Saturday) Major Whittle gave Bible-readings on the sacrifices, from the first chapters of Leviticus, which were specially helpful. They set forth emphatically the precious blood of Christ as the ground of our access to God. Many testimonies to the value of these readings have been since received. The addresses in the evening were most powerful and searching.

Miss Whittle's meetings with young ladies and girls during all the past year have been a great addition to her father's work, and illustrate the excellence and importance of the common-sense and practical methods used at Mr. Moody's Institution at Northfield, where Miss Whittle was trained.

We cannot speak too highly of the interest shown by Colonel Morton, Mr. Mathieson's successor. He was present every evening, dealing with inquirers, and manifesting a thoroughly evangelistic spirit.

The services have been much helped by the singing of the North London Choir, and on Monday by the Male Choir from Stratford, and also by an occasional solo from Miss Whittle. Major Whittle will be followed by the earnest prayers of many friends at Mildmay.

THE THREE GARDENS:

EDEN, GETHSEMANE, AND THE GARDEN "WHERE THEY LAID HIM."

BY REV. JAMES CULROSS, D.D.

THE GARDEN OF EDEN.

I.—Introductory.

THREE gardens, and only three, are specially mentioned in the Bible—the Garden of Eden, the Garden of Gethsemane, and the Garden "where they laid Him." With these gardens the greatest events in man's history, and in God's revelation of Himself, stand associated; and the story of each throws light upon some of the profoundest problems with which the human mind can deal.

The story of the first garden, told in the beginning of Genesis, as if to children, has echoes of itself in the traditions of all nations. A fierce battle rages round its credibility. Not to speak of the scoffing and merciless ridicule, or quiet contempt, with which it has been assailed by some professed unbelievers in Revelation, it is regarded by not a few who monopolise the title of "critical" and "scientific" Christians as historically untenable—a poem, in which both actors and events are purely imaginary, like "Marmion," or "The Lady of the Lake"—an allegory, like the "Pilgrim's Progress"—a "significant tale," or one of those innumerable myths (with perhaps a spiritual kernel) which belong to the infancy of races. If only the Bible could be purged of a few such awkward stories—in particular, that story of the Fall—it would seem to them a more credible book and worthier of acceptation. "The whole thing," it is said, "is too childish for belief. Is it conceivable that the destiny of the human race should turn on an incident so trivial as the tasting of an apple?"

But is the incident so trivial?* It has not seemed so to the greatest thinkers of the past, who did not use the measure of mere bigness as their standard. It is in keeping too with all that comes after it in the Bible. In particular, in the central chapter of that Epistle which Coleridge has described as "the most profound work in existence," the Apostle Paul endorses the "incident," which he names the Fall, exhibits its vast and far-reaching consequences for the race, and over against it sets forth the glorious grace of God in Christ Jesus.†

Some, like Bishop Newton—who would not knowingly trifle with God's Word, consider that the account is written (so to speak) in hieroglyph—the serpent being the emblem of Satan, the eating of the fruit being the indulgence of forbidden desires, and so on throughout; and that it sets forth in parabolic fashion the Divine creation of man, primeval innocence, the happiness of that first estate, the incoming of Satanic temptation, the Fall with its consequences for the race, and the promise of a Deliverer. Taken thus, we should have to interpret the Genesis narrative as we interpret one of our Lord's parables, using after-revelations as our guide.

Without discussing such a view, or attempting to summarise the hypotheses which turn the Book of Genesis into a mere patchwork of legendary matter, brought into its present shape by some unknown, and not very skilful compiler, it is plain that the narrative, figurative and anthropomorphic as it is in its expression, claims to be history, and not fable. And without it, as Herder points out, the story of mankind "would be a book without a title, wanting the first leaves and Introduction." If we deal with it according to its manifest intention and idea, it will bear the severest scrutiny, and will yield the most valuable results.

Problems of the most perplexing nature force themselves upon all thinking men in connection with human life, and refuse to be put aside. Every new generation of men, unsatisfied with the solutions of the past, takes them in hand afresh. Who and what am I? Whence came I? Why am I here, and for what end? What means this disorder in my inmost being—this imperative, unsilenceable Ought—this sense of guilt—this inward protest against myself—this strange fear that invades my sunniest hours? The scientific man, dealing with facts verifiable by the senses, explains my physical mechanism, the chemistry of my blood, the structure of my brain, the function of every nerve; but he leaves my greatest questions unanswered. Every line along which he conducts me leads to the frontier of a region of mystery which he cannot lay open to me. The Bible takes my hand just where science gives me up; and if it does not answer all my questions, it does at least start me on an illumined path, and tells me all that is needed for life and godliness.

I do not mean to attempt an exposition of the Genesis record in detail, but would simply indicate in outline the main things set forth; taking up the story just as the book tells it, neither "spiritualising" on the one hand, nor "rationalising" on the other.

Life is not pocket money, to be spent as whim or taste directs; but capital entrusted to our care, that we may trade with it for God and ourselves in this mart of time.—J. M. Gibbon.

FARNINGHAM AND SWANLEY BOYS.—Nearly 300 guests met at the Hotel Metropole on Saturday last to celebrate the 26th anniversary of the Homes for Little Boys. F. W. Buxton, Esq., presided, and was supported was Sir Wm. Hart-Dyke, M.P., and many other earnest supporters of the institutions. There are few agencies more full of promise and realising better results than these Homes, which have for their object the training of poor and orphan lads, and fitting them for industrial and commercial pursuits. All interested in such work can satisfy themselves of this by a perusal of the report, or, better still, by a visit to the Homes at Farningham and Swanley. But, alas, the possibilities are limited for want of certainties in the form of pecuniary support. Indeed, some of the cottage-homes have their doors closed from this cause, the balance-sheet showing a deficit of £3000. We earnestly hope friends will come to the rescue of these precious young lives, and that speedily. There are at present 500 boys in the Homes. The secretary is Mr. Benj. Clarke, 3, Bank-buildings, Ludgate Circus, E.C.

* "The eye that sees a world in a grain of sand, or heaven in a wild flower, will see a hell in the slightest act that means No to God. Parables of this are met on every hand. A mother says to her child, playing on the floor beneath her smiles and loving glances, Bring me the pin that lies over there. The child pays no attention. By and by the mother repeats her word, and the child looks up into the mother's face and answers No. What do men say of such a thing? Do they smile and call it a trifle, because it is only the lifting or not lifting of a pin that is in question? Do they not rather say, It is the child-will revolting against the mother-will? And, viewed thus, does not the act of refusal swell out into dimensions all but immeasurable? So with man's lightest No to God. Taken in its hidden, unconfessed, far-back intent, it involves not the mere unthroning of God, but Deicide itself."—JOHN WHOM JESUS LOVED.

Pondoland's Darkness.

Is there a tribe of two hundred thousand human beings in the whole world which has been surrounded by the English for more than forty-five years, and which to-day has only two men trying to save the nation from its moral pollution and its members from godless lives and Christless graves? "No, no!" you say. Alas! the true answer is, "Yes, indeed, there is."

Dear Christian at ease, will you try to realise this fact? You say you cannot take in the statistics of China: it is so far off, and you are only connected with it by "tea." You are connected to this country by the fact that your English brothers and sisters have surrounded it for years, and have taught it many evil habits. At a guess, I should say there are fifty white men in Pondoland. Two are missionaries. The rest are traders or mineral hunters, many of whom are ruining the nation through a flood of drink. The Romanizing Ritualists are awaking to the need, and propose sending a medical man in.

Many traders have had to flee for their lives from the country, as there is no British protection. I myself witnessed the interview of a drunken chief with a trader, who narrowly escaped without a sound thrashing. The traders bring most of their trouble on themselves through the drink they sell to the natives.

The witch-doctors reign supreme in the land. Hundreds of natives are cruelly tortured to death every year for being supposed to cause illness to man or beast by sorcery. I have passed by many a hut mourning the loss of father or mother, brother or sister, for supposed witchcraft. Imagine a witch-doctor coming to your own house; going through some absurd antics; coming to the conclusion that your uncle's attack of "influenza" was due to your mother's or your sister's sorcery; imagine her stripped, and placed on red-hot stones; hot stones piled over her till the pain has defeated itself in death. Imagine the gloom over the family; the fear lest you should be treated in the same way, just at the caprice of a witch-doctor.

"Do not talk of such horrible things," you say. Yet this happens daily in Pondoland, and is happening just now, as you are so comfortably secure and happy. Lord Jesus, give us sympathy for these poor wretched witch-doctor-ridden people! You say you never thought before that a tribe surrounded by "Christians" for so many years was in such a state of corruption. You have no excuse now. Are you sufficiently sorry to come and help to overthrow this stronghold of Satan? Are you sorry enough, dear mother, to give your best boy for the woes of Pondoland? Are you sorry enough to open your purse and give something?

Out of dozens of sad tales told me by missionaries and traders, let me repeat one or two:—

(a) A chief's brother died; the witch-doctor traced the cause to be the chief's wife. She was condemned to be put to death by lying on red-hot stones, and by having hot stones piled over her till dead.

(b) The calves in a certain kraal had been dying for three years. During this period nine people had been tortured to death for bewitching them, yet no cure followed. So the "doctor" concocted a theory, and said a large baboon was seen going round the kraal with a bottle of medicine pouring it down the throats of the calves. This hypothetical baboon was supposed to belong to the owner of the kraal, so he was tortured to death a few days ago. Probably many more lives will yet be sacrificed for these cattle.

(c) A chief suffered from slight ophthalmia. The "doctor" said his wife was bewitching him. So the wretched woman was butchered to death with clubs.

But enough of these sickening details. The official returns give 78 deaths in eight months in Western Pondoland alone, and this is a small part of the total, as the natives keep things so dark. Nothing but the real conversion of the Pondos will do, for the people, strange to say, do not want to do away with the witch-doctors, for it is their best way of gain from the luckless victims, as they take their property. The people are very susceptible to the Gospel. The greatest revival I ever saw was in Pondoland at one of the Wesleyan stations in my late tour. Medical men are badly needed. Who will come?

GOOD NEWS FROM CANADA.

My generous and devoted yoke-fellow, Mr. Arthur Austin, and our schoolmaster, Mr. Glass, have lately returned from Canada, after escorting out our seventh party (of 100 boys) and making a flying tour to inspect "old boys" assembled to meet them at various centres.

After a rather tedious voyage of thirteen days against head winds, and wearying railway journeys of forty-two hours, the boys reached Toronto, and in a few days were nearly all engaged by those eager employers who were fortunate enough, out of a host of applicants, to secure a lad. We have been gratified to learn that they impressed our representative there (Mr. Brace) as "the finest and most likely lot of lads yet sent out." We quite believe they will keep up the credit of their old Home, and we cease not to make mention of them in our prayers that they may all be the children of God through faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, and may adorn the Gospel of God our Saviour in all things.

The results of this phase of our work amongst waifs and strays quite exceed all our expectations. We were prepared to hear glowing accounts of the material prosperity of our "old boys" for we have received substantial tokens of their success and gratitude, by their clubbing together some of their savings and sending us a draft the last two years (1889, £108 15s.; 1890, £148 8s. 10d.) as a "surprise gift" to help others out; but we are still more encouraged by the report our friends have brought of their moral and spiritual welfare. It is a fact that many of the boys they have seen come from the lowest depths of slum-life—some from scenes of habitual crime, and are now, not only honest and comfortable, but "gentlemanly in appearance and manners," and many of them bright, earnest Christians.

They met one who came to us a bullet-headed "larrikin" from the New Cut, of pugilistic proclivities, about five years ago, now about to buy a fruit farm near Niagara, an earnest Christian worker, Sunday-school teacher and local preacher, who testifies for the Lord with much acceptance. Another was discarded from a training-ship because of an impediment in his speech, and sought shelter here. He was emigrated only last year, but is now earning 110 dollars a year, besides his board, &c., and has already triumphantly paid us back the £10 laid out on his emigration. He gets the name and address of one of his old comrades who is still unconverted, from Mr. Brace, and writes to him and prays for him till he gets evidence of his salvation, and can already count three who profess to have been brought thus to Christ. Another was an orphan drudge of a fish-hawker who waited on me here, and endeared himself to everyone while in the Home. "Spratty" is now "a tall, handsome lad, who looked every inch a gentleman, as he rode in ten miles to meet us." He is earning 120 dollars, with board, &c., for eight months this season.

We are still further fortified in the satisfaction we feel as to our "old boys" by the testimonies continually coming to hand from the employers with whom they live. About a boy who was the terror of respectable parents in a village here, his master says, "The lad has given good satisfaction. My family all like him. He is a trustworthy lad; he likes to attend the Sunday-school; he has no bad habits." Another writes, "We like Joseph very well. He is not very strong, but is willing. He took the first prize at Sunday-school for attendance, and reciting the greatest number of verses in class." Another reports, "I will keep him another year at 125 dollars. At our Sunday-school annual meeting last week, they appointed him treasurer of the Sunday-school, and have taken him from the Bible-class and made him one of the teachers. I think he will do well. The boys seem pleased with him. One little fellow says he is the best teacher he ever had."

Beyond all this, a gentleman connected with the Commission recently appointed by the Dominion Government at the instance of the "Knights of Labour," and other labour organisations (whose selfish aim is to keep up wages by keeping out labour as much as possible), has written to Mr. Brace a letter before me, which I cannot print verbatim, as it is quite too favourably worded, but which distinctly emphasises this point, that our efforts not only passed through the ordeal without adverse criticism, but that several gentlemen bore witness that our boys were admirably behaved and a real acquisition to the colony.

With many trials and anxieties, we thank God and take courage. Truly the wise king wrote advisedly of such refreshing tidings, "As cold water is to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country" (Prov. xxv. 25). We are letting down the net for another draught in the deep, dark eddies of London slum-life, and earnestly beckon to our brethren whose ships sail on brighter, smoother waters, to come to our help, by sympathy, prayer, and support.

SUSSEX VILLAGES.

Mr. E. Shrubshall, evangelist, Shortgate, Sussex, writes to us:—

In looking over my diary of village work for the past year, I see I have been enabled to hold 489 meetings in different parts of this county, consisting of Gospel meetings in and out of doors, Bible-readings, prayer and temperance meetings. New doors have opened, and God has put his seal on the testimony of Christ. Some have confessed Christ as their Saviour and Lord.

A woman was on her way to an evening's revelry when she heard a voice distinctly saying, "Having no hope, and without God in the world." It so arrested her attention that she stopped, thinking some one had spoken to her over the hedge. Not seeing anyone she became alarmed, and resolved to turn back. This she did, but on reflection, she turned again determined to go. Once more the words sounded in her soul, and she finally went home. She did not know it was the word of God she had heard until directed by a friend to Eph. ii. 12. She was subsequently led to Christ.

We have six out stations dependent on supplies and help, also Sunday-schools and temperance work. As the summer is before us we are anxious to visit distant places giving tracts, calling at the cottages in the day, and preaching the Gospel in the open-air in the evening. In this itinerant work we are often straitened for resources, and every penny of help given will be honestly employed in this humble yet important service. I have been engaged in village work for over twenty years, and being now over three score, cannot walk so well as I used to do.

PARIS Y.M.C.A.—The members of this Association were recently favoured by some addresses from Major Whittle, specially suited to meet the needs of young men in Paris. Meetings were held at the rooms, No. 160, Rue Montmartre, exclusively for young men, who assembled in goodly numbers. At the Sunday afternoon meeting friends were present who hailed from all parts of the globe. America was well represented; three Australian gentlemen and two from Persia were also in the company. Major Whittle also spoke at an open meeting at the Wesleyan Chapel, Rue Roquepine. The services have been much appreciated by the members and friends of the Association.

Drink Traffic in Africa.

Now that the attention of all the nations of Europe is turned towards long-neglected Africa, it seemed to me but right to communicate to you what I know regarding the liquor traffic and its workings in this country.

It is evident that commerce and national ambition are uniting for the purpose of opening up Africa; but we greatly fear lest rum and gin should be used in the accomplishment of this great work.

The completion of the railway to Stanley Pool will afford every facility for the increased transportation of trade liquor to the Upper Congo, and its numerous and far-reaching affluents; and the question which presses upon us with all-absorbing interest is: Drink on the Upper Congo; to be or not to be?

When I reached Mpalabala, in 1884, it was argued by most missionaries that, owing to the high rate paid for the transport of goods through the Cataract region—i.e., from Matadi to Stanley Pool—it would be absolutely impossible for traders and others equally interested in financial gain to make the sale of gin and rum on the Upper Congo a paying business, that the price of transport was sufficient of itself to prevent the sale of trade liquors in the interior.

Since the above was stated, the difficulty of obtaining porters in the Cataract region has become very great, owing to the increase of trade in the interior of the Continent, and consequently the price of transport has risen at least one-third.

Yet, notwithstanding this, some of the commercial houses trading on the Upper Congo and its tributaries have recently had quantities of gin and rum carried up to Stanley Pool. The drink I speak of was transported in two-gallon demi-johns; in all, if remember correctly, they numbered sixty-eight. These I saw myself, but did not know that they had been sent up country in such large numbers previously. These sixty-eight demi-johns were despatched to the Pool in July last. That this iniquitous traffic is progressing on the Congo is evident from the fact that every porter carrying on the north side of the river between Vivi and Isangala receives as part of his pay six or eight bottles of gin for every journey.

This question of the payment of porters in liquor has so often been discussed by missionaries and others that the arguments in its favour are almost exhausted. Yet it is maintained by some that payment or part payment in gin or some other liquor is absolutely needful, in order to secure carriers, and work efficiently the State transport. Now I can affirm, from personal knowledge of the case, that such statements are without foundation, and proceed frome mere prejudice; what is more to the purpos , I can prove them to be false.

Before leaving the Lower Congo last summer for the interior, I paid a visit to Vivi, to see how Bishop Taylor's self-supporting missionaries were faring, and while there I made inquiry regarding the transport of their steamer. From Mr. Claflin, who had been in charge of the transport on the north side, I gained the following information:—"From the time," said he, "we sent off our first load, and I have sent off hundreds since, I neither gave nor was asked to give a single bottle of either rum or gin; all payments were made in cloth." The testimony of Mr. Claflin is confirmed by the missionaries in charge of the transport departments of the Baptist Missionary Society and the American Baptist Missionary Union, after years of experience.

Returning from Vivi I called at Matadi, where I had an interview with Major Parminter, in which we discussed the necessity and advisability of having a transport agency of some kind for the forwarding of goods through to Stanley Pool for missionary and other societies. The question of rationing the men in gin came up, and when he found that we would not listen at all to the carriers receiving even part of their payment in drink, he unhesitatingly said that transport could not be worked without it. Finding out, however, a day or two later how the missions rationed their carriers, he calculated the difference of expense, and discovered to his surprise that the actual cost of rationing men in rice and salt would only amount to a penny per head more than if they were paid in rum.

The missions have rationed their carriers in salt and rice for some years with satisfaction to all parties; the men themselves appreciate and enjoy their rations in this form. If this is the case, as we have proved it to be, why then pay the poor fellows in rum and gin, which only serve to undermine their strength and dull their energies? "A penny a head or thereabouts is saved," the man of business will reply. But is it actually saved? we respond. The whole matter practically amounts to this. One man wilfully destroys the present happiness of his fellow man, and ruins him eternally, for the sake of gaining a penny! This, alas! is now being done on a large scale on the Congo. Beyond any dispute, ungodly gain and cruel cheapness account for all payments made in drink on the lower Congo.

Some three or four years ago the State had occasion to "make palaver," as we say in Africa, with the inhabitants of a village near Vivi. The chief and several of the principal men were summoned to appear before Major Parminter, then in charge of Vivi. That official did his utmost to settle the palaver amicably, but his efforts being unsuccessful, he threatened to burn down their village the next day. With utter indifference they replied, "We do not care, only give us 'Malavu mamputu'"—foreign drink.

If the use of strong drink among the people on the north bank has brought them to such a low and abject condition that they thus show themselves careless of their own interests and those of their families, surely we have every reason to lament its introduction on the south bank.

On reaching Lukunga, in July last, I was distressed, and surprised to find that the baleful and pernicious liquor was being used at the State station. When Mr. Ingham left Lunkunga, in 1886, he had not given one bottle of gin or rum to either carriers or workmen, and I can say, without fear of contradiction, that no man worked the transport more successfully than he. Now, alas! it is distributed daily at sundown to all the labourers on the station. At Matadi, also, the carriers receive it as part of their rations.

The horrors created by the Arab slave trade alone can equal the dire destitution and misery which follow in the train of the liquor traffic in tropical Africa.

The people of the Lower Congo and the coast have been in contact with civilisation for some 400 years, whereas it has not yet reached the natives of the interior. Nevertheless, I emphatically assert that the latter are superior physically and mentally to those who have tasted the advantages of European civilisation.

Regarding the liquor traffic as a whole, I repeat my earnest conviction, that the importation of rum and gin to the Congo, is detrimental to the highest interests of the Congo Free State, and will, in time, complete the ruin of the contented though ignorant people. And if this traffic continues without prohibition, a few short but sad decades will suffice to settle finally the truth of this lamentably sorrowful statement.

The contemplation of such a terrible future for Africa's sons and daughters leads us to exclaim with fulness of heart, "O Lord, how long!" May God Himself move in the hearts of all his people, and incite them to action in this matter, that they may plead the cause and defend the rights of a despised and down-trodden race.

THE McALL MISSION IN FRANCE.

The eighteenth annual report of the McAll Mission in France is intensely interesting. Religious meetings for adults were held in various centres to the number of 16,054, the attendance reaching 948,530; while 5652 meetings were held for children and young people, with an attendance of 236,510. Visits to the homes of the people numbered 20,670; and 1,099,110 Bibles, Testaments, portions, tracts, and illustrated papers were circulated.

That the need of the people is great may be inferred from the following extract from the report:—"Multitudes in this land neglect and cast away that of which they have the most erroneous ideas, or none at all. It has never been brought near, never explained—they have never had the Bible in their hands. Take an example. One evening, some months ago, our missionary exhibited in one of our Paris halls the photographic slides of the Life of Christ after Hoffmann's paintings. At the close a lady, evidently of education, came up, expressing her great interest in the meeting, and especially in the explanations given of the pictures. Here are her words literally translated: 'I used to hear something of the history of that Man in former days. I should like to have a complete copy of his life; I think that it would be very interesting and useful. Where can I obtain the entire work?' It is needless to add that the Book of which she was so strangely ignorant was put into the lady's hands. What a vast work remains to be attempted here, in seeking out those seeming rejectors of religion who, literally, 'know not what they do,' and bringing to them the surprising discovery which awaits them in the Gospel!"

are given in the report. Here is one from St. Etienne:—"G——, a man of nigh eighty years, passing one night before one of our salles, heard the singing, and was told that the entry was free. He accepted the invitation, and was quite surprised at what he heard. The Spirit of the Lord seized him there and then; he came every night, and finally stood up in our prayer-meeting, leaning on a chair for support, to tell what the Lord had done for his soul. More than once he gave similar testimony, exhorting others to believe what he had now received into his heart. 'My dear friends,' he used to say, 'I do not know how to read or write, but I have two ears, and I listened to the Gospel of the blessed God, and I have it now in my heart, and nothing shall take it out of it. I am the Lord's and He is mine. I am old, and I rejoice to feel that I shall soon see Him. Come to these meetings, and you will receive the same blessing that I have received.' His favourite hymn was 'Je suis à Toi,' &c. He is now entirely bedridden, and we visit him frequently; his faith is just as strong as at the beginning."

From Cette a cheering fact is related as follows:—"I believe that an unfortunate drunkard has been truly converted. He formed part of the numerous class of Couchés-vêtus (i.e., those who are registered by the police as habitually sleeping in their clothes under the bridges and on the quays), of whom there are nearly 1200 in the town. He lived by thieving and begging, and drinking from the casks unladen from the ships. To-day, decently clad, he works and lives an honest life. He says himself that 'he feels a younger man.'"

Dr. McAll writes in the introduction:—"Though new openings for Gospel work in all parts of France have throughout the year been pressed upon our attention in unexampled number, our financial position has forbidden us to respond to any of them. The single exception has been that the special gift of an American lady has enabled us to place an evangelist at St. Quentin, to work with the pastors in three stations in the three working-class districts of that town, in one of which audiences of three and four hundred people now come together, and a great movement is being effected for the religious instruction of the young."

and Canada, the secretary had most encouraging reports of propagandism, and from various countries on the Continent of Europe, appeals for co-operation and help have come to hand, and been responded to as liberally as the staff and funds of the Society permitted. Nor do the British Colonies stand aloof. Extensive organisation for Public Purity has been going on in New Zealand, and in Australia, while the Bishop of Cape Town has circulated a large amount of White Cross literature.

The Bishop of Wakfield (who presided) and Sir John Kennaway, M.P., spoke on the general principle of social purity; and then came the outspoken, forcible denunciation of everything unchaste from Rev. E. Hoskyns, a speech which held the entire audience without a wavering thought, and constantly brought forth peels of applause. At the outset, disregarding innuendo and indefiniteness, he took his stand on the need of facing facts, and delving into impurity with the view of its extermination. Public opinion, he argued, needed uplifting, and then, taking public opinion as expressed in its literature, he dealt at great length and fulness with contemporary impure prints, the sale of those periodicals, and how far the public acts upon the doctrines of this literature. The masterful inactivity of that Society for twelve years had, unfortunately, allowed the country to be flooded with printed impurity, and he had a horrifying and revolting list of details to cite as the result. Nor was the mischief confined to the working classes, for he had knowledge of very lamentable practices among West End ladies. As a plan of campaign he pleaded for "No Compromise" with social impurity in any form; for an endeavour to get doctors of eminence to publicly condemn unchastity; and the inculcation of the sanctity of marriage. These, he believed, were effective means of raising public opinion.

Exeter Hall Y.M.C.A.

The Y.M.C.A. has had many enthusiastic anniversaries within the historic walls that are now its own possession; probably none more so than that of Friday. It is often difficult to tell what attracts a May meeting audience; but we might fairly assume that last week the theme drew many, apart from the fame of the two chief speakers. Mr. E. J. Kennedy's report was of an informal, but at the same time satisfactory character. The aims and the scope of the Association are now so well known that we need not recapitulate the numerous agencies employed to strengthen and equip young men for the battle of London life. All departments of our complex nature are catered for successfully; but the needs of the spiritual man are, of course, kept well to the front. It was gratifying to hear from the secretary that the distribution of invitation slips that goes on in the never-ending stream of travellers along the Strand is being followed with definite tokens of blessing. Exeter Hall is the headquarters of the National work as well as of the "Central" Association, and Mr. Kennedy was able to report that there are now 586 Associations in the United Kingdom, with a membership of 75,000. One important part of the operations is the granting of letters of introduction to young men moving from one centre to another. "If you know of a young man leaving your neighbourhood for any fresh sphere of occupation, get him to apply to the nearest secretary of an Association for a letter, and he will find real friends wherever he may go." There was a somewhat large debt reported, £12,000, including the mortgage on Exeter Hall. We were told, however, that the president, Mr. Williams, had raised more than half this amount by his single-handed efforts, so that there is a prospect of a clear balance-sheet before long.

In a cheerful review of the Association, Mr. George Williams alluded to the labours of the travelling secretaries—"flying angels," he called them—who visit the provinces, forming new branches, and keeping the old ones on right lines. If people, he said, would but read the report of the National Council, he felt sure that plenty of support would be forthcoming. Mr. Williams briefly surveyed the progress of the Association in Europe, America, and other parts of the world; told how they were training men to fill high and responsible positions in society, as well as to lead a Christian life; and finished his genial speech by the customary cordial reference to the sister institution, the Y.W.C.A.

Canon Wilberforce was down on the programme to speak last; but, as he had to catch his train for Southampton, Rev. John McNeill gave way, and he had the first innings. He described himself as a sick man scarcely able to put two sentences together. Seeing that he was able to pour forth a perfect Niagara of eloquent speech for over half an hour, the imagination reels at the thought of what the worthy Canon might accomplish when in robust health. The first part of his address was a magnificent exposition of the teachings of the Ascension; the crowning fact in our Lord's earthly life that is kept in remembrance by the present Church season. Coming down from this transcendent verity to the practical duties of daily life, the Canon made an earnest appeal for public pecuniary help for the Association, which he regarded as one of the most potent factors in making for righteousness in the British nation in this nineteenth century. Then came a sustained appeal to his young brothers to realise the tremendous responsibilities of belonging to God, and living for Him in the world. He warned them against settling down into a selfish contentment with being saved from hell; and urged them to strive after such a life as would make heaven begin below in their own hearts and the hearts of others.

Intermingled with the speaker's exhortations to believers were bits of thrilling Gospel appeal, and he summed up his conception of the ideal life in the words of a godly man he once heard: "Surrender, submission, and loyalty." On the last point—loyalty to humanity—the Canon declared that he should consider himself a coward if he did not utter a strenuous testimony in a matter in which the integrity and morality of the nation are at stake—referring, of course, to the "Compensation" proposals of the Government. He had the authority of a brewer for saying that this was part of the battle between the kingdom of heaven and the kingdom of Satan. Every man whose eyes are open to the desolation and misery that come from one preventible cause, and every man who has been striving to rescue the victims of this dreadful trade, is bound publicly to protest against rooting deeper in the life of the nation one particular traffic which is productive of more corruption, misery, and immorality than all the rest.

The Canon had got so far in his indignant outburst, when the chairman rose and whispered something in his ear. The speaker abruptly stopped, and resumed his seat for a few seconds; then he rose and left the hall. This was the signal for a remarkable demonstration on the part of the crowded and excited audience. Many of them were evidently of opinion that the Canon should have been permitted to conclude his testimony without interference; so they cheered, and stamped, and shouted, "Wilberforce!" "Wilberforce!" "Wilberforce!" all the efforts of the platform to secure quietness being for a time unavailing. At length the secretary was able to make himself heard in announcing that Canon Wilberforce had left the building, and that he had not been prompted by the Chairman because of the nature of his remarks, but because the time had expired, and Mr. McNeill was to follow. It was certainly unfortunate, we think, that the interruption should have come just when the Canon had begun to utter his protest against the "Compensation" project, and when he would probably have concluded his speech in a few minutes.

Rev. John McNeill was able to allay the excitement when he repeated the disclaimer of the secretary, and added that as to the question of compensation he was ready to damn the objectionable proposal as much as any man. Then he proceeded with his speech, which in the main was a strong plea for making the operations of the Y.M.C.A. as prominent and obtrusive as possible, in view of the flaunting temptations of the great City.

Christian Evidence Society.

There was a goodly congregation in the Hall of Sion College, Victoria Embankment, on Monday afternoon, on the occasion of the annual meeting of the Christian Evidence Society. Twenty years old, this organisation fills a unique place in religious effort; and though its really enthusiastic supporters are few in number, the work which it carries forward is undoubtedly far-reaching beyond human estimate. The Society's agents lecture in public buildings and in the open air; examinations on general and special phases of Christian evidences are promoted; and it is gratifying to know that the work has been blessed not only in bringing about intellectual conviction, but also in pointing not a few atheists to Him whom they have found to be the Way, the Truth, and the Life.

Sir Andrew Clark, who presided, expressed a grounded and settled conviction that the Gospel is the one unfailing remedy for the disease of sin, and followed up this declaration with an admirable testimony as to his own faith and hope. The reasons which influence a man in accepting the Christian faith lie in two directions—in his head and in his heart. As the latter influences work in secret, and cannot be adequately expressed in words, he addressed himself to a statement of his intellectual reasons—reasons which had led him from doubt to belief. The first reason was expressed in words which thinking men to-day very generally admit. Undoubtedly there exists behind the universe call it what we may. That Power must in some sense be personal, for when we examine ourselves we find we are intelligences served by organs—our body does not express all that we are; our feelings, affections, and will inhere in the "I" or "me." Watching our inner life, we find two voices, guides, or laws—the first is our desire, whereby we are led to gratify ourselves in every conceivable way, with the result of degeneracy and destruction; and the second, an inarticulate voice, which protests, warns, censures, and speaks of sacrifice, duty, and holiness. This is called conscience, of which the speaker said: It claims a right to exercise a command over us, asserts authority and supremacy, and the only possible explanation I can give of it is that it is a revelation of the Power which lies behind the universe, which Power we call God. This involves community between man and God, and a relation between them both and the whole creation. I ask, "What then is man?" And I answer, "Man is divine." He has body in common with earth and matter; he has life in common with animals; he has spirit in common with God. Without any irreverence, we may say man is trinity in unity, linked on the one hand with God, and on the other with the whole creation.

Having maintained the probability of such a revelation to man by God as would afford the knowledge, strength, light, and pattern of life which man inwardly desires, the speaker rejoiced to believe that in Jesus Christ this has been satisfied, and the

of the world provided. Having enlarged upon the marvellous character of Christ—simply unfathomable even in its human aspects—and shown Him to be the most universal Man that ever lived—of no age or time, but for all people and all time—Sir Andrew held that his claim to be God must be granted when all the facts are viewed. In conclusion, he enforced the argument embodied in the formula "Try it.' When all arguments are at an end, any man who may be earnestly seeking after the truth, may, by humbling himself like a little child, see that there is something in Christianity. If he approach the Saviour, and is content to die to himself that he may live unto Christ, he will discover the most wonderful revelation that ever could be made to any man living on earth; he will find out how to die in order to live; how self-effacement is self-finding; and, further, in a way no language can convey, that the life of sacrifice, love, and service which Christ demands is in the end cheap at the price, for it is the only life which God can call "life indeed."

Rev. C. J. RIDGEWAY lamented the wide-spread ignorance of Christian truth even in educated circles. Professor J. AGAR BEET counselled those who would defend the faith to make the resurrection of Christ the great question, for no event of history has been more amply authenticated. As to natural science, he pointed out that although many of its votaries say "miracle is impossible," the origin of life, on their own general admission, stands unexplained without the granting of miracle. Sir J. RISDON BENNETT pointed to the many eminent men whose names have been, and are, fragrant with Christian faith and life. Referring to the doctrine of Evolution, he said that it is itself passing through a period of evolution. Mr. W. BARNARD and Canon ELWYN also spoke, urging Christians to give substantial "evidence" of their interest in the work of the Society.

Tottenham Deaconesses' Institution.

A LARGE number of friends gathered at the annual meeting of the Deaconesses' Institution and Hospital at Tottenham on Saturday afternoon. The report of the venerable founder, Dr. LASERON, showed that the Institution holds on its way, and becomes increasingly useful. The number of sisters at present is sixty-six, of whom thirty-nine are in the Hospital at Tottenham. Of the others fourteen are in the Sunderland Infirmary, while others are working in Cork, Dublin, Scarborough, and Jerusalem. During the past year three sisters have also been set apart for work in Newcastle, Halesworth, and in connection with the Baptist Forward Movement in Central London. During the year over 7500 patients have been treated in the Hospital, and not one of these has been allowed to leave without being spoken to of Him who bore our sickness and healed our infirmities. The Hospital is a centre of extensive evangelistic work; a Sunday-school, Bible-classes, and Gospel services are held regularly on Sundays, besides which a good deal is done in the way of visiting the sick and poor in the district. Dr. Laseron drew attention to the fact that there is a debt of £4000 on the Institution.

Mr. GEORGE WILLIAMS rejoiced that the work was carried on in the spirit of prayer and dependence upon God. He urged the friends to make the Institution more widely known, so that it might gain increased support, which it is greatly in need of. Sir EDMUND LECHMERE, M.P., spoke very highly of the work done by the two sisters in connection with the hospital of the London Jews' Society in Jerusalem. Mr. ELIOT HOWARD drew attention to the openings for service presented in connection with the Institution, and appealed to Christian young ladies to consider whether there was not a call for them to engage in this work.

Rev. F. B. MEYER returned his thanks to the committee for having spared one of the sisters to help in the work of the Baptist Forward Movement centred at John-street Chapel, Bedford-row. He spoke of the many opportunities for work in that district, and testified to the very high devotion and zeal the sister has already displayed, and to the high appreciation many poor people have of her services in the slums which she visits. Rev. GEORGE TURNER remarked upon the essentially Christian character of the work. Their first aim and object was the spiritual welfare of men, and it was love to Christ that stimulated them in all their service. Mr. JOSEPH HOWARD, M.P., Rev. H. MCSORLEY, and Mr. JOHN MCCALL also addressed the meeting.

Theatrical Mission.

ON Saturday afternoon the Duchess of Teck visited Macready House, Covent-garden, and received purses towards the purchase of the building. Her Royal Highness was accompanied by her daughter, Princess Victoria May, who distributed the prizes to the children, members, or orphan inmates of the house. The president, Gen. Sir ROBERT PHAYRE, spoke words of welcome and cordial thanks, and bore testimony, from personal observation, to the careful and Christian spirit in which Mr. and Mrs. Courthope Todd seek the spiritual, moral, and social welfare of theatrical employés.

Mr. TODD cited 80,000 attendances during the last two years as indicative of the appreciation in which is held the effort to furnish the means of rest, refreshment, and recreation in the highest sense—by God's Holy Spirit. The Institution has 7000 members, of whom those in the provinces of the United Kingdom, and those on the Continent, are cared for by associates. Particularly was watchful work done in connection with the recent Paris Exhibition. Abundant tokens of spiritual encouragement have been seen. The work has no invested funds, but is undertaken in dependence upon God. Mr. W. C. COLLINS said their Royal Patroness' countenance of this unique and Christ-inspired Institution was founded upon knowledge. He earnestly pleaded for entire extinction of the debt.

After presentation of purses and prizes, Dr. MONRO GIBSON said the work was done on the basis of Christian friendship and affection, not merely with counsel, advice, and perhaps a little touch of condemnation; and while open house was kept for country and Continental visitors, exposed to the dangers of London's pitiless streets and public-houses, their highest interests were not neglected. The purses, collection, and promises realised £700, leaving a deficit of £1750 on the building fund, in addition to current expenses fund absolutely drained, and liabilities in connection therewith amounting to over £200, through attention devoted to completion of the purchase.

Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society.

"THE hoary head is a crown of glory, if it be found in the way of righteousness." There is a danger that many saints of the present day may be overlooked in their old age and poverty by those of the household of faith, who, Martha like, are engaged in many other things. The claims of the Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society are well deserving the attention of all evangelical Christians. On Monday evening of this week they were well presented at the eighty-third annual meeting of the Society, held in Exeter Hall, under the presidency of Mr. EDWARD RAWLINGS.

From the report submitted by the secretary, Mr. J. E. HAZELTON, it appeared that for the past year the pensioners numbered 1219, and that the sums distributed among them amounted to £7849. The Society is undenominational in character. Old age, poverty, and vital Christianity are the only qualifications required of candidates; but, unfortunately, many applicants had to be denied aid because of the low state of the treasury. Four Homes have to be maintained for the accommodation of aged ones. The operations of the Society extend over the United Kingdom, and many of the pensioners live in Ireland. It was mentioned with gratitude that Mr. J. T. Morton had last year, for the eighth time, generously presented the pensioners with a large quantity of blankets, flannels, coals, groceries, and similar necessaries.

Mr. EDWARD RAWLINGS concluded a most interesting address by showing that it was a privilege both to possess such a beneficent Society, and to have the opportunity of contributing to its support. Mr. F. A. BEVAN explained how George Whitefield formed the Society on a Scriptural, evangelical, and undenominational basis, and therefore ensured its success and permanence. Rev. Dr. MACEWAN pointed out how in caring for old age the action was in harmony with the spirit of Christianity. Mr. W. J. PARKS earnestly pleaded for increased contributions. Rev. W. SINDEN said that even the poorest of the churches could maintain the principle of providing for the indigent through co-operation with this Society. Rev. P. REYNOLDS urged Christians to aid a work that so palpably reflects the glory of God because inspired by his love. Rev. M. SWEETNAM dwelt on the support of such a Society as a test of living Christianity; and Mr. JOHN BUSH briefly enforced the injunction, "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ."

Y.W.C.A., CONTINENTAL DIVISION.

THERE have been lately most encouraging reports from Spain, especially the towns of Figueras, Santander, and Seville. Many women and girls have joined the Association, and we are thankful to know that most are willing to forsake all for Christ, though often persecuted and tried. A junior branch has been started at San Sebastian by Mme. Gulick, of the North American College. Mrs. Moore writes, "I believe it is the very thing wanted in this country."

Many foreigners go to the London office seeking situations or help in various ways. A Christian German girl went suffering from cancer in the throat. She was taken to the Cancer Hospital where she is now dying. The workers have been able to visit her and cheer her last days, though she is so far from all her friends. Quite recently a girl was prevented going to a most dangerous situation in England.

The hon. secretary will be glad to hear of ladies going abroad this summer, who would be willing to form Bible-classes for English girls in foreign towns, such as Hamburg, Aix-les-Bains, &c., or who would visit existing branches of the Y.W.C.A. Workers abroad, sometimes single-handed, need encouragement, and are very thankful for visits from strangers. In this way, some branches in France have lately been cheered, and gratifying reports of the work done have been sent. All communications should be addressed to the hon. secretary, Y.W.C.A., Continental Division, 316, Regent-street, London, W.

MR. G. F. COOK has been conducting a temperance mission in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile-end-road, and something like four hundred total abstinence pledges have been taken.

MRS. PARSONS' HOME, WALTHAMSTOW.—For twenty-four years this Home for orphans, or destitute and needy girls, has been perseveringly carried on by Mrs. Parsons. Though fully worthy of support, it has caused its superintendent frequent anxiety. Should help be forthcoming to pay off the debt which at present burdens the work, the Home will be placed under a committee of ladies, in order to relieve Mrs. Parsons of her heavy responsibility. Of this committee Rev. H. E. Noyes, vicar of St. Stephen's, Walthamstow, will be president. Having known the work for many years, we commend its pressing need to the attention of those who can help. The address is Eastfield House, High-street, Walthamstow.

THE BATTLE OF LIFE.

LIFE is not victory, but battle. Every battle declined, as well as every battle drawn, is a battle lost.—R. D. Hitchcock.

DYING BEDS.

I have seen many dying beds, but never have I seen one which seemed to me to be a proper place in which to make preparation for eternity. —Albert Barnes.

THE TRUE BREAD FROM HEAVEN.

They that did eat manna hungered again, died at last, and with many of them God was not well-pleased; whereas, they who feed on Christ by faith shall never hunger and shall die no more, and with them God will be forever well-pleased.—Matthew Henry.

GREAT CERTAINTIES.

There is an Eye that never sleeps
Beneath the wing of night;
There is an Ear that never shuts
When sinks the beams of light.
There is an Arm that never tires
When human strength gives way;
There is a Love that never fails
When earthly loves decay.

MUTUAL FORBEARANCE.

If thou canst not make thyself such an one as thou wouldst, how canst thou expect to have another in all things to thy liking? The large liberty of others displeaseth us; and yet we will not have our own desires denied us. How seldom we weigh our neighbour in the same balance with ourselves.—Thomas à Kempis.

ROYAL ROAD TO PLEASURE.

The way really to enjoy temporal blessings is to give them to God—to regard them as his property rather than our own. When we have presented them, in a manner, to Him, and have received them back with privilege to use them, they are felt to be objects of sacred interest, are sources of purified satisfaction, and become means of improvement as well as instruments of pleasure.—Thomas Binney.

GOOD OUT OF EVIL.

All things work together for the good of the saints. Out of all evil comes good; out of all darkness comes light; out of all sorrow comes joy. The forces of earth, unless they all bear in one line, or nearly so, tend to counteract each other; and arrest the common impulse. But the forces which God brings to bear upon us in affliction are all directly and necessarily impulsive. Come from what quarter they may, or from opposite quarters all at once, they still bear us successfully forward.—H. Bonar.

LOVE PRODUCES LOVE.

The cross of Christ, being manifestatively the great exhibition of the love of God towards the creature, must be instrumentally the great promoter of the creature's love to God. This truth, received into the soul, by the power of the Holy Spirit of God, has in its very nature a drawing effect upon the mind. Love produces love. It does so in common life—we see it in all the different ties which bind man to man, husband to wife, child to father, brother to brother, friend to friend. Love is the master key which opens every ward of the human heart. "God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son." Here is the cause—God's love to us. What is the effect? Our love to God.—James Harington Evans.

The Baptism of the Holy Ghost

"I will pray the Father, and He shall give you another Comforter, that He may abide with you for ever; even the Spirit of truth . . . He dwelleth with you, and shall be in you."—JOHN xiv. 16, 17.

HE came with baptism of fire,
The Holy Ghost, the Comforter,
A blood-bought Church with might to inspire,
Life on the ransomed to confer:
Now, Father, Son, the love we bless
Which did not leave us comfortless!

"In them I walk, in them I dwell":
Father, we hail thy pledge divine!
Ascended King, Immanuel,
Still "God with us"—thy Church thy shrine—
We clasp "the Promise" sealed "to all,
As many as our God shall call";—

Their birthright dower who yet esteem
As longed-for Visitant their Lord:
Who tarry, thirsting, by the stream
Erst from the smitten Rock outpoured:—
"Come, Holy Ghost! In helpless state, Suppliant, thy Baptism we wait!"

Slight they not Him who murmur "Come!"
As to Royal Wanderer without?
Do children call the parent home
Shorn of whose presence home were not?
What lose we failing to explore
The Master's "with you evermore"?

O heir of Pentecost, who first
With "Come!" of suppliant might drew nigh,
Quickening thy soul to heavenward thirst?
Whose breath inspired adoption's cry—
Love, hope in "Abba, Father!" lost—
The new sweet "tongue" of Pentecost?

In solemn, secret birthday hour
Inly the Spirit's life was poured;
Baptized by his Almighty power
Into the body of thy Lord,
And one with Christ through grace divine,
His death, his grave, his life were thine:

And now, in resurrection-life,
Not for fresh "Baptism" our plea,
But rather that the inner strife
Of flesh still unsubdued to thee
Be, gracious Spirit, day by day
Quelled wholly, deeply through thy sway!

Thine, thine the throne-room of the soul!
Its Ruler, break each barrier down;
As with full tide o'erflood the whole,
Self overborne by Thee alone:
Indwelt by God the Holy Ghost,
Oh for unbroken Pentecost!

Spirit of Love, so quickly grieved
By breath of discord, judgment rude;
Spirit of power—thy spoils achieved
Through souls for "greater works" endued—
Spirit of Truth, of holiness,
We cry not "enter!" but "possess!"

Possess! possess! reveal the path
Of cloudless communing with God!
To possibilities of faith
As yet unfathomed point the road:
And souls attent in deep desire
Lord of all power and might inspire!

For "days of heaven upon earth"
May yet be ours: Oh, bitter shame
That blood-bought souls of royal birth
So faintly long, so feebly claim!
Their calling dimly understood
Who walk below as sons of God.

This, then, blest Comforter, our prayer—
Thine own—inspired in heavenly tongue,
Full-filled with thee, oh, let us bear
Unbroken witness—lowly—strong—
To present power of Pentecost—
Communion of the Holy Ghost!

So shall the fruitfulness of love,
True, glad obedience to thy voice,
With holy soul-subdual prove
The longing heart thy home, thy choice.
The quickening tide's resistless swell
Fills cup of lowliest chalice shell.

Eye hath not seen, nor ear hath heard,
Nor can the heart of man conceive
Joys of revealing still conferred
On those who, seeing not, believe:
Spirit of life—its Lord and Giver—
Now bid the desert place revive!
Since still, as flood-notes of the river,
Low echoes float—"who, who shall sever?"
"He shall abide with you for ever."

SOLDIERS AND SAILORS IN MALTA.

DEAR FRIENDS,—I desire to lay before you the accompanying appeal from Malta for help. It speaks for itself. The case is very urgent, and I hope many of the Lord's stewards will see their way to respond promptly and liberally. Miss Denham Smith, of 38, York-terrace, Regent's Park, N.W., has kindly consented to receive and forward any contributions that may be entrusted to her.—Yours faithfully in Christ,

London. T. SHULDHAM HENRY.

DEAR FRIENDS,—While you are working for the furtherance of Christ's kingdom in the homeland, we are making an effort to reach our soldiers and sailors stationed in Malta. Seeing the need of another Home, in August, 1888, I moved into a larger house, and threw open my private home to be a "welcome" to all the men. The Home has now been open two years, carried on by myself, a widow lady, and my two daughters. The Lord has blessed the effort to bring wanderers into his fold. Our hearts glow within us as we think of those miracles of grace witnessed during the past years—souls born again, brought from darkness into his marvellous light.

We cannot fully realise the peculiar temptations of a soldier's or a sailor's life till we live and work among them. They leave home mere lads, some of them having been surrounded by sin and drunkenness from their earliest childhood, and go out unarmed and unprotected into a wider sphere of wickedness and sin. In the island are stationed five regiments, with between eight hundred to one thousand men in each. Fifteen of H.M. ships and a late addition of three large vessels harbour in Malta eight months out of the twelve. There are five thousand grog-shops in Valetta and its suburbs, and but three temperance Homes and one Rest in the whole island.

My small means can no longer meet the daily expenses, nor supply the need of a manager and three servants. £400 are needed for the coming year. We make this appeal prayerfully, trustingly, knowing that our God can fully supply all need, and ask your help to keep up this Home, where Christ may be upheld, a Saviour for the lost, the strength and life of those who have already put their trust in Him.—Your sister in the Lord,

ANNIE S. B. BLACKLER.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., May 25, Joel ii. 21—32; Mon., May 26, Gen. i. 1—19; Tues., May 27, Gen. i. 20—31; Wed., May 28, Gen. ii. 1—14; Thurs., May 29, Gen. ii. 15—25; Fri., May 30, Gen. iii. 1—13; Sat., May 31, Gen. iii. 14—24.

WORKING GIRLS IN LONDON.—The annual prayer and praise meeting of the friends of the Homes for Working Girls in London was held last week at Lincoln House. Mr. Shrimpton, the hon. director of the Homes presided, and gave some interesting particulars of the work. Over 1500 young women had shared the benefits of the Homes during 1889; not a few of them are true believers, exercising a happy influence over their associates. An earnest spirit of devotion prevailed in the meeting. Many petitions went up to God for continued blessing on the Homes, their inmates, and their conductors.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Hutchinson, Emmanuel Church, Wimbledon, May 26 to June 3. Mr. H. Hutchinson, Tent, Vale-grove, Chelsea, June 2—13. Mr. J. S. Tyler, Holmwood, June 1—6; West Hartlepool, June 8—13. Mr. T. L. Sayer, St. John's Wood Presbyterian Lecture Hall, June 1—11. Mr. H. W. Pewtress, Enfield Congregational Mission Hall, June 1—6.

The Baptism of the Spirit.

By Rev. H. C. G. MOULE.*

The phrase, "the baptism of the Spirit," is not precisely Pauline. We have only an approach to it in the words, "By one Spirit we were all baptized into one body" (1 Cor. xii. 13). It occurs in each of the Gospels, and twice in the Acts. The Lord Jesus appears there always as the Baptizer. It will be seen also that while the mentions of the holy "Filling" are frequent, the recorded occasions of the Baptism are two only: the day of Pentecost, and the closely parallel occasion when, in the house of Cornelius, Peter, the Apostle of Pentecost, was permitted solemnly and for ever to "open the door of faith to the Gentiles." Nowhere in the Epistles does the precise phrase, "Baptism of the Spirit" occur. Are we not thus led to the conclusion that the Baptism is not to be identified with the Filling; and is not, like the Filling, presented to us as a blessing for which the Christian is to seek?...

In view of these facts of Scripture, may I say, with tenderness and deep spiritual sympathy, that a mistake appears to underlie the practice, not uncommon now among earnest Christians, of waiting for a special Baptism of the Spirit, in order to more effectual service for the Lord? Surely "by one Spirit we have been baptized into one body." And now our part is to open in humblest faith all the avenues and regions of the soul and of the life, that we may be filled with what we already have.

And how shall this be done? Paul gives us the answer: "That we might receive the promise of the Spirit, through faith." Yes, through faith, the mouth of the inner man, opened that He who has promised may fill it. In this brief loving appeal to the Ephesian saints, the Apostle does but ask them to open and receive; to take their stand upon a promise. Not by mighty spiritual effort, but in order to it, is that promise to be received. We are to take the Lord at his word; to trust Him to bless us fully in his keeping his word. We are to open to Him all the inner doors of the soul, the chamber doors, as we have opened the main portal. And we are to use the same key, "the key of promise," which is from the other point of view, the key of our simplest and most confiding faith.

Believing, we receive. And blessed then will be the manifestations of the holy gift received, in one special direction and another. We shall know something of what it is to be "filled with all joy and peace in believing, that we may abound in hope, by the power of the Holy Ghost." We shall be on our way to be "filled with the fruit of righteousness"; "filled with the knowledge of his will." We shall be realising something indeed by the power of Him who is the bond betwixt us and our Head of that Filling which we already possess (but possession is not realisation) in Him in whom "all the fulness dwells." Yes, we shall be filled, we shall be filling, in our finite receptivity, with that "Fulness of God" which means whatsoever being glory in Him is capable of becoming grace in us.

* From Veni Creator (5s. Hodder & Stoughton). We heartily commend these reverent, wise, and well-considered chapters on a profoundly transcendent theme.

Unspiritual Activity.

"After certain years he went down."

On all sides there seems to be much outward activity among the Lord's people. Societies multiply, missions are increasing in number. There is scarcely a place where "the public" are not invited to come and hear addresses, or to come and help by contributing their money to Christian work. Philanthropic efforts are everywhere to be seen, and "the public" again are invited by the Lord's people to help.

But is real spiritual work being developed? Are the workers themselves more manifestly in communion with God? Are the churches growing in numbers and power? Of the great number of alleged converts, are they Ishmaels, born of the flesh; or Isaacs, the true covenant seed? Is the purification of the temple going on as thoroughly and deeply as the multitude of words spoken and printed would seem to imply? or does the work not often bear the stamp of convulsive effort, propped up by very questionable means of support? Is there not a tendency in many quarters to make "a fair show in the flesh"?—to do works to be "seen of men," and thus to get man's support to continue the work? Is not one of the great difficulties of the Church of God that there are so many Ishmaels, who are "born after the flesh," who persecute that which is "born after the Spirit"?

Abraham was right in expecting the promised son, but he went wrong because he did not wait God's time, and tried to make use of the flesh as an instrument for producing the true seed. It only led to trouble, and he had to "cast out" the one born after the flesh.

Those who remember the mighty work of God in Ireland and England thirty years ago, know how very manifestly it was of God, and those who were "born of God" did "overcome the world." They remember that the special character of that time was that the Revival was not worked up, but came down from God; that the tide of power and victory was preceded by, and prepared for by, only two weapons—prayer and praise.

There were not then countless little reports to "give an account of my work and appeals for more money." The personality of God's servants seemed to be hidden more in God. Names were of little account, but God was counted on.

But what is the characteristic of many works in the present day? "Great meetings," "an excellent choir," or even "a string band," and great confidence placed in advertising. These seem to be what are often thought indispensable to produce spiritual results, but surely these are not necessary to persuade God to convert souls; and although they may have an effect in inducing to come to "our meeting," they will not help, even if they do not often hinder, a soul in coming to God. But this extensive machinery needs much money, and, as the Lord does not readily give money for such instrumentality, the aid of "the public" is again sought. But what will persuade the "public" to help? They must have a quid pro quo in some shape. I will not even allude to the monstrous custom of inviting men to an expensive feast costing hundreds, where, after pandering to their animal natures to the full by eating costly food and drinking costly wines, in the presence of someone with a high-sounding name, they are invited to help the holy work of God, and then to have the glory given to them for their gifts, which belong to God, and of which they were only stewards. I should hope no readers of God's work in The Christian would come down to such worship of the golden calf.

But there are other expedients by which it is hoped the work of God (?) will be advanced. Bazaars, where various "entertainments" are provided; or a meeting, where "it is expected" (not that the Lord and his saints will be), but that someone whose position will attract the flesh "will be present." Is it to be wondered at then that on all sides we hear of backsliding, that "entertainments" are thronged, while "a meeting for waiting on the Lord" is not only attended by a little handful, but the very notice is not understood, or is looked upon with indifference, or with an expression which says, "There is no good in that."

Saul, when he "saw the people scattered from me," did not wait, but he "did foolishly," and lost his kingdom.

The wise master builder, who "laid the foundation," had as his principle "henceforth know we no man after the flesh." Some who build in the present day seem to act as if they knew men only after the flesh. The rich are put in "the uppermost seats," and the poor, rich in faith, are ignored and thrust aside for a more educated (?) ministry.

Is it to be wondered that churches are unstable, when wood, hay, and stubble are being used instead of "living stones." Babel of old was built with "brick for stone and slime for mortar," and fell; and no house where man-made bricks are built up with the slime of fine words will stand when "the mighty wind" arises.

St. Paul said, "God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the mighty." If we choose the "mighty things of the world," "the sand" of its riches, its influence, or its political power, most assuredly, when "the mighty wind" comes, it will "fall," and "great will be the fall of it." "Wherefore let every man take heed how he builds," for "the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is." R.

GENEVA EVANGELICAL SOCIETY.—Founded in 1831, to uphold the great principles of the Reformation in French-speaking countries, this Society has a theological school, in which there are forty-two students; an evangelisation department, with twelve stations in France and eight in Switzerland; and a colportage agency, including sixty workers, fifty-eight of whom are employed in France, one in Switzerland, and one in the French valleys of Piedmont. The Society is about to push colportage work in Picardy. Three centuries ago this province of France had some bright spots, Noyon being the birth-place of John Calvin. From this town God's Word was given to Switzerland as well as France; to-day the place is locked in the embrace of superstition and infidelity. It is cheering to see that the Protestants are now waking up to their duties and privileges, and we trust God's blessing will attend their endeavours. Rev. J. Dardier, superintendent of the colportage work, is at present in England, soliciting interest in the work. His address is at 1, Portland Mansions, Portland-place, West Kensington.

MISS DE BROEN,

OF THE BELLEVILLE MISSION, PARIS.

THE absence of preconceived intention is one of the marks of a work carried out in obedience to the will of God, divine guidance step by step showing that the matter is of the Lord. It was in scenes remote from her present sphere that Miss de Broen passed her childhood, and she would have been amazed to know that one day she would become "the mother of Belleville." Although of Dutch family, her grandfather, the Baron de Broen, lived much in Russia, where a large amount of his property was destroyed by Napoleon the First, on his entrance into that country. It is remarkable that his granddaughter, so many years afterwards, should be allowed the revenge of making known the Gospel of peace among the French.

One of the earliest recollections of the little Josephine was that of falling into a river. Her father and his friends had just returned from a shooting excursion, and, rushing in, rescued her. The first thing that met her return to consciousness was her father's face bending over her with tears of joy.

On another occasion a bad fall on the ice left an injury to the spine, which causes pain even now. This was followed by brain fever, which threatened to terminate the life for which many thank God at the present hour. Previous to this, her beloved mother was taken to her heavenly home—a loss which much darkened her childhood; and thus was she early trained by sorrow to become the centre of so much good.

Leaving home after her father's second marriage, she was invited to Switzerland, where the text that has never lost its power and freshness formed the turning-point of her life, "God so loved the world," &c. Then followed some months at Mildmay, though not as a regular deaconess. During the Franco-German war Miss de Broen visited the refugee ladies in London, and was able to help some to hear of their relations shut in by the Paris siege. Their gratitude was boundless, as, after months of agony, many of them did not even know if their husbands were alive.

Invited by the late Mrs. Christine Alsop, Miss de Broen joined her party, to bring aid and sympathy to different parts of France after the war. Arriving in Paris, the outbreak of the Commune was scarcely over. The Tuilleries were smoking in ruins; bloody reprisals were of daily occurrence. Out of that time of misery and sin God brought sweetness and salvation.

On visiting the famous Père Lachaise Cemetery, a large crowd was found weeping and raging before the wall stained with blood; while dismal trenches, filled with hundreds of dead anarchists slain by the troops, were surrounded by the friends of the victims, thrusting into the ground pieces of paper bearing the word "revenge"; or putting flowers or crosses for remembrance. One woman, specially furious in her grief, had lost her husband and her son. Miss de Broen said to her earnestly, "You think you have lost all; but you have still the love of God." Her tender words and the touch on her arm quieted the poor creature, while the crowd gathered round and accepted the tracts which Miss de Broen and her friends distributed.

It was then that the resolution was formed to remain in Paris, to bring to these people the news of God's love that, had they known it, would have kept them from all this grief and sin. Her friends were in distress. How could they leave her, young, and a stranger in Paris, to work among the feared and avoided of all? But God wonderfully opened the way for her to begin work at once by gentlemen bringing over what was left of the Friends' "War Victims Fund." Through Mrs. Alsop this was given to Miss de Broen, and thus the work was started. Rooms kindly lent by Pastor Robin, in Belleville and Lavillette, were soon filled with poor starving women. Night schools were organised for men and women, and meetings for passers in the streets, to whom gentlemen from Paris came out to speak.

The interest of those days was intense. Rev. William Gibson, of Paris, when speaking of his own work before the Evangelical Alliance in 1885, said that Miss de Broen was the first of all who came from England to work after the Commune, and that at a time when not even a man dared show his face in Belleville. "Never shall I forget," he added, "the change in the faces of the people in her classes after some months of her work amongst them." Many touching stories belong to this period. The work proceeded, but it could not have done so but for the support of kind friends who gave their fullest confidence to it, and to its originator.

Funds for a large iron room were collected in England, and in it many services are held all through the week, with Sunday-schools, night-schools, &c. There is also the very important medical mission, immensely valuable for spiritual as well as bodily help. Through it alone more than eighty thousand persons have heard the Gospel, and received medical treatment. More than twenty thousand Testaments have been bought by these poor people, totally ignorant of the Word of God before, and taken by them often to very distant homes, where no means of grace exist.

It is impossible in this short sketch to give an adequate idea of the great good accomplished, by the blessing of God on the work, or of the numbers who have experienced a true change of heart by faith in our Saviour. Nor can we do more than allude to their gratitude, often expressed in touching letters; but year after year the happiest results are obtained, which may well cheer the hearts of Christians in England, who have a vital interest in the return of France to God.

One of the most remarkable scenes in Miss de Broen's life occurred in a meeting of anarchists and infidels. Timid as she felt, she rose and spoke of God to them all. The gallery stamped and roared à bas la citoyenne, but from the body of the hall a cry arose, "Let her alone; we know her. She does not merely preach; she lives what she says." The noted Louise Michel presided, and gave her a second opportunity of speaking, though pulling her dress all the time to keep her from speaking of God. But our friend would not be silenced, and again the hall heard of the loving Saviour from her lips. On leaving, many pressed around her, taking her hand and saying, "How happy you must be with such a faith! we have none; we should like to hear these things often." This power of arresting attention is often seen when Miss de Broen speaks to the sick in the iron room, with simple words that go to the heart.

Another remarkable occasion was when many thousands of rag-pickers were literally starving. "They don't care what becomes of us. We have no arms, but must take to the paving stones and barricades sooner than see our children die," they said. Going straight to President Grévy, to the Prime Minister, and the Préfet, Miss de Broen was well received by all, and thanked for her devotion to the poor. Before they decided on employment for the starving people, she opened a soup-kitchen, feeding more than a thousand daily for seven weeks.

One of the most memorable seasons of Miss de Broen's mission life was the visit of Mr. Moody. Deeply moved and interested, he spoke of the scene at a subsequent meeting, at which he pressed upon workers the need of a holy enthusiasm. The visit of the Queen of Sweden, with the Princes Oscar and Eugène, was also a happy event.

It needs much courage and faith not to draw back before many difficulties. To serve God in a place like Paris is often up-hill work. But many encouragements are also given, and numbers of letters from old workers constantly tell of their happiest days being passed with Miss de Broen in the Mission. Times are trying, and new friends are needed as the old are called away.

Belleville being so remote, and the novelty of the work having subsided, a central office was absolutely necessary. This was found, through the generous gift of a friend, at 205, Rue St. Honoré. There also strangers find a room for resting, for meeting their friends, a temperance refreshment-room, and a ladies' writing-room. The large window is filled with open Bibles, while "L'ami de la Maison," &c., attract hundreds of passers-by to read the verses marked. A daily prayer-meeting is held to ask God's blessing on all missions in Paris and abroad.

Visitors to Paris may be glad to know that a guide will be sent from the office with strangers desiring to see the Mission at Belleville, whence the beautiful park, the Buttes de Chaumont, and the Père Lachaise Cemetery can be visited. The address of the Mission premises, where Miss de Broen resides, is 3, Rue Clavel, Belleville, Paris.

A recent and important testimony to the work should be noted through the visit of one of the senators and of the Directeur de l'Assistance Publique. They were deeply impressed by the sight of the medical mission, and in Miss de Broen's visitors' book were found the following words: "It is not merely as Directeur de l'Assistance Publique, but as a Frenchman, that I here express for Miss de Broen my admiration and gratitude."

[A shilling book by Miss Clayton, giving a very clear and interesting account of the whole Mission, can be had from Messrs. J. F. Shaw & Co., 48, Paternoster-row, London.]

A Word of Sympathy.

By REGINALD RADCLIFFE.

[The following letter was written after receiving from Mr. Spencer Walton the distressing intelligence of his beloved wife's death. A few words of affectionate and tender sympathy, and the writer passes on to that of which his heart is continually full to overflowing—the linking of this poor, lost world, by the faith of his people, to the all-mightiness of God.]

My beloved fellow-worker, yesterday I received your lovely silver card, telling how deeply you have been bereaved by the swift departure of your beloved one. The lines you have inscribed are very lovely. Sweetly do they tell to all of us, but especially to us old ones, how very short this present step of our existence is. He doeth all things well. Well, therefore, must it be that our lives are so short. But glorious the hastening beyond!

It is not many missionaries we need, so much as few with much in them—God with them. Good were it if a halt could be called over the mission field, and the cry go up, "Is God with me? If not, let me tarry—not till my beard is grown, but till, like a helpless worm, broken down and utterly undone, I am content to be taken up in the hand of the Omnipotent, to do WHATSOEVER He will, whether to hide me out of sight, going alone to fast and pray, to wash my brethren's feet, or what else He will."

Why say we the field is immense? What can be immense on this little globe—a little pea in his immense universe? Let us rather turn our back on the fields so white and so great in the sight of us pilgrims, and take time to look steadfastly towards our All-Mighty-Father. There we will stop and stand, and STAND, and STAND, and gaze, and confess it passes our arithmetic to add up the sum of "Whatsoever ye ask the Father in my name, believing, HE will give you." "We have the petitions we ask because we keep his commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight." Then ask and receive, that your joy may be full. "Hitherto have ye asked nothing."

Then, instead of continuing to look steadfastly at our All-Mighty-Father, let us fall flat on our faces on the ground before Him, constrained by the blessed Spirit to shout out of a broken heart: "I receive," "I receive," "I receive." Aye, AYE; worm of the dust thou, indeed, art. But yet "Child of God"—"adopted"—crying, "Abba, Father; glory be to the Father, to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost."

Three men in South Africa, or three women for that matter, like Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, bound together with one heart, on their faces in the dust, leaning only on God, are enough to upset kingdoms. God bless thee, beloved, bereaved brother.

PROTESTANTISM AT DARTFORD.

The Dartford Young Men's Bible Class is a Protestant Evangelical institution, owing its separate existence to the fact that Romanising tendencies have asserted themselves in Church of England circles at Dartford. The Memorial Hall, which has been erected for the use of the class, will, we trust, long be a centre of powerful influence in the cause of the Gospel. The membership has reached the number of 193, and it is gratifying to learn that much blessing has attended the work.

The Bible-class is open every Sunday afternoon. The building offers throughout the week the advantages of a library and reading-room, and is a centre of temperance and other work. The cost of the building, £1600, has been met the exception of £200, which will, it is hoped, be forthcoming soon, in order that the hall may be opened free of debt. The trustees of the building will include Sir S. A. Blackwood and Colonel Sandys, M.P. The president of the Bible-class is Mr. J. Lawrence Mitchell, Gartley House, Dartford, Kent.

PERSECUTION IN RUSSIA.

DEAR SIR,—You have on previous occasions kindly allowed us to call attention in your columns to the growing spirit of religious persecution shown by the authorities of the Greek Church in Russia. The Council of the Evangelical Alliance trust that the following statement may be deemed of sufficient interest and importance to secure its insertion in your journal:—

(1) There are several people now confined in the common prison at Witepsk, in Russia, because they have sought to spread the teachings of the Gospel amongst their fellows. They are men and women of high moral character, against whom no accusation can be brought, except that they desire to be true to Christ and his Gospel. They have been confined in the secret inner prison for about six months, and have been informed that they will probably be deprived of all their property and rights, and some of them imprisoned as common criminals, and others banished either to Siberia or beyond the Caucasus. The final trial, at which the sentence will be pronounced upon them, is fixed to take place this month. The priests of the Russian Church are responsible for this persecution. When they found that they could not confute the doctrines of these poor men they aroused the people, and got a petition sent to the Governor, that they might be arrested and banished.

(2) Another case is that of Pastor Frans Nersing, who was sentenced by the Criminal Court at Revel to twelve months' imprisonment and the loss of all his rights, because he was said to have blasphemed the saints.

(3) Lately, also, several parents have been sent to prison for three months, because, though one of them had been enticed into the Greek Church, yet their consciences did not allow them to have their children baptized in it.

These facts are supplied to us by a gentleman who has long resided in Russia. We cannot believe that the Emperor of Russia is aware of the state of things in his country, but the Greek Church authorities seem determined by their intolerant spirit, to make the name of Russia a reproach throughout Europe.

Yours faithfully,
J. FIELD,
A. J. ARNOLD,
Secretaries Evangelical Alliance.

THE CRY OF A GREAT CITY.

NEXT to Paris, Marseilles is the most important city in France, the great commercial centre for the Mediterranean and the countries of the East. One hundred and fifty thousand sailors enter its harbours in the course of the year; they contain in fact a floating town. Though Mr. C. Faithfull has established a Sailors' Rest, which is an important centre for the vessels entering the old port, there is no one to evangelise this vast mass of our fellow men, who if they received the truth might carry the Gospel to the people of the numerous ports which they reach.

The town itself has 360,000 inhabitants. The McAll Mission, with its four principal centres and its volunteer helpers, is accomplishing an important work locally; yet when we specify the police, the soldiers, railway men, cab and omnibus drivers, douaniers, dock labourers, boatmen and canal men, fishermen, the Savoyard shoeblacks, factory men, waiters, décrotteurs, dustmen and chiffonniers, vendors of wares in the street, young men and young girls in very various employments, flower women, bricklayers, masons and carpenters, and many others, it will be seen that this most blessed Mission cannot overtake the vast need which presents itself here. One or two young girls of the Salvation Army may be seen selling En Avant in the crowded streets, the passers-by not a little astonished by the sight of young girls just emerged from childhood braving public opinion in this manner.

Then to add to these various classes, there are 30,000 Spaniards, many of them orange sellers, 70,000 Italians, 7000 Jews, for none of whom there is any evangelist. In contemplating such crowds, without God, without Christ, one feels profoundly moved with their spiritual condition, and one is compelled to cry out with a loud voice: Where, amongst the thousands stirred up to care for those perishing for lack of knowledge, are the few who will come forward and enter this vast field?

Marseilles is a bright, cheerful seaport with a fine climate. Its sometimes dreaded mistral, a north-west wind blowing from the Pyrenees, is very healthy, and has been called "un balai celeste." House rent and living are quite moderate. The French language will carry one everywhere: of course, to anyone knowing Italian or Spanish, there are opportunities for evangelising either, under the most favourable circumstances.

What an interesting and important field for a gentleman of independent means, or for a family, or two ladies! What a widespread influence they might exercise amongst a people very approachable! The place, too, combines the advantages of a bright city life, the sea-side, intercourse with resident Christian people, and contact with many missionaries en route for their distant stations, and travellers to the East. Then in the months of summer there is a retreat to the mountains of Dauphiné or villages on the Col de Tende, and a retreat in the cold to Hyères or the village of Ollioule, close by, one of the warmest spots on the Riviera. To me it is perfectly astonishing that an English Christian gentleman desirous of serving the Lord has not chosen this so desirable sphere of labour. We greatly enjoyed worship with the brethren of the French Free Church, and our dear friend, M. Guibal Père, the pastor. They have the Lord's Supper weekly, and the "culte d'adoration," that is, liberty of worship and ministry. It is at 133, Cours Lieutaud.

Surely all this will be as the cry of the man of Macedonia to some one, "Come over and help us!"

SEEK THE INDWELLING SPIRIT.

[From Rev. Andrew Murray's excellent book, "Holy in Christ," we take the following summary of his chapter on "The Holy Spirit."]

IT is universally admitted that the Holy Spirit has not, in the teaching of the Church or the faith of believers, that place of honour and power which becomes Him as the Revealer of the Father and the Son. Seek a deep conviction that without the Holy Spirit the clearest teaching on holiness, the most fervent desires, the most blessed experiences even, will only be temporary, will produce no permanent result, will bring no abiding rest.

The Holy Spirit dwells within, and works within, in the hidden deep of your nature. Seek, above everything, the clear and habitual assurance that He is within you, doing his work. To this end deny self and its work in serving God. Your own power to think and pray and believe and strive—lay it all down expressly and distinctly in God's presence; claim, accept, and believe in the hidden workings of his indwelling Spirit.

As the Son ever spake of the Father, so the the Spirit ever points to Christ. The soul that yields itself to the Spirit will of Him learn to know how Christ is our holiness, how we can always abide in Christ our sanctification. What a vain effort it has often been without the Spirit! "As the anointing taught you, ye abide in Him."

In the temple of thy heart, beloved believer, there is a secret place within the veil, where dwells, often all unknown, the Spirit of God. Do bow in deep reverence before the Father, and ask that He may work mightily. Expect the Spirit to do his work: He will make thy inner man a fit home, thy heart a throne for Jesus, and reveal Him there.

EXHORTATIONS FROM HEBREWS.

CHAP. iv. 1.—"Let us therefore fear, lest a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it."

Chap. iv. 11.—"Let us labour therefore to enter into that rest, lest any man fall after the same example of unbelief."

Chap. iv. 16.—"Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need."

Chap. vi. 1.—"Let us go on unto perfection."

Chap. x. 22.—"Let us draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith."

Chap. x. 23.—"Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering."

Chap. x. 24.—"Let us consider one another, to provoke unto love, and to good works."

Chap. xii. 1.—"Let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us."

Chap. xii. 28.—"Let us have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear."

Chap. xiii. 1.—"Let brotherly love continue."

Chap. xiii. 13.—"Let us go forth therefore unto Him without the camp, bearing his reproach."

Chap. xiii. 15.—"Let us offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually."

SOUTHSEA MISSION, PORTSMOUTH.—The Town Council and Government authorities have again granted permission for a tent to be pitched on Southsea Common, where thousands of persons resort for pastime during the summer months. All being well, Mr. John Denning will begin the usual Gospel services on June 1. In a circular letter he says: "The more I review the past many years, the more I am convinced that our labours have not been in vain in the Lord; therefore I am full of hope for the future. God has of late been giving us much blessing among the young, and I believe our workers are full of expectations of blessing during our tent mission." One of the Bible carriages, which Mr. Denning superintends, is doing good work in Cornwall; the other is laid up temporarily at Dorking, until suitable men have been found to take it in hand. Mr. Denning's address is Myrtle Cottage, St. James's-road, Southsea.

DR. A. T. PIERSON.

THIS earnest advocate of foreign missions has been spending ten days in Dublin and Belfast, pleading the missionary cause to large and interested audiences. He came back post haste from Belfast to be present at the anniversary of the London Missionary Society, but had only a very brief opportunity given to him to address the assemblage. He was to speak at the China Inland Mission meetings on Wednesday last, and expects to spend the closing week of his stay in Edinburgh at the Presbyterian assemblies.

Dr. and Mrs. Pierson hope to sail for America on May 31, in the s.s. Servia. The Doctor has been unanimously elected to the Duff Lectureship of Missions in the Free Church of Scotland. This will necessitate the delivery of a course of six lectures in Edinburgh in 1892-3.

BLIND IN SOUTH INDIA.

DEAR SIR,—For some time past the needs of the blind have been laid on my heart. Nothing has been done for them in South India, and their state is truly sad. Brought up in the belief that blindness is sent as a punishment by some god, their relations care little about them, and their minds as well as their eyes being dark, their life is a blank. I was enabled last year when in England to have many chapters from the Bible, and the whole of John's Gospel, embossed, and on my return to India I had one pupil at once, a young heathen man, who had been raised from begging eight years ago by our late valued missionary, Mrs. Lewis. He is now a bright, happy, and true Christian, most unselfish, and has gone forth to be a teacher of other blind, beginning with seven pupils.

A young man, a Christian, is learning in our bungalow, and we hope soon to make him a teacher. Only £3 a year will support him. Another Christian man wishes to come and learn, and we have several applications week by week. But the pupil who has drawn out our hearts most is a little heathen girl of ten years old, who came to us three weeks ago. She went blind six years ago, from neglected ophthalmia. She has been given to us by her friends, to teach and bring up, and with loving hearts our girls at the Sarah Tucker Institution have welcomed her as one of their number. She can already read most of her letters; she is very fond of music, and we should be grateful if any friend would send her a dulcimer, or other musical instrument to learn. There is another girl wishing to come; but, before we can take in others, we must have help. These children will only cost £3 a year each.

We need a fund for the boarding of adults, men and women, during the time they are with us learning to read; also for the support of children given to our care; and, thirdly, to enable us to employ any who are suitable, after they have learned, to go as teachers of other blind in their own houses. Mrs. Askwith, Christ Church Vicarage, Derby, will forward to us any help your readers may send to her.

Yours faithfully,

ANNE JANE ASKWITH.

Maloga Aboriginal Mission.—The meeting which was to have been held in Exeter Hall in connection with this Mission on May 21 has been postponed to Thursday, the 29th inst., at 4 p.m. Mr. F. A Bevan will preside.

The Gospel in Camp.—Over six hundred militiamen from various parts of Wales and England will be assembled for the annual training under canvas at Brecon, South Wales, by June 2. Tracts, periodicals, and Gospel booklets, carriage paid, will be thankfully received by J. W. Maskell, Llanfaes, Brecon, South Wales.

The Opium Plague.

He is no friend of God or of humanity who attempts to underrate the gravity of the opium scourge, which is not now confined to China alone. India, Burmah, Ceylon, and other parts of Asia are involved. In and from every British port from Bombay to Shanghai, the plague is spreading. Concerning its ravages among China's millions, the voices of Christian missionaries have so often been raised in appeal to the British people that, through hope deferred, many seem in danger of sinking into the dumbness of despair. Not a few there are who work on in silent agony, while the fell fruits of the plague are multiplying around them, thinking what might have been if their appeals had been heeded ten or even five years ago. But is anything too hard for the Lord? May be He has yet a message which British Christians will listen to, and, humbling themselves for the sins of their nation, will do something more than listlessly behold the spread of the great plague of Asia, and stand unmoved, while, amidst the wail of heathen anguish, hell's gatherers of the slain cry, "Bring out your dead."

From Bombay to Pekin, I have now been an eye-witness of the effects of this pestilence. Among the letters I received upon this subject from China, before I entered upon this journey, was one from a China Inland missionary at Yunnan Fu. He wrote: "Our work lies amongst the wreck of a nation ruined by the English. In this province, one of the largest in China, it is a generally acknowledged fact that seven out of eight of the men are slaves to opium. Some go so far as to say nine out of ten. From personal experience, I should think the latter estimate is as true as the former. Large numbers of the women smoke. The mandarins smoke, and their retainers, with scarcely an exception. We come across cases where children are born with the craving."

The province thus referred to is in the extreme south-west of China, adjoining Burmah. A few days since, when I was at Tung-chow, within a few hours of Pekin, I had to listen to similar testimony as to the extent of the opium curse from an American Congregational missionary, who had recently been in North Shansi, a province at the other extreme of China, where it joins Mongolia. In both instances the testimony is based upon personal observation, supported and emphasised by the statements of the Chinese themselves. In some other provinces, happily, the opium habit is less universal; but EVERYWHERE THE PLAGUE IS SPREADING.

Having briefly indicated the extent of the opium curse, a few facts may be given to throw light upon its nature. Many good people in Great Britain have been misled by the astounding statement, repeatedly made by certain Englishmen in official positions, that taking opium is no more harmful than smoking tobacco or drinking alcoholic liquor. I can say confidently that the victims of the opium habit, whether in India or China, hold a different opinion. Confirmed opium smokers do not condone, but hate, the vice that holds them in its relentless grasp. It is pitiable to hear them plead their inability to throw off its galling chains. In China, wife and children are often sold to satisfy the hated but imperious habit. A few, proportionately, enter missionary opium refuges, where they are usually kept away from the fateful drug by lock and key; but the invariable testimony I have received from medical missionaries since I landed in China is that, except the small percentage who become Christians while under treatment, from 80 to 90 per cent. of those who leave as cured ultimately relapse. The estimate of the habit by those who have not contracted it is illustrated by a case in which one of a family possessing an undivided property having taken to smoking opium, with its accompanying vices, had his sight destroyed by his brothers as the only means of saving the family from pecuniary ruin.

CHINESE CHRISTIANS ARE UNANIMOUS

in condemning the opium. I have heard the expression of their feelings in large gatherings. No opium taker can be admitted into church membership; but many members, alas! have had to be disowned on account of falling or relapsing into the vice, including some of the most prominent and promising ordained native preachers.

If the opium habit is so cruel when contracted in mature years, let Christian parents who read these lines consider what it must be when acquired in childhood. It is not an uncommon sight in a Chinese opium den to see a mother smoking opium, with her baby propped up beside her. But nearer home than China, namely, in licensed opium dens in the commercial capital of India, I have seen little children, from three years old upwards, lying in a comatose state from opium, grown, manufactured, and sold under the auspices of the British Government. Oh, the hell within, against which the adult of such a childhood has to struggle. As I have gazed upon little children in Indian and Chinese opium dens, their lives thus damned for the sake of bringing a tainted revenue into the British Indian exchequer, I have thought of the day when He who once said, "Suffer little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not," will sit upon his throne of judgment. In that day the mouth of every implicated British administrator, legislator, and opium merchant, and of their apologists, will be stopped. They will call upon the mountains and rocks to fall upon them, and hide them. But well will it be in that great day of revealing and judgment for those of unseared and pitying heart, who dare in this crisis to place the value of souls above the

REVENUE FROM THEIR DESTRUCTION.

It has been said by certain cynical and superficial Englishmen, "If the Chinese ruin themselves by opium, that is their own affair; why do they not abstain from it?" If thousands of the sons and daughters of respectable parents in nominally Christian countries fall annually into the condition of habitual drunkards, is it to be wondered at that hundreds of thousands in an unchristianised land like China yearly fall victims to the much more fascinating opium vice, not to speak of the children who are born with the craving? It needs a residence among Asiatic races to comprehend how fascinating this vice is, and especially to understand how awful the struggle that is required to break it off, in which so few succeed. Evil habits are always contagious, but more emphatically it is thus with the great plague of Asia, which breaks down the power of the will, and holds its victims with a grip equal to that of impurity, with a legion of other devils also. The plea of "Am I my brother's keeper?" by the tempter of his brother, the opium producer, and his aiders and abettors, is not more likely to avail than when it was first uttered by Cain, and he was driven forth as a fugitive and vagabond. To-day, in consequence of the plague which Great Britain has let loose upon China, India, and other parts of Asia, the voice of our brother's blood is

CRYING UNTO GOD FROM THE GROUND.

The opium plague does not discriminate as to class. The worst wrecks perhaps are seen among the poor, whose penury leads them to smoke a compound composed largely of the ashes of the first smoking of opium, a preparation said to be more poisonous than the unmixed drug. The pestilence finds its victims in all grades. A Chinese gentleman of good social position, in telling me at Canton that the opium habit was the greatest evil that had ever fallen upon China, said that of the sixteen of his father's family, eleven were addicted to the habit. Few things in Chinese history are more pathetic than the experience of the Emperor Tan Kwang. Three of his sons had died through the opium habit; and, finding the curse rapidly spreading among his subjects, he ordered Commissioner Lin to proceed to Canton in 1839 to stop the smuggling of opium into China. The monarch wept, as, recounting the dire effects of the drug, he sent forth Commissioner Lin on his momentous mission. Then followed, in the interests of rapacious and criminal greed, and in defiance of the elementary principles of morality, one of the blackest pages in the history of Britain's dealings with other nations—the first opium war. The Emperor died while the plague which had laid waste his own family was still forced upon his people at the point of British bayonets.

China's greatest living statesman, Li Hung Chang, said in 1881, in reference to China's consent to legalise the opium traffic, having endured two wars, and paid vast "indemnities" to Great Britain, that the legalisation of the traffic was not from choice, but because China submitted to "the adverse decision of arms." Notwithstanding the audacious charges of insincerity made by some Englishmen, I record my belief, the outcome of information from high sources, that China's leading statesmen detest the traffic. If their protests have grown less urgent, it is not, as is sometimes alleged by the partisans of the scourge, that their consciences have been bribed by the revenue derived from imported opium, but because they have feared that continued remonstrance might bring a recurrence of the calamities which attended former protests. Effective action to put down the native growth is impossible until the foreign import is stopped. Do my country people, do the home churches, realise that the action of the Chinese Government is paralysed against the curse which is ravaging, impoverishing, demoralising, and, as sure as the eternal law of cause and effect, tending to the break up of their nation, because of the shadow of the relentless and brutal hand of British power, already gory with injustice, which they fear again to offend?

In the interests of China and India alike, and of all Malaysia, I ask my justice-loving country people to intervene. The plague can only be effectually stayed by cutting off its source. Let no consideration of so-called expediency hinder an irresistible demand for the prohibition of the growth, as well as the sale, of opium in India, that thus China and Malaysia also may no longer be cursed by its export.—Yours for Asia's salvation, ALFRED S. DYER.

WORKERS WANTED.

WANTED.—A medical missionary for Kerak; a medical missionary for Suakin, on the Red Sea; a head master for an English and Eurasian school in Coimbatore, South India; also a lady, with medical or hospital training preferred, for Amritsar, North India.

These are some of the special wants of "The Missionary Bureau" at the present moment; the secretary will be glad to hear from such as may be led to offer for these posts, and to furnish full particulars. The committee also ask the prayers and practical sympathy of Christians, that those who go forth may be sustained and maintained amidst the hardships and privations of their holy calling. All communications should be addressed "The Missionary Bureau, 186, Aldersgate-street, London, E.C."

BIRD FAIR.—In a recent letter, Miss Macpherson, of the Home of Industry, writes:—"Bird Fair becomes more and more deeply absorbing as the converts from it become our fellow helpers. I need another fortune to meet the demand for picture tracts; the people delight to receive them, and men of the lowest strata here are finding Jesus. Miss Radcliffe's recent ten days' mission was a great blessing to many a poor fellow."

MAY MEETINGS.

Marylebone Medical Mission.

POVERTY and wretchedness are certainly not confined to the East of London. There is a large district in the North-West with as many poor and miserable homes as in any part of the metropolis. Dr. Chambers, the founder of this Mission, gathered a few friends about him at Portman Rooms last week, to tell how medical aid opens to the Gospel hearts and homes that are closed to ordinary means of grace, or visitors. Three days a week, the forlorn, the wretched, and the outcast are gathered for a short service, after which each patient is seen and prescribed for separately. Those too ill to attend the dispensary are treated at home. Last year 12,522 patients attended, and 2760 visits were paid. Food and fuel are provided for the needy as far as funds permit, bedding is lent, and a variety of meetings and clubs are held, care being taken not to encourage idleness or want of thrift. Since the starting of the Mission in 1876, vast numbers of sick have been cured or relieved, drunkards have been reclaimed, and many souls converted to God.

The chairman, Sir ROBERT PHAYRE, narrated how Dr. Elmslie opened Cashmere to the Gospel, by putting into practice the parable of the good Samaritan. Canon MONEY said some of the richest jewels have been found in the depths of degradation and misery. He had never known a word for Christ to the sick and dying, to have a disturbing effect. The messenger of blessing to body and soul must be doubly welcome. Rev. JOHN MCNEILL said the man best qualified for medical mission work is he who has "a good bit of the woman" in him (and what true man has not?) and who seeks to be a reproduction of Jesus Christ. The one-talent man keeps himself isolated and independent, with desperate care; but we do well to ask how much good Samaritan work we have each done, between the two great floods of talk, last May and this.

Country Towns Mission.

"IN every house they ceased not to teach and preach Jesus Christ" formed the text of remarks by the Hon. P. CARTERET HILL, at the meeting in the Council-room of Exeter Hall, on Wednesday evening last week. The words stand at the head of the fifty-third report, and, as the chairman said, well fit the Mission's apostolic methods of bringing the Gospel to bear upon individuals between whom and churches and chapels there is no link. A Berkshire clergyman wrote: "The missionary is a real blessing and comfort to me and my parishioners. If he were my own curate, I could not esteem him more highly."

Four of the Society's missionaries spoke. Mr. WILLIAM HOLDEN (Burton-on-Trent) had been nearly twenty years in the work. Nothing but a living Christ will meet the spiritual needs of the people. Not a door had been shut against him as a messenger of the cross, but he found hearts and ears open to the old, old story. His little sketches of direct and affectionate dealing with various characters delighted the meeting. Mr. WILLIAM MORRIS (Ottery St. Mary) described his work in thirteen villages and hamlets, spread over thirty miles. As the result of prayer, a meeting was started in a poacher's house, from whence twelve converted souls were scattered in various directions as Christ's witnesses. From the visit of a farmer's two daughters, living in an adjoining village, the father's house was opened, and thirty or forty persons now meet there once a fortnight with great blessing. Mr. WILLIAM A. BULLEN (New Forest) exhibited a gypsy tent, and spoke of his contests with the shyness, ignorance, and superstition of the dark-skinned people among whom he and his wife find fruit from Christian labour. Mrs. BULLEM's expressions of love for and devotion to her work, with strong confidence in God, made a marked impression.

Rev. J. E. LINNELL, vicar of Pavenham, Beds., did not believe that Christ should suffer in order that the clergy may be exalted. He delighted to stand shoulder to shoulder with men whom he found endowed with grace and with special gifts for peculiar work.

Band of Hope Union.

THIS institution, which has close upon two million enrolled members, and these the flower of the rising generation, must wield a tremendous and a growing influence in the contest that rages all up and down the land with King Alcohol and his battalions. The anniversary gatherings were held last week at Exeter Hall, and were characterised by more than ordinary enthusiasm. The temperance question has been so often thrashed out that it is not easy to say anything novel about it. This year the black shadow of "Compensation" seemed to brood over the proceedings, and gave colour to most of the utterances. At the breakfast, Canon BARKER excelled himself in the force and fire of his holy indignation at a proposal to reward liquor purveyors, if, perchance, they should retire from their body and soul destroying trade.

The evening meeting in the great hall was crowded with teetotalers, young and old, and the feeling of the audience was kept pretty well up to boiling point from first to last. Mr. WALKELY'S report was full of encouraging notes of progress. The chairman, Mr. GEORGE WILLIAMS, seemed inclined for counsels of peace with respect to the perturbation in the House of Commons; but succeeding speakers urged war to the knife and to the death. Rev. J. W. HORSLEY said the idea of "compensation," horrible in itself, was simply grotesque in view of the proposals made. The sums to be set apart by the Government for buying up licences were about as adequate for the purpose as if he were to offer to buy all the watches in the audience with a single golden sovereign. Mr. Horsley was intensely practical. He urged that a united temperance council should be established in every parish in England. Then he wanted a society for the due enforcement of the existing liquor laws. We must try and get female attendance behind drinking bars prohibited; meantime, barmen and barmaids ought to have shorter hours of work. At present they are the white slaves of England. Temperance literature must be scattered broadcast: teetotalers, he thought, were a little stingy in their expenditure on this score. Finally, Mr. Horsley addressed a very earnest appeal to any non-abstainer before him to act the part of the strong in bearing the burdens of the weak. He told how he took the pledge fourteen years ago at a Band of Hope meeting, and how his seven children were all intelligent abstainers.

Next came a rhetorical but effective speech from that ardent Welshman, Rev. OSSIAN DAVIES, whose eloquent periods evoked thundering cheers. He exposed the gross inconsistency of planting temptations at every street corner, and then sending to prison those who are weak enough to fall into such snares. We reap a revenue of thirty millions of money from the miseries of our people, and yet we call ourselves a Christian nation. He would fling this blood-money out of England's exchequer. The voice of science is now dead against the fancied virtues of the drink, and the speaker adjured his fellow men to stick to the pump and the teapot if they would lead pure and healthy lives. As for "compensation," he would have none of it; he would almost as soon think of compensating a retired highwayman. "Retribution" is a better word, in view of the annual destruction of thousands of Britons through this horrible drink. Away to the North Pole with all icy indifference on this subject, and let us send such a thunder-shout to St. Stephen's as will make our legislators pause before they frame this iniquity by a law!

After such thrilling appeals, the statistical speech of Dr. F. R. LEES seemed a little tame. Nevertheless he made powerful use of a return recently made by 178 members of the medical profession, as to the relative proportions of their patients who were moderate drinkers, careless drinkers, excessive drinkers, and absolute drunkards. Roughly speaking, the result showed them to constitute, 40½, 27½, 15½, and 16½ per cent. respectively. On the basis of these figures, Dr. Lees showed that the present population of England would furnish more than three and a half millions of excessive drinkers and absolute drunkards. If such awful facts were faced, he thought icy indifference ought soon to vanish to the North Pole, or some equally remote region.

Mr. J. H. RAPER submitted a resolution on Sunday closing, and appealed in his characteristically pungent way for help in the forthcoming great national Band of Hope bazaar in Exeter Hall (July 7—12). Then Rev. G. A. BENNETTS told how, as secretary of the Wesleyan Methodist Temperance Committee of the First London District, he had been working almost day and night to make the members of Parliament understand that there could be no vested rights in a wrong. The liquor traffic has grown rich on the tears, the sighs, the groans, and the damnation of tens of thousands. How can there be such a thing as a "right," vested or otherwise, at the back of such a trade? He bemoaned the apathy of professed teetotalers, and declared that opinion is worth next to nothing if it is not translated into action. Quoting Mr. Gladstone's famous dictum, that the evils of the drink are equal to those of famine, war, and pestilence combined, Mr Bennetts expressed the view that the man who said such a thing and all those who agree with him ought to unite in saying—"Not compensation, but extinction." This proposal of the Government has brought us to the Waterloo of our temperance movement, and the speaker's advice was "Up Guards, and at them." He proposed a No-Compensation resolution, which was seconded by the veteran THOMAS WHITTAKER, of Scarborough, and passed by acclamation. Clearly, if the voice of Exeter Hall were to prevail in this matter, "compensation" would die a very premature death.

House of Rest for Christian Workers.

THE growth of Christian work at home and abroad increases the claims of the labourers themselves upon the sympathy and consideration of Christian hearts. The Hon. HENRY NOEL, in presiding at Miss Mason's meeting, in the Lower Exeter Hall, on Thursday afternoon last week, emphasised this fact, remarking that the temples of the Holy Ghost ought to be kept in perfect repair. The main point of the report was the necessity of providing £3500 by the beginning of August, to supplement two donations, £1000 and £500, towards the purchase and furnishing of a large freehold house in the Finchley-road, to which it is intended to remove the work, in the autumn, for increased accommodation, with the addition of a Home for aged workers.

Rev. SYDENHAM L. DIXON depicted the need of a rested body and a restful spirit in a restless and impatient age. Dr. MCKILLIAM said those to whom Christ is precious ought to care for his servants. Mrs. EVERED POOLE said God uses velvet-covered spurs to push forward those who rest in the wrong place. His arithmetic is that we never communicate blessing without taking it out of ourselves.

Miss MASON seemed to make it a special point that real rest involves contact with Christ; while her Home embraces all denominations, and the prayers of the inmates cover all parts of God's kingdom and work. To encourage and comfort God's weary workers is service unto Himself. Rev. HENRY SHARPE said work must be the outcome of life, and quality must be cultivated rather than quantity; hence the value of quiet rest for learning lessons of self-abnegation, self-abandonment, and self-consecration.

Rev. W. FULLER GOOCH made a short sermon on a long text—a May meeting list. As we cannot, except in prayer, aid all the objects named therein, God's Word may guide us in selection. We shall then find that his worn-out servants are dear to Him, in contrast to the caste, the regard for high names and heavy purses, too often found in philanthropic circles. Mr. J. E. MATHIESON thanked God for Miss Mason and her House of Rest, and wished her a full treasury to meet all demands.

Female Education in the East.

THE Ladies' Missionary Breakfast, arranged by the Society for promoting Female Education in the East, took place recently at Exeter Hall. Mrs. WEATHERLY presided, and wecomedl the assembled guests and friends, subsequently giving some details respecting the work of the Society, and the sphere of its operations. Miss WEBB exhibited a painting, executed by a Chinese artist forty-five years ago, of the first school for women ever opened in the Empire of China. It was established at Ningpo by Miss Aldersey, who had been a member of the committee, and had gone out as their first honorary missionary. She held it in the ancestral hall of the house she occupied.

Much interest was excited by the presence of Mrs. AHOK, from Foochow, whose history is now well known. She appeared in her own picturesque costume, that of a Chinese lady of high rank, and spoke with fluency and spirit, her glowing words being readily translated by Mrs. R. W. Stewart, of the C.M.S. Mission in her city. Mrs. Ahok expressed great pleasure in having the opportunity of meeting so many members of the Society that sent forth the missionary, Miss Foster, who was the means of leading her to Christ some years ago. She eloquently and pathetically pleaded the cause of her countrywomen sitting in the darkness of heathenism, and touchingly spoke of their condition. They are conscious of sin, which drives them to the worship of their gods (which she described as nothing less than the worship of devils), from whom they can get no rest to their souls. She earnestly appealed for more Christian workers, and stated that in Foochow alone a hundred ladies would not be too many for such an extensive field of labour.

Miss SYBIL CARTER, delegate of the Episcopal Church in America, enforced Mrs. Ahok's cry for more workers, not only on account of the desolate condition of the heathen, of which she had seen so much in her recent missionary tour round the world, but also because of the immense population of China. "It is such a full country," she said. Miss Carter gave various illustrations of this truth, and bore very pleasing testimony to the value and efficiency of the labours of the Society's missionaries which she had witnessed in Japan, China, and the Holy Land. She spoke especially of Japan, in which empire she had made a lengthened stay; and she told how she had rejoiced to see the happy unanimity existing there among the ladies working in connection with various societies.

Miss PACKER, one of the Society's own missionaries, quietly and touchingly gave some incidents of her thirty-five years of work in India, first in a large orphanage, and, for several years past, in zenana work in Orissa. Her plain, unvarnished story furnished cause for deep gratitude for the rich blessing which the Lord of the harvest has so manifestly granted to her faithful labours.

Cruelty to Children.

IN the burning words of a speaker at the Mansion House last week, this is "the most cowardly, most hideous, and most odious of all kinds of crime." It has taken the English public some time to be convinced of the prevalence, to any considerable extent, of this evil. Thanks, however, to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, or, more correctly, to the undaunted efforts of Rev. Benjamin Waugh, the terrible facts have been brought to light; and there is an earnest desire that such a state of things should cease and determine. The annual meeting of the Society in the Egyptian Hall of the Mansion House was quite remarkable for the composition of the platform. There are few causes that would weld in a common sentiment Christian, Jew, and Agnostic; Whig, Tory, and Radical; Protestant and Roman Catholic; State Churchman and Nonconformist. The representative of Roman Catholicism, Cardinal Manning, was not able to fulfil his engagement, through ill health.

Mr. Waugh has a habit on those occasions of asking the audience to regard the report as read. We take leave to say that this is a mistake. Eloquent and earnest speakers are all very well, but people cannot be expected to have an intelligent, adequate, and abiding interest in a Society such as this without having the facts relating to its work burned into their hearts by way of their ears. Mr. Waugh does not do justice either to his own efforts or to his special clients, the innocent and suffering children, by merely scattering about slips of paper with a lot of dry statistics on them. We ask attention, however, to the following excerpts from the printed résumé, with a suggestion that all our kind-hearted readers should write to the office of the Society, 7, Harpur-street, Bloomsbury, London, W.C., for a copy of the complete report:—

Cruelty is not confined to wretched dwellings. Pianos and bric-à-brac may be in the drawing-rooms of people below brute beasts to their offspring. Betting vies with drinking, and callous, selfish indulgence and lust with them both in heaping suffering on children. And of these evils, alas! no class has a monopoly. Only the honest poor seem exempt from them all. We have never had a case of cruelty in the people who go before the Sweating Commission.

The Society's work in the nation during its existence has been enormous. It has included 539 cases of ill-treatment (these under the first half-year of the new Act, ill-treatment not being a crime before), 1174 cases of assault, 227 cases of starvation (in 121 cases ending in death), 1935 cases of neglect, 153 cases of abandonment, 277 cases of exposure (cases of almost nakedness in cold), 552 cases of causing to beg, 47 cases of dangerous performances, 246 cases of immorality (often with injury), and 164 cases of various other kinds. In these the welfare of 10,628 children was involved. It is a terrible fact that, in dealing with these, 215 years of imprisonment were inflicted, and £326 fines. The members of the Society, which in the first year numbered 225, are now 1700. Its income in the first year was £903; its income now is £8860.

Two years ago it began to extend itself into the country, its idea being one head, and heart, and purse, with vitalised limbs over all the land. Its name was accordingly changed from the local one of "The London" to "The National" Society. It has now 60 Aid Committees, which in the past year have dealt with cases affecting the welfare of 5550 children, with 256 convictions, amounting to a total of 38 years' imprisonment, and £105 fines.

as we have indicated, were all in the line of hot indignation at such wrongs committed against the helpless children, and of fervent desire that these children should be protected in the most effectual way. The LORD MAYOR was fully sympathetic. The ARCHBISHOP OF YORK confessed that till lately he had not been sufficiently enlightened as to the need for the Society, but he means to carry his share of the burden in the time to come. He called for further legislation to prevent the abuse of child insurance and baby farming. The DUKE OF ABERCORN extolled the kindness of the Queen in consenting to patronise the Society. As being specially interested in Ireland, he rejoiced that a branch of the Society established in Dublin had set to work in a satisfactory manner.

Mr. JOHN MORLEY, M.P., in moving the thanks of the meeting to those gentlemen in Parliament who had specially helped in passing the Act of last year through the legislature, said there could be no better proof of the wise methods of the Society than the fact that so many eminent lawyers had approved of its efforts. He chimed in with the suggestion that fresh legislation is needed in connection with child insurance. While he held generally by the maxim that "an Englishman's house is his castle," he held with equal conviction that domestic ruffianism is as proper an object for the interference of the criminal law as any other kind of ruffianism. Chief Rabbi ADLER was very pathetic. Quoting the words of the ancient prophet, "Can a woman forget her sucking child, that she should not have compassion on her own son," he said that, alas, we are compelled to believe such things do take place even in these enlightened days. In the course of a weighty and high-toned speech, Mr. PICTON, M.P., also cited from Scripture the words of the seer: "I returned and considered all the oppressions that are done under the sun; and beheld the tears of such as were oppressed and they had no comforter; and on the side of their oppressors there was power, but they had no comforter." Happily, matters are improved since then. The Bible—indeed, the very seer who wrote these words—has done much to improve them. Power is not now always on the side of the wrongdoers, and the law is proving stronger than the oppressor. Still the law needs to be strengthened, not only in order to punish cruelty, but to raise that which so many make the standard of conscience. Mr. MUNDELLA, M.P., told something of the difficulties that had to be encountered in Parliament last session, before the Act that constitutes "the Charter of the English child" passed into law. That Act is working a marvellous change, not only in the prevention of direct cruelty to children, but of that form of cruelty which consists of idle dissolute parents living on the earnings of their infant offspring. Another speaker was Mr. MONRO, Chief Commissioner of Police, who expressed great sympathy with, and confidence in, the work of the Society, and said the police were only too glad to co-operate.

It was announced that, to meet a deficit of £4000 on the year's work, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Morrison give £2000, and a promise of £1000 annually for three years. It was also stated that the Bishop of Peterborough will immediately introduce into the House of Lords a bill dealing with infant insurance.

Seamen's Christian Friend Society.

SAILORS representing almost every maritime country on the globe filled the gallery of the Lower Exeter Hall on the occasion of the annual meeting of the Seamen's Christian Friend Society. A free display of bunting gave a characteristic air to the hall. The attendance of those interested in the work was large and influential. Rev. G. J. HILL, the secretary, stated that London, Liverpool, and nineteen other ports lay within the field of the Society's operations; and among the agencies employed are twenty missionaries, eight sailors' rests, several reading-rooms, mission boats, smacks, &c. Last year about one hundred religious services were held every week afloat and ashore; many libraries had been placed on ships, not a few cases of destitute seamen relieved, and much other good accomplished.

Mr. GEORGE WILLIAMS, president, said it was a matter for gratitude to God that He had put into the hands of the little island of Great Britain one half of the carrying trade of the world. Everyone knows the perils to which the sailors are exposed on shore. That Society offered to the sailor refuges from besetting snares, and imparted to him a knowledge of God's redeeming love, and not to the British sailor only, but to seamen of every people and tongue.

Rev. F. B. MEYER having warmly pleaded for the co-operation of Christian ladies in this work, Dr. DONALD FRASER set forth the claims of the Society. Legislation has done much to improve the sailor, but the Gospel much more. He firmly believed that no other industrial class has been reformed so much within the past forty years as the sailor. Seamen are now more temperate, less profane, and more thrifty than before. The swearing, swaggering type of Jack Tar is nearly, if not quite, extinct. But the snares in the path of Jack when he steps ashore with his pay in his pocket are still great. Then the land sharks, crimps, rumhole keepers, and the like get ready to catch him, empty his pockets, and lead him down to perdition. It is well, then, to have a Society like this at hand, with its many counter-influences, to save the sailor from his foes. He hoped it would not suffer from want of willing hands and ample contributions.

Mrs. HILL gave a short address, earnestly entreating Christian ladies to come and help personally in the work. The loud applause of the sailors in the gallery emphasised the pathetic appeal by Mrs. Hill. A sailor spoke of his experience as a Christian. He had first signed the temperance pledge; that led to solemn thought, and finally to his conversion. Even on ships where there was not a single avowed Christian but himself, he knew he had an influence for good.

Rev. BURMAN CASSIN eloquently described the beneficent functions of the Society, and Mr. WILLIAMS, in a solemn and impressive way, expounded the way of salvation to the sailors present, who listened with eager attention as he pleaded with them to accept Jesus as their Saviour and Lord.

London Missionary Society.

THERE was a large assemblage in Exeter Hall on Thursday last, on the occasion of the annual meeting of the London Missionary Society. Sir CHARLES AITCHISON presided, and delivered an opening address, evincing a cordial sympathy with the mission cause. Far from missions being "played out," as some have alleged, they are only just beginning; they will not be "played out" until all the darkness becomes "light in the Lord," and earth's remotest bounds have "learned Messiah's name.' Having maintained that the mission field is rich in results as well as promises, the speaker referred to the outlook in India, in which he has spent thirty years. Since the middle of the present century Christianity has been growing at a rate more than five times as fast as the population—a circumstance that can only be explained by direct conversions from heathenism. The people of India have no such idea as that missions are "played out," for in their alarm they are endeavouring to adapt Hinduism to the changed times. Like the Ephesians of old, they see that the world is being "turned upside down." Holding that the present is a critical time, Sir Charles said that there is need for all possible godly influence, whether schools and colleges, or spiritually minded men, to enlighten the people of India, and lead them to the cross of Christ.

REV. R. WARDLAW THOMPSON,

foreign secretary of the Society, presented an abstract of the ninety-sixth report. Satisfaction was expressed at the manner in which the Congregational Churches have come to the support of the Society, valuable help from Presbyterian and other churches being also recognised. Special mention was made of the energy with which members of Sunday-schools and Young Men's Missionary Bands have thrown their hearts into the cause. The expenditure for the year reached £121,455—some £300 below the income. The outlook was replete with encouragement, although account was taken of not a few difficulties and drawbacks.

In many fields the crisis of mission work is becoming acute and urgent. To such a point has the promise reached that, humanly speaking, either glorious victory or signal failure seems to depend simply upon the promptitude or dilatoriness of the churches in following up the successes already gained. If, with resolution and without delay, the Church now sends the required reinforcements, there will be speedy victory; if these supplies are held back, the longed-for fruits of toil and conflict will be lost. In several countries it is becoming painfully evident that itinerant preaching does not suffice to gather a permanent Christian community. It is impossible to build up strong churches among weak people, except by settling down in their midst. Especially in China and India is the importance felt of efforts being made to consolidate the work.

REV. C. A. BERRY,

of Wolverhampton, enlarged upon the inspiring character of mission work. There is a terrible tendency to spend time and knowledge in the spheres of criticism and investigation; a study of missionary reports is calculated to do much to keep alive the interest in living Christianity. He suggested that an early day should be set apart in the churches for the consideration of the latest report. The people will find it as good as many sermons are, and ministers will realise an opportunity of getting very near to the heart of Christ and their flocks.

Urging his brethren to throw their hearts into the cause, Mr. Berry said: It is Christ we want to take to men. It is easy to philosophise when we have Him. But without Him what does life mean, and whither does all tend? What would our life be in any of its departments, apart from the interpretation which He brought into it, and the salvation of which He gives us the joyous experience? Christ for the world, we sing. A religion that has God for its centre must have mankind for its circumference. Nothing less will satisfy Christ's heart than to be the King of all men, and nothing shall bring peace and emancipation to man, save living and loving fellowship with the Son of Man.

Rev. J. DUTHIE, of Nagercoil, Travancore, who has for more than thirty years been labouring in India, pressed home the spiritual needs of the millions of that country. Rev. W. ROBY FLETCHER, of Adelaide, South Australia, rejoiced to state that missions are engaging increasing attention in the Australasian colonies.

of Philadelphia, delivered a rousing address. The meeting had already been protracted to an undesirable length, so our gifted friend had to be brief. Though few in number, his words were very weighty. Referring to the "miracles of missions," he related the story of Gospel work in Tahiti. For fourteen years the missionaries laboured without seeing even one case of conversion; but at last the harvest came. A translation of the Scriptures having been made, Mr. Nott read John iii. 16 to the people. "Read it again," they said, and again, and again. They objected, "It means you, and not us"; but Mr. Nott pointed out that it said, "Whosoever believeth on Him." "Then," exclaimed the people, "your God shall be our God, for we never heard of such love before!" That early experience was a type of all the work of the London Missionary Society. First, the preachers have gone to desperately degraded people; second, they have patiently waited for the first-fruits of their labour; third, they have laid the foundation of a native church, in the translation of the Scriptures; and fourth, they have lived to reap the fruits in the fear of God.

The mission crisis has arrived in many lands. A crisis is a time when an opportunity occurs which must be embraced; and should a lethargic Church let the present day of opportunity go by, work for God will not be done. The devil never neglects an open door, though the Church does. This is no time to wait, and linger, and vacillate. God is marching on. The changes that are taking place are more colossal than have ever occurred in history. The first convert in Tahiti came after fourteen years' apparently fruitless toil; now there are 750,000 converts in Western Polynesia. The work done in various countries of the earth is only partly visible, because Christianity is mining beneath the surface, as well as making impressions above. The visible institutions are only like the shafts in a mining district; they indicate that operations are going on below. In conclusion, Dr. Pierson spoke a few words on Christain living and giving, maintaining that on the latter head the Church has much yet to learn. When we arrive at the point of real self-denial for Christ, we shall see new progress in the kingdom of God, and sanctified giving will be accompanied by a purer type of living than has been known since Apostolic days.

Evangelical Alliance Conversazione.

THE interesting conversazione at Regent's Park College one bright afternoon last week may be aptly described as "a microcosm of Christendom." The company was the largest of any that has assembled on a similar occasion for many years past, and none has been more representative of the real unity of evangelical believers. There were those present not only from the various religious denominations in England and Scotland and Ireland, but Christian unity had its representatives from France, Holland, Denmark, Egypt, Persia, India, China, Madagascar, the United States, and Canada.

The pictures which several of these brethren from afar drew of the spiritual condition of their respective countries was obviously impartial, and free from the exaggeration of colouring. Nothing could be more conscientious than the account which Rev. J. ROWLANDS gave of Madagascar; it was painfully accurate. While, of course, admitting that there had been successful Christain work in that interesting island, he deprecated as quite premature the proposal to withdraw the missionaries labouring there and to transfer them to some other part of the heathen world; because, said he, but a very small portion of the Malagasy nation has, after all, been influenced and won by Christianity. The announcement came with startling effect: "To-day, quite three-fourths of the people have not even heard of the name of Christ, and are still heathen in every sense of the term." These dark patches in the outlook were, however, relieved by many rays of light in regions where the glad Gospel is winning its widening way. "Advance all along the line" was the report also of Dr. LANSING, from Cairo, who, however, had to deplore the demoralising effects of the English contract system in Egypt in the desecration of the Lord's day, and this on the part of men from Christian England! One law broken, others followed, and Dr. Lansing hinted at many a sad ending of lives cut short by sin. Mohammedans were, however, known to have embraced Christianity at the fearful risk of confiscation of property and expatriation or exile. A voice from China spoke through Rev. J. SADLER, of Amoy, who, repeating the suggestion of a godly Chinaman, urged witnessing for Christ by influential men as one of the best means of getting hold of the upper classes in China.

A spirit of prayer prevailed in the meeting. A cry went up to heaven for help on behalf of oppressed Christians, especially in the Baltic provinces of Russia, and also in Turkey. Supplication was stimulated by the appeal of Rev. J. D. KILBURN, of Russia, who, unable to attend, wrote: "Ask the friends to remember Russia in prayer. This is, at present, almost the only way we can help her, and prayer—true, earnest, believing prayer—never fails."

The case for the Baltic provinces was stated by the secretary, Mr. A. J. ARNOLD. For twenty years the question of religious liberty has occupied, more or less, the attention of the Evangelical Alliance. During the last seven years the Lutheran Christians in the Baltic provinces have been subjected to renewed oppression. Six years ago the Council caused a memorial to be presented to the Czar, appealing for religious freedom on behalf of all Christians in the Empire, and setting forth the facts concerning the Lutherans in the Baltic provinces. Mr. Pobedonoszeff replied to the memorial. Then head of the Holy Synod of the Greek Church, he asserted that Russia was the only country in which religious liberty was fully understood. That assertion the facts did not justify. In Russia the circulation of the Bible is permitted with the sanction of members of the Royal Family as well as of the dignitaries of the Greek Church. The Baptists in the Baltic provinces at least are not persecuted by the Greek Church, but the Lutherans are, and it is surmised this may be in part owing to the determined attempt of the governmental authorities to Russianise the people, and to stamp out Germanising influences. Another cause of the oppression suggested is the attempt to prove that the Lutherans are disloyal; whereas, beyond a doubt, these pastors are strictly loyal to the Emperor. The difficulty is to bring this fact under his direct notice, that it may have its proper effect upon the Czar's mind. The Evangelical Alliance has, during the past year obtained reliable information at first hand, by means of an agent they have employed, who has been travelling through the Baltic Provinces. Part only of the facts he has collected have been made public; for, as Mr. Arnold properly pointed out, an imprudent disclosure of details, even of cases of religious intolerance, often accentuates the sufferings of those whose cause the Alliance pleads. As each provincial Governor is an Emperor in his own sphere, religious intolerance may be permitted locally, which would not have the sanction of the central Government, if the latter were only made aware of it. This lends support to the belief that the Emperor of Russia cannot really know the exact state of affairs in the Baltic provinces, where now there are 330 Lutheran pastors; three in banishment, one, however, being allowed to act as pastor of a small church in Asiatic Russia; and sixty-six other pastors on their trial, though many of these, it is hoped, will be acquitted, since the charges against them are so trivial. One result of the persecutions, contains this element of consolation: the pastors are being drawn nearer to God, and are now preaching the simple Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ rather than the sacraments of their Church. As Russia seems to have promised, when the Provinces were conceded to her, that she would protect the Lutheran Church, these suffering brethren have special claims to the sympathy of evangelical Christians throughout the world. The Council of the Alliance are in constant communication with the German branch, and any measures deemed wise and prudent they undertake to adopt on behalf of the oppressed Lutheran Christians in the Baltic Provinces.

With respect to Turkey, the blessing of God has attended the efforts of the Evangelical Alliance during the past year in three cases of oppression; and a significant proof of the activity of the Council was the issue at the end of the last session of Parliament of voluminous correspondence with the Foreign Secretary of Her Majesty's Government. The projected International Conference at Florence, in April, 1891, Mr. Arnold touched upon in some detail, and he predicted that, by the blessing of God, this œcumenical gathering would greatly serve the evangelical cause throughout Italy. It will clear and sweeten the religious atmosphere, as the Italians have been disposed somehow to look upon Protestantism and Evangelicalism as synonymous terms with unbelief and infidelity! Florence, the scene of the martyrdom of Savonarola and of the release of the Madiai from prison, forty years ago, through the efforts of the Evangelical Alliance, will invest the ninth International Conference of the members and friends of this Society with associations of deep historical interest, thus the occasion, the history, and the place will combine to attract Christian pilgrims from all quarters of the globe.

The closing addresses were given by Pasteur Cremer and M. Bouchard, the latter appealing on behalf of a Protestant church at Beaune, and the former describing his mission labours in remote and semi-heathenish parts of France. General Noble presided at the conversazione in the absence of Lord Polwarth, President of the Alliance.

The Railway Mission.

RAILWAY-MEN and their friends congregated in good force on Thursday evening last in Exeter Hall, on the occasion of the annual meeting of the Railway Mission. The men generally manifest abounding enthusiasm at their great reunions, and this was no exception, although the proceedings were protracted beyond the stipulated time. We sincerely trust that the large attendance of the public augurs a wider sympathy with the excellent objects of the Mission. The peculiar and irregular duties of railway-men deprive them of many of the spiritual and social privileges which most people are able to enjoy; therefore, as special means are requisite to meet the special case, it is obviously incumbent upon those who can do so, to help forward this very important movement, one effect of which must be to make the men better servants and worthier members of the community.

MR. R. NIXON,

the secretary, presented an interesting report. The first note was that there had been steady progress. There are fifteen missionaries and evangelists, and about 1000 meetings have been held every week during the year. Fifty-one new branches have been formed in the United Kingdom, bringing the total up to 311. A second agent is required in South Africa, and active work is about to be begun in India. The year's operations have been attended with much blessing. The Railway Mission Christian Association, made up of converted men, shows a net increase of about 450.

The report gave several testimonies of officials and others as to the practical usefulness of the work. The officials of one line acknowledged that thousands of pounds had been saved to the company through the reduction in missing goods since the work began. Other officials testify to the decrease of swearing, and to greater attention to duty. Another has stated that when he wants men upon whom he can depend, to undertake important work, he selects those belonging to the Mission.

Mr. SAMUEL G. SHEPPARD, the hon. treasurer, stated that the donations and subscriptions received last year only amounted to £2800. Many more friends are needed before the work will be able to go forward as it deserves.

Sir T. FOWELL BUXTON, who presided, followed with a few words, in which he declared himself as in cordial sympathy with the Mission and its objects.

REV. J. JACKSON WRAY

delivered a hearty address. He invoked God's blessing upon a work which so definitely addresses itself to bringing about a change in the hearts and lives of railway people. The Mission is not ashamed to use the word "converted" in describing the trophies of grace. What a world of interest is in that word! A poor man, some time after being converted, said to him, "It seems to me that my cabin has got converted too!" There was such a change. No matter how small the hearthstone, a house is a palace when the Lord Jesus Christ is the guest.

Thus far in the meeting but slight reference had been made to the alcoholic evil. Mr. Wray fully realised the importance of railway servants having clear heads, so he expressed delight at finding that the promotion of temperance is one of the outstanding objects of the Mission. The car of Bacchus still rolls along in front of the chariot of Christ. He knew a man, formerly a drunkard, who gave his heart to God; going home from work, he had to pass thirty public-houses, and when he succeeded in getting beyond them, he said, "Thank God, the peril is past!" "But," exclaimed Mr. Wray, "I want to know where the duty of a Christian Government is, that it licenses traps of that sort. Just lately I heard of a new Guild, called 'The Guild of the Besom Pledge.' The idea, we are told, is to sweep Ritualism and Romanism from the country into the sea. I am afraid the besom will be worn to the stump before the work is accomplished. But I know a better 'besom pledge'—that of total abstinence, which would remove a great obstruction clean out of the way of the Gospel. Let us sweep the traffic into the sea of oblivion, and when that is done, I wish those who have embarked in the trade the fullest compensation, in the shape of an easier conscience, and a better line of business." It is needless to say that these sturdy sentiments were loudly cheered.

In the course of some words to workers and others, Mr. Wray said: I hope you railway men will be "lights along the line." Shine clearly and shine till the last, and then lights will shine upon you. When my mother lay dying, many years ago, full of choleraic pain, with her family around her, one of the young people said, "Mother, it is a dark valley through which you are passing." She replied, "No, my lad, it is not, for the light is bright enough at the other end!" Thus, pointing his hearers to the bright towers of "the city of the never-setting sun," the speaker expressed a hope that the work would continue to prosper greatly.

SEVERAL DELEGATES

bore testimony to the grace of God. They had found joy in giving up intoxicating drink and the tobacco-pipe in order the more powerfully to commend to others the Saviour whom they rejoiced to serve. An engine-driver from Salisbury said: We must live moment by moment. I have seen many men cut down in the prime of life. Only last Monday our lady worker pointed a railway-man and his wife to Jesus; and on the following night that man went to the hospital and spoke for Christ to an elderly man who had been knocked down by an engine and fatally injured.

Sacred pieces were sung by the Stratford Male Voice Choir and a band of coloured "Jubilee" singers. Rev. W. R. MOWLL delivered a brief address, earnestly inviting the men to rally to the standard of the King of kings.

The White Cross Society.

THE gathering of men at the Exeter Lower Hall on Monday last, at the meeting of this Society, was not as numerically strong as we expected to see it, but it was a good meeting notwithstanding. As a fellow combatant in the cause of chastity with the Church of England Purity Society, the White Cross Committee has greatly extended its ramifications. The secretary (Rev. G. S. S. VIDAL) had to record the recent adhesion to his General Committee of the Bishop of Liverpool, the Bishop of St. Asaph, the Bishop of St. David's, the Archdeacon of Durham, the Deans of Winchester and Lichfield, and a number of influtial laymen. More than a hundred meetings have been held during the year in England, one of which drew an audience of 2500 men. In Scotland the Society is now assisted by the entire Episcopal Bench, with one exception; while in Ireland several Committees are rendering very active help. From the United States

Dr. Barnardo and the Children

[The following letter from Dr. Barnardo to the supporters of his Homes appears in the June issue of Night and Day.]

MY DEAR FRIENDS,—The close of 1890 will, if my life is spared, bring me to the termination of twenty-four years of arduous but very happy toil in East London. Under responsibilities heavy enough to weigh down any one man, I have been sustained all these years by the marvellous and ever-renewed mercies which at each turn of my life work, in sorrow and adversity, as well as in joy and prosperity, have been vouchsafed to me. To my large and growing family "Bread has been given, and water has been sure." Loving and prayerful sympathy from the Lord's servants all over the world has accompanied and cheered me; while in the work itself a Committee of well-known and true-hearted Christian men, and a staff of enthusiastic colleagues, have been ready on every occasion to hold up my hands by wise counsel and by kindly co-operation. From my experience of the past, I have a firm and well-grounded assurance as to the future prosperity of our blessed enterprise. God, who has begun the work, will, I doubt not, continue to uphold it.

But it is well for my friends now to know and realise that, at the present time, difficulties of a more than ordinarily perplexing character surround me.

Under the specious but idle plea of safeguarding the religious interests of her own votaries (interests which were never imperilled!), the Church of Rome, which has been enormously increasing its agencies throughout East London during the past ten years, has stretched out her hand to snatch, not from the gutters and City slums, but from the care of Institutions like our own, rescued children to whom she has no moral and no legal claim. This invasion alike of our rights and the rights of the little ones has necessarily led to a conflict into which, most unwillingly to myself, I have been thrust, and wherein, owing to technical difficulties, it seemed at one time as though the Romish party was likely to win a victory all along the line. The battle still rages fiercely; but I am not without hopes that we have passed the crisis of the fight, and that what looked at first like defeat for us may turn to a very different issue.

No doubt, in thus earnestly opposing the pretensions of the Papacy, I have incurred, in certain quarters, great odium, and this perhaps has led, and may yet lead, to some consequent withdrawal of sympathy and support; but I am confidently assured that such loss is but small in its extent, and that it will be but temporary in its continuance. Ere long, I hope, it will be manifest to all unprejudiced persons that our work has been carried on with a single eye to God's glory, without taint of sectarian jealousy or proselytising spirit; and it will be seen that I have simply sought to save from the custody of the vicious, the criminal, and the degraded, those helpless Waifs and Strays who are so friendless, and whom, to her eternal shame, Rome entirely neglected and left to perish until after they had been sought out and rescued by other agencies from vile and dangerous conditions and surroundings.

Let me assure you, in spite of any allegations to the contrary which you may have encountered, that whenever claims for the restoration of children actually in the Homes have been advanced by relatives, however poor, if only they had the right of guardianship, and were of decent and respectable life and character, such claims have received respectful consideration, and have been invariably acceded to. But when, on behalf of vicious and degraded people, similar claims have been urged merely with proselytising ends in view, I have always felt it to be my solemn duty, as in the sight of God, to resist such claims as imperilling the whole future of the little ones to whom God has in his providence appointed me as guardian and friend. I may add that all such resistance has hitherto been maintained without costing the funds of our Institutions one single shilling!

On the eve of our twenty-fourth Annual Meeting, I am therefore very desirous that the supporters of the Lord's work in my hands—those friends whom He has raised up for my dear children—shall accord me the fullest possible measure of their personal sympathy and co-operation, both as regards the general claims of the Homes with the largest family in the world now in their keeping, and as regards our forthcoming Anniversary. I should feel it as a calamity, hardly to be contemplated with equanimity, that the Albert Hall should not be well filled in every part on the evening of Wednesday, June 11. Yet it is by no means easy to fill so vast a building. That numbers will come to listen to the eloquent addresses of those old and tried friends of my work, Mr. C. H. Spurgeon and Canon Fleming, I have no manner of doubt. That a great many will also come to see the faces and hear the sweet singing of those of my boys and girls who will be present, to the number of 1300 or more, I am also well assured. But I fear that hundreds, who in former years struggled to get to Exeter Hall on the occasions of our Anniversary there, may now fail me, owing to the supposed greater difficulties of reaching the Albert Hall. For this reason, I would now earnestly invite all my friends who live in the country, but who are likely to be in town in June, to book the eleventh day of that month for our Albert Hall meeting, and to write at once for tickets. And for this reason also I very earnestly ask all our friends who live in London and its vicinity to note the special terms offered by our Secretary in another column to those who can afford to purchase a few additional tickets to be used as gifts in their own circle. Finally, let me impress upon all that it is only by united and even by self-sacrificing efforts, continued right up to the very day of the meeting, that we can hope for success on an occasion which, especially at the present crisis, has such an important bearing upon the interests of the varied family of boys and girls under my care.

A SPECIAL MEETING FOR PRAYER, to commend the Institutions and all the Anniversary arrangements to our Lord, and to implore the Divine blessing, will be held on Tuesday, June 3, beginning at six o'clock precisely, and terminating at seven, in the large hall of the Stepney Home. Those of our friends who can attend will be made very heartily welcome.

Your faithful servant and brother in Christ,

THOS. J. BARNARDO.

ENIGMAS FOR THE YOUNG.

"A BURIED TEXT."

ADDITIONAL solutions of this enigma have been received from E. F., G. H., H. M. L., M. N., G. M. T., H. W., H. G. W., M. W. S., L. C. S. D., R. W., P. H., H. B. J., E. E. W., L. M. H., N. T., J. W., E. C.

"A SCRIPTURE CHARACTER."

Solutions of this have been received from R. P. C., F. H. M., F. A. W., G. F. B., M. F., M. D., Constant Reader, F. S. C., N. T., L. E. H.

TANGLEY-PARK ORPHANAGE.—The annual meeting of this Orphanage was held on the 17th inst., at the Home, New Hampton. Mr. Weylland presided, and speeches were made by Rev. S. N. Waterhouse, Mr. Paynter, and others. Mr. Cooper read a good report, showing there were fifty-two orphans now in residence. The Christian matron had done her work admirably, and the meeting, unusually large, pledged itself to support the work by their influence and means. It is a most praiseworthy effort, and is commended to the Christian public.

Evangelistic Notes.

Northampton.—Mr. W. P. Colien has been in this town four weeks conducting services in the mission-hall to crowded congregations, and outdoors with very great success. Numbers have been impressed with the importance of leading a godly life. H. MOBBS, J.P.

Ireland.—During the past week Mr. Michael O'Toole, of Dublin, a converted Roman Catholic, has conducted evangelistic services in Belfast in connection with the City Mission. On two occasions he told with great pathos and power the story of his emancipation from moral and spiritual bondage.

Mr. Henry Thorne's third Gospel mission at Margate is concluded. The attendance was very encouraging, and many gave in their names as inquirers. On the second Sunday the meetings were adjourned from the Marina Hall to the "Hall by the Sea," and this was crowded in every part at the evening service. The power of God was very manifest at both these gatherings, and about a hundred anxious souls were found. The Bible-readings were very helpful to Christians, and altogether this mission has certainly been a time of great blessing

Victoria Docks.—Down here at the Louisa Ashburton Mission we have had some very fine meetings during the past fortnight. Mr. Wm. Grove came to us on Sunday, May 4, and continued a special mission every night with very many signs following the preaching of the Gospel. The great feature in the service was a large attendance of seamen, shipworkers, stevedores, and dock labourers; many of these have remained to the after-meetings, giving themselves to Christ, and they are now rejoicing in the Saviour. Big men have been seen weeping like little children at the feet of Jesus. It has been deemed advisable to continue the mission for another fortnight, and Mr. Grove has arranged to remain on to the end of the month when he will conduct a series of meetings for men only. CHARLES J. FOWLER.

Obituary.

REV. F. W. GOTCH, D.D.

REV. DR. GOTCH, who was for many years president of the Baptist College, Bristol, died on Saturday last at Clifton. A native of Kettering, he entered the ministry in 1836. He was a graduate of Trinity College, Dublin, and in 1845 was appointed classical and mathematical tutor in the College at Bristol, in which he had himself been a theological student. In 1818 he became president, and discharged the onerous duties of the post until 1882. He was an accomplished Biblical scholar, being a member of the Old Testament Revision Company, and joint editor of a useful edition of the Scriptures known as "The Gurney Bible," published some years ago by the Queen's Printers. Dr. Gotch was an ex-president of the Baptist Union. Death was from bronchitis at the ripe age of eighty-two.

REV. JOHN F. EWING, M.A.

This well-known Free Church minister has passed away, in his 41st year. He was a son of Rev. James Ewing, of Dundee, and after a brilliant University career at St. Andrews, went through a course of theological study at New College, Edinburgh. With others he threw himself heart and soul into Mr. Moody's revival movement. His first charge was Ogilvie Free Church, Dundee; then he laboured for eight years in connection with Free West Church, Glasgow; in 1886 he was called to Toorak, a suburb of Melbourne, and his power as a preacher, and strong influence for good, were speedily discerned and heartily recognised in Australia. Death was from typhoid fever, in circumstances of a specially pathetic nature, for his wife was absent on a visit to Scotland, having been summoned to the bedside of her mother. Mr. Ewing hoped himself to return to the Old Country during the autumn to spend a short time, but God has ruled otherwise, and taken him to Himself. His friend, Rev. R. S. Duff, of Glasgow, said the other day in a pulpit tribute: "Mr. Ewing was specially admired, trusted, and, one may say, followed by a considerable section of the young manhood of Victoria. Essentially a strong man, his Alpine feats being only a symbol of his staying power and courage in the higher domain of intellect and spirit, he was yet wonderfully tender of heart."

A HUGUENOT MEMORIAL.

A FEW months ago we commended to the sympathy of British Christians M. Paul Bouchard, Mayor of Beaune, Côte-d'Or, France, who has for some time been engaged in promoting the erection of a much-needed Reformed Church in his native town. At the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, in 1685, Beaune had a considerable Protestant population, who were subjected to like persecution with their brethren elsewhere. M. Bouchard is himself a convert from Roman Catholicism, and has for some years been labouring to facilitate public worship by the Protestants of Beaune.

A Knight of the Legion of Honour, and discharging important public functions, M. Bouchard is deservedly held in high esteem far and wide in France. He cannot raise among his own people the money required to complete the "Temple," now in course of erection, so he is again on a visit to Great Britain, hoping to raise the sum of £400, yet unsubscribed, so that the edifice may be opened free of debt. M. Bouchard's courage is deserving of warm recognition; he is seventy-six years of age, and will, we trust, live to worship God in the building which he has already done so much to provide.

M. Bouchard's friends in England include Lord Kinnaird, Rev. Dr. L. Borrett White (Religious Tract Society), and Rev. J. M. H. du Pontet de la Harpe (of the French Reformed Evangelical Church, Bayswater). A commodious church building in Beaune will be a fitting memorial to the faithful and true Huguenots of generations gone by. We trust the edifice will soon be completed, and paid for. Communications for M. Bouchard may be addressed to 47, Mecklenburg-square, London, W.C.

ANOTHER AFRICAN MARTYR.

MY DEAR SIR,—Africa and her needs have done much of late to deepen our interest in Foreign Missions: Uganda and her trials more especially, for our hearts are still sad with the memory of our recent losses. Alexander Mackay is now a name held by many in equal honour with those of Bishops Hannington and Parker, of the same Mission. But the same post which brought your last issue containing a deeply interesting account of Mackay, brought to me the further sad news of another C.M.S. missionary gone to his rest—gone almost before he was known. Perhaps I might be permitted to express a few words of loving tribute to the memory of Joseph Dudley Musson Cotter, B.A., of Trinity College and Ridley Hall, Cambridge. And I wish to do so for two reasons:—(1) He is one of many who have recently gone forth for our Master, and who, to many, seem to go but to die; but Jesus knows; and I think such men are worthy of praise in the churches. (2) For his own sake, that he, being dead, may still speak to living hearts to nerve them for service. I do so because I had the sacred privilege of knowing him as few men knew him, and to know him was to love him.

An honest integrity of purpose ever characterised all his actions; a sincerity and manly courage, added to a warm, genial nature, made him a companion whose equal is rarely met with, and whose worth, as shown by his deeds, now makes itself all the more painfully felt, because he is not here. His words were few his short career has an eloquence which testifies that when his Master spoke he was ready to answer, "What wilt Thou have me to do?" And then he went and did it. "Good-bye," he said to me a few weeks ago; "we'll meet again some day." "Yes, Dudley, God knows when." Now he rests after some few weeks in Africa. He had sailed for Mombasa, as one of the Cambridge four, in Douglas Hooper's party, on Jan. 23. A noble life as a man, a noble life as a Christian layman, nobly laid down. He was not yet twenty-four years of age.

Peace! perfect peace! with loved ones far away!
In Jesus' keeping, we are safe and they.

Yours faithfully in our Master's work at home,

JAS. HAYTHORNTHWAITE,
Curate of St. Paul's, Kirkdale.

Notes from Cambridge.

THE preachers at the Presbyterian services in the Guildhall this term include the following: Rev. B. Bell, D.D., of Manchester; Rev. A. Skene, M.A., of Glasgow; Rev. C. A. Salmond, M.A., of Edinburgh; Rev. G. E. Troup, M.A., of Dundee; Rev. W. Macgregor, M.A.; Rev. A. Martin, D.D., of Edinburgh; Rev. R. Lorimer, M.A., of Dundee.

On Thursday the 22nd the memorial stone of the New Presbyterian Church in Downing-street was laid by Sir G. Bruce, followed by a soirée and public meeting. The speakers were Sir G. Bruce, Professor Macalister, Revs. Principal Dykes, Donald Fraser, D.D., and T. Davidson.

Rev. C. Dixon, the new vicar of Christ's Church, is already taking a very active interest in the open-air work done by members of the University. He has been present, and spoken at the services of two of the Colleges; on one Sunday offering his schoolroom to continue the service after darkness had set in.

Already many of the triposes have begun; many of your readers will, no doubt, have friends in for examination. Prayer is earnestly asked, and needed, during this trying and important time.

This week, and during part of next, the Cambridge Church Missionary Association is celebrating its seventy-second anniversary. On Monday (May 12) there was a meeting for the young, held first in the Henry Martyn Hall, but, owing to numbers, adjourned to the adjacent church (Holy Trinity); Archdeacon E. Moule, of Shanghai, addressed them.

On May 15th, 16th, and 17th prayer-meetings were held in the Martyn Hall, with special reference to Foreign Missions.

Two meetings will be held on Monday next in the Guildhall, at 2.30 and 7 o'clock. In the afternoon Dr. Perowne, the Master of Corpus, will be in the chair; the Very Rev. Dr. Butler, the Vice-Chancellor, in the evening. The Right Rev. Bishop French, late Bishop of Lahore, and the Ven. Archdeacon E. Moule will speak.

On Tuesday there is to be a breakfast at the Prince of Wales's Hotel, at 8 a.m., for members of the County C. M. Union, the clergy, and the members of the committee, with an address.

[Pressure upon our space necessitates the omission this week of the sketch of the work of Clare College with which our correspondent closes his notes.—ED.]

A TEMPERANCE EDITOR, of Lincoln, Nebraska, recently found a coffin on his doorstep, placed there by the liquor men to indicate his fate if he continued to "persecute" them; whereupon the editor sold the coffin for seven dollars, and presented the money to the W.C.T.U.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on the following:—Special services by Mr. Opie Rodway, at Oldway Baptist Chapel, Herefordshire, May 24 to 26.——A mission by Mr. William Forbes, at Huddersfield.——A tent mission at Blandford, Dorset, during July and August.——PRAISE:—For blessing on a five nights' mission to young women by Mr. and Mrs. Harrison, at the "Old Welcome," Cross-key-square, E.C.——For a very remarkable time of blessing during Mr. Henry Thorne's late mission at Margate.

CONFERENCE AT BIRMINGHAM.

ONE of the most successful of recent conventions for the deepening of spiritual life was held last week at Birmingham, under the presidency of Mr. Robert Wilson. It was attended by Revs. H. W. Webb-Peploe, Evan Hopkins, F. B. Meyer, and other ministers whose names are associated with the Keswick platform.

The meetings were held in the large Town Hall, which night after night was crowded to excess, hundreds being denied admission. Indeed, the interest and attention manifested were quite unusual, as many as would fill the ground floor being present at the early morning prayer-meeting (7 o'clock).

Many testimonies were received as to the blessing experienced, and the convention came to a fitting conclusion with a great missionary meeting, under the superintendence of Mr. Reginald Radcliffe.

Letter to the Editor.

LITERATURE FOR INDIA.

DEAR SIR,—Having lately returned from India, I can, from personal knowledge, endorse the remarks made by Mr. Mitchell in your issue of April 25. The natives of India are, at the present time, hungering for literary food to an unprecedented extent. An immense amount of pernicious literature is being steadily circulated in the country, and eagerly snapped up by the reading public.

A recent estimate, from reliable sources, gives about four million scholars in State and State-aided schools throughout the country, and over one million added yearly to the number able to read. The English language is almost universally taught in our schools out there, so that a very fair proportion of these readers are acquainted with it. This question of the supply of pure, healthy literature, to counteract the noxious matter which is being disseminated so freely, has lately found expression in the formation of a society, fostered by officials of rank and influence, and cordially recognised by the Government of India, for the diffusion of cheap and sound literature in the country. Influential committees have been formed at the large towns, with the object of encouraging reading, and of assisting the production and distribution of good and cheap English and vernacular literature. The scheme promises well as far as it goes, but as the promoters include Protestants, Roman Catholics, Mahommedans, and Hindus, it goes without saying that religion will not be the basis of working of this society. What we sorely need is to flood the country with Christian tracts and pamphlets, reasonable in cost, attractive and pithy, with plenty of the Gospel in them.

Will not some of our evangelical societies at home take up this matter, and occupy the field in force? Now is the time for action. I shall be glad to communicate with any interested in the advancement of the Lord's kingdom in India, who would wish for further information on this very important subject.—Yours, &c.,

J. B. BRADDON,
Indian Public Works Dept.

A HOME FOR INEBRIATE WOMEN is to be opened in connection with the Manchester Women's Christian Temperance Association and Police-court Mission.

THE HOMES FOR INEBRIATES furnish increasing evidence as to the reformatory value of the treatment, especially if applied in the earlier stages of intemperance.

A USEFUL PRECAUTION.—In the "General Regulations for the Management of an Industrial Institute," issued by the Charity Commission under the City of London Parochial Charities Act, 1883, &c., the following finds a place: "No intoxicating liquors shall be introduced into any part of the building." It would be well if such a regulation could be extended to all public buildings, such as the South Kensington Museum and the Royal Courts of Justice.

The Book World.

Sensational Religion. By J. O. Bairstow. Elliot Stock. A very sensible and stirring treatise on the necessity, in religious life and work, of having "Sensationalism" of the right sort. The Salvation Army comes in for somewhat indiscriminate praise, and the "Merozites," or do-nothings, are soundly rated.

Myrtle and Rue. A Story for the Young, illustrating Ps. xxiii. By Margaret S. Haycraft. 2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. A bright, wholesome tale, relating the homeward voyage and subsequent adventures of a brother and sister whose parents were in India. The spoilt boy Rex, the old Christian cottager, and other characters, are well described. The book will be, and ought to be, a general favourite.

The Stories of the Trees. By Mrs. Dyson. Nelson. A beautiful work, by one who knows how to interest and instruct the young. In twenty-three chapters we are told many wonderful things, the survey beginning with the oak—king of the forest—and ending with the yew—the graveyard sentinel. Admirably illustrated, the book will make a capital present to young people, while to many readers of riper years its pages will have varied charms.

Temperance History. By Dawson Burns, D.D. Part iii. 2s. National Temperance Publication Depôt. Dr. Burns here continues his great subject from 1862 to 1872. The period was one of much activity, showing itself in various ways. For fulness of detail, and clearness of arrangement, the work leaves nothing to be desired. We are glad to learn that comprehensive indices are in preparation, and will appear with the fourth part, completing the work, in October next.

The New Popular Educator. Vol. iii. 5s. Cassell & Co. Many subjects in science, art, and literature are admirably carried forward in this volume of a work which fully justifies its second title, "A complete encyclopædia of elementary and advanced education." The old editions deserved all the praise that was given them, but the "New," with its great improvements in treatment and style, is peerless as a treasury of information, theoretical and applied. Friends of promising young men would do well to encourage them to make this work their guide to knowledge.

Nepal and India; or, Friendship Forgotten. By M. Digby, C.I.E. Indian Political Agency, 25, Craven-street. This episode of very recent history should be read by all who take interest in Indian affairs. That Sir Ranadip Sing, of Nepal, the friend and ally of England, was basely murdered, with his only son and other relatives, admits of no doubt. Whether his alleged murderer can be deposed by the British Government, and whether he is not intriguing with China, are points less easy to decide. Mr. Digby pleads the cause of the exiled royal family and nobles with skill, force, and we must say moderation.

The Minor Prophets: Their Lives and Times. By Archdeacon Farrar. 2s. 6d. Nisbet & Co. Another volume of the very useful "Men of the Bible" series. Needless to say, it is learned and graphic. It is, however, unnecessarily controversial in tone, and there is a too ready disposition to respect the doubts and accept the conclusions of rationalistic critics. Dr. Farrar's views of the prophetic office and functions lead him so to limit the vision of the "Minor Prophets" that his interpretations of their writings are, in our judgment, frequently wanting in force and fulness. Nevertheless, cautious students will peruse this book to great advantage.

Sir John Franklin: A Revelation. By Rev. J. H. Skewes. 2s. 6d. Bemrose. The story of the discovery of the lost Erebus and Terror in the Arctic regions is here told, in connection with some prior "revelations" from the spiritual world. The pages are full of mystery, which, however, is specially commended to notice by the fact that the details were known in select circles even before the vessels had been found in the precise spot indicated in the "revelation." In a supplement to this, the second edition, Mr. Skewes deals with the criticisms of those who have called the story in question. He gives several hitherto unpublished letters in support of the interpretation he has put upon the facts. With pains worthy of a more substantial cause, the author has stated and defended a case which, he maintains, is more "supernaturally marvellous" than anything recorded outside the pages of the Bible.

Story of our English Bible. By Walter Scott. 1s. 6d. Holness. One to whom the Bible is in very truth the Word of God here gives a goodly body of Biblical information, describing the various versions and furnishing brief introductions to the separate books. To those who cannot study elaborate works on the subjeet, this will be a welcome manual, as it combines with much that is useful not a few curious facts set forth in language suited for ordinary readers.

The Strait Gate, and other Discourses. By a Scotch Preacher. 5s. Bagster. Of small theological utility, and in no appreciative degree inspiring to practical Christian conduct, this volume may perhaps be described as a contribution to what may be called religious belles lettres. Elegant in diction, and often suggestive, although far from pronounced on some phases of the subjects dealt with, the discourses, six in number, are only likely to find appreciative readers in a select circle. A judicious lecture is added on Thomas Carlyle and his writings.

Manuel Matamoros: His Life and Death. By William Greene. 1s. 6d. Holness. This very interesting book, giving an account of the persecutions of Christians in Spain twenty-five years ago, has reached a third edition. Compiled from letters and other documents, by one who had perfect understanding of all the facts and circumstances from the first, it is as undoubtedly reliable as it is certainly stimulating, in showing how a true servant of God can endure tribulation with patience and die "with full assurance of faith." Mr. Greene has added a sketch of Gospel work in Spain down to the present time, and we sincerely trust that his book will be blessed to the raising up of valiant witnesses for God and his truth alike in our own beloved land and in the fair Spanish peninsula.

The Poems of William Leighton, illustrated by John Leighton. Elliot Stock. To commend a writer who has the praise of men so diverse yet so distinguished as Longfellow, Kingsley, and Spurgeon, is almost superfluous, but we count it a privilege to add one leaf to Mr. Leighton's wreath of praise. Considering the author's youth, his maturity of thought and finish in details were most remarkable. His easy verse reminds us of Moore without his levity, and Praed's brightness without his superficiality. In describing nature, or sketching characters, his work will bear comparison with Wordsworth and Tennyson, while in clearness of Christian doctrine, he shines like the sun amidst the dim twinklings of more famous writers who are counted Christians. Let all lovers of pure poetry read and enjoy.

The Voices of the Psalms. By W. Pakenham Walsh, D.D. 5s. Hodder and Stoughton. This work does not profess to be a commentary on the Psalms, but only an introduction to the study of them. To the intelligent reader we can imagine no more useful introduction. Scholars also can hardly read without profit a work embodying such results of extensive reading. The Bishop of Ossory is an excellent teacher, and those who know any of his many contributions to religious literature will not require to be told that this book is thoroughly sound. The chapters are eighteen in number, and give the "voices" of the Psalms on praise, prayer, instruction, history, immortality, and other themes in the spheres of creation and redemption. After reading this suggestive volume we go to the Psalter with new interest and zest, and find the Songs of Zion eloquent with thoughts and counsels which we had not previously observed.

The Story of my Wanderings in the Land of my Fathers. By Isaac Levinsohn. 1s. 6d. Holness. A Hebrew Christian here tells us what he saw and did on a visit to Palestine. The narrative is full of interest, affording abundant evidence of its author's sanctified imagination and spiritual discernment. There are many illustrations, including an excellent portrait of Mr. Levinsohn. While well worthy of the perusal of anyone, the book will have special charms for young people, to whom it will certainly open up many portions of Holy Writ. Another attractive little volume is The Story of Isaac Levinsohn, a Polish Jew, told by Himself. 1s. 6d. Holness. It is a tale of painful soul-struggles, resulting in the confession of Jesus as the Messiah. A pathetic interest attaches to the chapters which tell us what great things the young man was called upon to endure for Christ's sake. However, as time has gone on, Mr. Levinsohn has been privileged to number among fellow believers in Christ some who, in spite of natural ties, had denied him any place in their affections.

The Promised King; or, The Story of the Children's Saviour. By Annie R. Butler. 2s. 6d' Religious Tract Society. The "old, old story," told in words which the youngest readers understand. Admirably illustrated and furnished with a map, the book is sure to delight juveniles, and, with God's blessing, will be a source of sweeter joy in many a home. The author has endeavoured: (1) to enlist boys and girls under the banner of the Great King in simple faith in Him and his atoning work; and (2) to lead the little soldiers to determine upon following the banner to active mission service wherever the Lord may call. She has achieved a real success, and we trust her book will be put in the way of those for whom it is specially intended.

Life and Work of Mary Louisa Whately. By E. J. Whately. 2s. Religious Tract Society. A memorial sketch of a devoted life. Mary Whately was privileged to be a pioneer in the great work of reaching the Moslem mind with the Gospel message in the stronghold of Islam—Cairo. Her work there has from time to time been described in our columns; its depth and breadth will be declared in the Great Day. A loving sister has brought together these chapters which are biographical mainly in the sense that they furnish an account of the bold and persistent testimony which has been borne for Christ in Egypt, through the late Miss Whately's instrumentality. There is an excellent portrait, and the pages will be inspiring to Christian workers, as well as interesting to a wide circle of readers.

The Trials of a Country Parson. By Augustus Jessop, D.D. 7s. 6d. T. Fisher Unwin. So long as Dr. Jessop can find solace, diversion, and, let us hope, profit in writing clever and entertaining magazine articles such as those collected in this book, we fear he will not be regarded as an object of very great sympathy. Yet many of the "trials" of which he writes are by no means bogies or make-believes, and all country parsons, we daresay, are not so philosophical and self-denying as our genial East Anglian friend. But clergymen must accept the disadvantages as well as the advantages incident to a State Church. If at some future day they should be placed on a level with their fellow ministers of other communions, their trials will not be fewer or less real, but they will be able to face and overcome them, we think, with a stouter heart, and with less dependence on the arm of flesh.

"Ecce Venit." By Dr. A. J. Gordon. 3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. Dr. Gordon is an ardent disciple in the historical school of premillenialists, and in this volume we have the fruits of a careful investigation of Scripture teaching on the subject of the Second Advent. The earlier portion of the book deals impressively with the practical bearings of the doctrine, and the motive it supplies towards a full consecration of life. As a necessary corollary to the acceptance of the "historical" view of prophetic interpretation, Dr. Gordon believes the Papacy to be the Anti-Christ foreshadowed in the Apocalyptic vision, and this position is supported by much sober and weighty argument. The present age is "Satan's mock millennium" and a time of testimony for the true Bride of Christ. "The final redemption of the world comes at last through the conversion and restoration of Israel, and the glorifying of the Church at our Lord's return." Dr. Gordon's examination of his great theme is orderly and clear, and his utterances are very decided; while he does not dogmatise on those points of unfulfilled prediction that may well, from their mysterious and transcendent character, create diversity of understanding.

The Bible: How it was Compiled. 1d. Holness. Well planned and capitally executed, this tract will introduce many a Christian to a new world of thought. A great deal of information has been brought together and lucidly displayed.

The Question of Compulsory Vaccination, illustrated by fifty-six cases of illness and death, by Charles Fox, F.R.C.S. 6d. E. W. Allen, 4, Ave Maria-lane, E.C. Sad facts, conscientiously stated, and earnestly commended to the attention of Christian people.

The Two Bishops: A Welcome and a Memory. By Charles Bullock, B.D. 1s. "Home Words" Office. Portraits and sketches of Drs. B. F. Westcott and J. B. Lightfoot, the past and present Bishops of Durham. Many will read with interest these sympathetic pages descriptive of the life and work of two good men.

The Baptized for Behoof of the Dead—Who? By R. A. Macfie. 6d. Nisbet & Co. Yet another inquiry concerning 1 Cor. xv. 29. Emphasising the missionary duty of Christians, the author maintains that we are baptized in order that we may pass on to our fellow-mortals that which we have ourselves received. We cannot regard the interpretation as entirely satisfactory. Certainly the argument might have been more clearly presented.

Personalia.

Mr. Herbert R. Francis has been badly injured by a severe gas explosion which occurred in his house at Richmond last week. His face, neck, and hands were much burnt, though not dangerously, and it is expected that he will be laid aside for some weeks. The prayers of our readers are asked on his behalf.

Mrs. Booth has had an increase in strength, which has been maintained with variations, but it has been accompanied by paroxysms of terrible suffering and much loss of sleep, and attendant weariness and prostration. Notwithstanding all her pain, Mrs. Booth continues to take the deepest interest in what is passing in the Salvation Army at home and abroad.

Mr. Matthew Burnett has arrived in England, and is now at Scarborough, visiting his old friend, Mr. William Rowntree. Mr. Burnett mentions that he and his fellow-voyagers, Messrs. Meaden and Semple, had a pleasant farewell gathering at Melbourne, a large meeting of 1000 people at Adelaide, and a crowded gathering of soldiers and civilians at Ceylon.—Temperance Record.

Mr. Henry M. Stanley, in his magazine article which will appear in the June number of Scribner's Magazine, says:—"Constrained at the darkest hour to humbly confess that without God's help I was helpless, I vowed a vow in the forest solitudes that I would confess his aid before men. Silence, as of death, was round about me; it was midnight; I was weakened by illness, prostrated by fatigue, and wan with anxiety for my white and black companions, whose fate was a mystery. In this physical and mental distress I besought God to give me back my people. Nine hours later we were exulting with a rapturous joy. In full view of all was the crimson flag with the crescent, and beneath its waving folds was the long-lost rear column."

Notices.

2 Cor. vi. 3.—Please give us particulars of what is referred to.

Private T. Waller, F. Troop, 22nd Dragoon Guards, Queen's Bays, Seilkote, E. India, would be glad if some Christian friends in England would correspond with him on the spiritual life.

A statue to General Gordon has been erected at Chatham.

The Belgian Government is about to forbid public séances of hypnotism.

The Bishop of London has vetoed the new proceedings taken against the St. Paul's reredos.

The Emperor of Germany has given a donation of £50 to the British and Foreign Sailors' Society.

On Ascension Day an open-air service was held for the German troops at Königsberg, attended by the Emperor and Empress.

There will be something like a demonstration, both at Epsom on the Derby Day, and on the evening before in London, by the Anti-Gambling League.

Rev. Dr. Doudney, vicar of St. Lukes, Bedminster, Bristol, has completed the jubilee year of his editorial labour in connection with The Gospel Magazine.

The schooner, Eliza Mary, bound for Australia, having seventy-nine persons on board, was driven upon the reefs off Mallicolo, New Hebrides, in a gale of wind, fifty-one of the crew and passengers were killed, roasted, and eaten by the cannibals who captured them.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Canon Liddon is to preach before the University of Oxford on Sunday next.

Dr. Westcott was enthroned as Bishop of Durham on Thursday last week, in the presence of a large congregation.

BAPTIST.

In St. George's-street Church, Macclesfield, a young local preacher of great promise and usefulness in the Methodist New Connexion was recently baptized by the pastor, Rev. James Hollinshead. Before being immersed the candidate delivered an address.

SALVATION ARMY.

General Booth had a most enthusiastic reception at Amsterdam.

A deposit bank has been started as one of the Army agencies. After giving 2½ per cent. interest to depositors, the profits will go to the Army funds.

The Army have succeeded in their appeal before the High Court against the magisterial decision that the "Night Shelters" should be registered as common lodging-houses.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Sunday last was Foreign Mission Sunday in the English Presbyterian Church, and special efforts were then made to secure increased collections. The financial year closed with a debit balance of nearly £1400, and as the expenditure for the current year is estimated to be at least £750 more than in 1889, an increase on the ordinary revenue of £2150 will be necessary, if the accounts are to be balanced at the year's end.

Rev. John Watson, of Sefton-park Church, Liverpool, has been abroad for some time recruiting his health. He is expected to resume his work on June 8. An assistant has been appointed in Rev. R. H. Semple, M.A.; who headed the list of students in the recent ordination examinations at the Presbyterian College, London, where he had studied for one year under Dr. Oswald Dykes. Mr. Semple had previously taken honours at Cambridge in the mathematical and theological triposes.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

The adult school movement spreads, and to-morrow the East-end London Mission will be opened.

London Yearly Meeting, now in session, is expected to be a time of special blessing, in which English, Irish, and Americans may share.

The China Mission has at last found a home, and is full of hope. In Syria blessing is crowning the faithful efforts so earnestly made, and among the North American Indians conversions and ingathering are reported.

Dublin Yearly Meeting, though hardly holding its own numerically, has been a solid and instructive time, and some progress has been made, and the Home Mission Committee was reappointed. In various parts of the country new meeting-houses are being built, and old and dying meetings are reviving.

From the weekly and monthly periodicals, English and American, the conclusion seems reasonable that there has not been such active and successful work carried on by Friends probablyfor the last 100 years. The tide of blessing is rising on both sides of the Atlantic, and in all the foreign stations where missionaries are placed, not only the warmth of evangelical, but the fire of evangelistic zeal, is spreading and deepening over the church, especially among the young and vigorous.

METHODIST.

At Cardiff a new mission-hall, known as Wesley Hall, has been opened in the neighbourhood of Roath. At first the Methodists used a room over some stables, but as it got too small, they bought some shop premises and converted them into a capital hall.

It is expected that this year the U.M.F.C. Assemblywill include a large missionary demonstration, to be addressed by the missionaries now at home, and two coloured students who are about to return to Africa; large evangelistic meetings will also be held.

The memorial stones have been laid of a Wesleyan chapel in Staintondale, a small, picturesquely situated village between Scarborough and Whitby. For some years past the village has been regularly visited by local preachers and religious services held in the village schoolroom. The new chapel will seat about 120 people.

Mr. Josiah Nix, of the West London Mission, intends to carry on evangelising work at the Epsom Races again this year. Church of England clergymen and Congregational ministers have expressed a desire to assist the Mission, and there will be no difficulty in arranging a determined attack upon the frequenters of the racecourse.

The Primitive Methodists report a decrease of 724 in their membership. In 1886 they reported a decrease of 748. The intermediate years have shown an increase. Loss is to be found, not only in country districts, where the population decreases, but in great manufacturing centres, and this notwithstanding the unusual number of special evangelistic agencies employed during the past year, and the almost continuous reports of revivals which have been published.

At the meeting of the Portland-street men's Bible-class, Bristol, on Sunday week, twelve members gave a sermonette each on the well-known text John iii. 16. Each speaker was limited to three minutes, and most of them spoke without notes. In this short time several of them contrived to set the pith of the Gospel before the class. Although speaking from the same text, no two of them followed the same line of thought, and some were remarkably original and fresh.

CONGREGATIONAL.

At St. Leonard's-street, Pimlico, the Christian work carried on for many years by Mr. C. E. Mudie has been taken up by the Christian Instruction Society, one of whose evangelists is engaged in that neighbourhood in house-to-house visitation and conducting religious services.

The Osmaston branch mission of London-road Church, Derby, which is in close proximity to the extensive locomotive and carriage works of the Midland Railway, has been hitherto carried on in a small shop at great inconvenience, but a mission chapel, capable of accommodating between 200 and 250 persons, is about to be erected.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

Rev. W. J. Dawson, of Glasgow, has been preaching and lecturing in Belfast.

The Board of Missions of the Irish Presbyterian Church has received very encouraging reports from several of its agents.

NOTES FROM WALES.

The mischievous scheme of the Government to endow and establish the liquor traffic has caused quite a commotion throughout the Principality.

The idea of a Welsh Nonconformist Congress has been taken up most enthusiastically by all sections of the Press, and by the various denominations.

The "Daniel's Band" conducted by Mr. J. R. Hall, of Newport, Mon., visited Cardiff a few days ago, by invitation of Mr. Richard Cory. They had a good time testifying for Christ.

Rev. D. Griffiths, of Resolven, has offered a very valuable site, together with £2000, for the purpose of erecting a church at Tonna, in memory of his deceased brother, the late Rev. Walter Griffith.

The annual meeting of the Wesleyan Methodists of the Bristol district was lately held at Newport. The delegates rejoiced at the great success of many churches, and were pleased to distribute £710 among weak churches.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

A "Livingstone Library" is being formed by the Congregational Church at Hamilton, to commemorate the long connection of the great missionary and his family with the congregation.

By the kindness of friends a copy of Dr. A. T. Pierson's book, "The Crisis of Missions," has been presented to each of the Church of Scotland students in attendance upon the Divinity Hall during last session.

The Scottish Wesleyans will petition Conference that Rev. W. J. Dawson may be allowed to remain in St. John's, Glasgow, for six years, and that Mr. Brailsford may not be removed from Blairgowrie. They state that pastorates of three years are utterly opposed to the genius of the Scottish people and a serious hindrance to religious work.

The annual report of Renfield-street U.P. Church, Glasgow, shows continued progress in church life and work. Every species of church society and agency is in operation from mission services to savings bank and cookery classes. There is an increase over last year of £114 in the missionary and benevolent funds; and the average giving per member has increased 4s. 8½d. during the last four years.

The foreign missions report presented at the recent Synod meetings of the U.P. Church showed that in the various fields occupied by the mission they had a staff of 117 fully-trained agents, of whom 54 are ordained European missionaries. The 96 congregations connected with the mission have an aggregate membership of 14,899, with 2755 candidates for admission. Since 1880 the membership of the native churches has shown an average annual increase of 549. At the great missionary meeting addresses were delivered by Professor Lindsay, Mr. W. J. Slowan, Dr. Dugald Christie (Manchuria), Rev. William Anderson (Old Calabar), and Dr. A. T. Pierson.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Rev. Canon Pitman, vicar of Eastbourne, Sussex.—Rev. J. P. Alexander, minister of East Linton U.P. Church, N.B.—Rev. Thomas Francis, Baptist minister, of Cwmbath.—Rev. James Macdonald, Parish minister of Glenelg, N.B.—At Newport, Mayo, Rev. George S. Keegan, Presbyterian minister, and formerly a Roman Catholic.—Rev. John Venn, vicar of St. Peter's, Hereford, and brother of the late Henry Venn, of the C.M.S.—Lady Verney, wife of the venerable Sir Harry Verney, and sister of Miss Florence Nightingale.—At the House of Rest, Eskbank, Edinburgh, Miss E. G. Henderson, late C.M.S. missionary at the Annie Walsh School, Sierra Leone, West Africa.—Rev. J. W. Hedgeland, vicar of St. Stephen's, Exeter.

A combination of farmers, whose object is to patronise shops the proprietors of which are content with making 10 per cent. profit, has been started in Indianapolis.

Baron Hirsch is going to allow an American committ the sum of £24,000 per year in order that schools agriculture for the use of Russian Jews in the Unit States may be established.

A protest has been sent to the manager of the Stan and African Exhibition by the Working Men's Lor Day Rest Association against the Sunday opening the Exhibition on two Sundays.

Mr. H. M. Stanley is engaged to be married to Miss Dorothy Tennant, of Richmond-terrace, Whitehall, daughter of the late Mr. Charles Tennant. The lady is well known in artistic circles.

It has been proved that cats may transmit diphtheria. Acquiring the infection from human patients, they may communicate it to each other, and then infect healthy persons in the households to which they belong.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope many of our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes, which of course are entirely different from these.

SUNDAY, MAY 25.—Psalm XVI.

Michtam is derived by some from a word meaning golden. And, indeed, that epithet may be truly applied, not only to this Psalm, but to lvi., lvii., lviii., lix., lx. Others explain it as a secret; i.e., a song which leads the holy soul into those deep things of God which are hidden from the wise and prudent, and revealed to babes, by that Spirit who searches them and loves to make them known to those for whom they are prepared (1 Cor. ii. 12). This, then, is the song of the golden secret.

The key to the Psalm is given by the Apostle Peter, when, quoting from it, he says: "David speaketh concerning Him" (Acts ii. 25). And in the following verses he goes on to show that the Psalm could not be true in all its wealth of meaning of David, but of David's Lord (31). And the Apostle Paul makes a very remarkable reference to this Psalm, expressly ascribing it to God's authorship through the Psalmist, and affirming that it spoke of Him through whom all who believe are justified (Acts xiii. 35-38). But, of course, in a lower sense, each one of us who are one with Jesus may appropriate these golden words.

(1.) The believer turns from all creature confidence to his God, as his only hope and all-sufficient help. Trust in Him cannot be misplaced. It is an argument which God cannot withstand.

(2.) The rendering of R.V. is very beautiful: "I have no good beyond Thee." Satisfied with God; wanting nothing outside Him.

(3.) The soul that loves God loves the people of God.

(4-6.) Contrasted lots. The Hebrew for "hasten after another" is used in Ex. xxii. 15 for buying a wife. But bought gods bring sorrow with them. Oh, to be as Levi, whose only portion was God Himself (Numb. xviii. 20, and Lam. iii. 24). And when one has so chosen God, God will not let man or devil dispossess him: our allotment is pleasant indeed, facing the sunrise, and well supplied with water.

(7.) "Reins" mean inmost thought (Ps. vii. 9). God often speaks in the quiet heart through the language of thoughts.

(8.) The one object of life to do his will and please Him; and He is ever at the right hand to help, nearer than our accusers (Ps. cix. 6, 31).

(9.) "My glory" interpreted by Peter of "the tongue" (Acts ii. 26). Speech is man's glory, therewith he blesses God and teaches his brother.

(10-11.) Thus the Lord Jesus might have softly sung to himself as He descended into the lowest depths of his humiliation. "Hell" here is sheol, not the place of torment, but of disembodied spirits. "Thine Holy One," i.e., one whom thou favourest. The path of life is the upward path to life. God is at our right hand, and our lot is pleasant here, and ere long we shall be at his right hand, amid everlasting pleasures.

MONDAY, MAY 26.—Psalm XVII.

This prayer evidently dates from the Sauline persecution. In the earlier verses David protests his innocence, and then proceeds to plead for deliverance from his foes, ending with glad anticipations of his vision of God's face. It may have been composed for use at eventide; two at least of its verses point in that direction (3 and 15).

PROTESTATIONS OF INTEGRITY (1-5).—What a comfort to appeal from the accusations of men to the judgment bar of God. Even if there have been unwise things in the behaviour, yet God judges the motive and heart. The Hebrew word "tried" is "melted," as gold tried in the furnace and found to have no dross. But we can have no hope of preserving our integrity and keeping from the paths of the transgressor unless we avail ourselves of the Word of God to test and direct our goings. Use the Royal Guide-book if you would keep on the King's highway. It is beautiful to notice how David follows up his assertion of having kept in God's ways with the cry that he may still be kept there.

PRAYER FOR DELIVERANCE (6-14).—How safe we are. The pupil of the eye is defended by eyelash, lid, brows, bony socket, the swiftly uplifted hand (Zech. ii. 8); the eaglet is gathered under the wing of the parent-bird (Deut. xxxii. 11). The R.V. gives better sense of 13, 14, "by thy sword," "by thy hand." A striking contrast between Psa xvi. 5, 14.

GLAD ANTICIPATION (15).—They are filled with this world, I with Thee; they look for the things of this life, I with the eternal and unseen; they satisfied with children, I with thy likeness (1 Cor. xv. 49; Phil. iii. 21). We shall never be perfectly satisfied with anything less than the beatific vision. Most of that rapturous vision is veiled from sight, but when it shall be unveiled, it shall be approved.

TUESDAY, MAY 27.—Psalm XVIII.

There is another form of this Psalm on record, 2 Sam. xxii. Perhaps sung more than once. It recapitulates the deliverances of the past, and sets them to music. The second and forty-ninth verses are quoted in New Testament as the words of the Lord Jesus (Heb. ii. 13; Rom. xv. 9).

A GOOD RESOLVE (1-3).—How beautiful is this array of metaphors, as if no one were good enough to set forth the many-sided glory of God. And faith puts its hand, my, on all that God is, and claims it for its own. Can we not also say: "I love Thee"? Not indeed as we would, yet John xxi. 17. David's word is a very intense one.

THE STORY OF THE PAST (4-19).—It is good to recall God's gracious dealings. David does it in highly poetical language, borrowed from the scenes of the Red Sea and Sinai. And yet there was so much of God's gracious help in his life, that he was warranted in comparing it with the deliverance from Egypt. We, too, have our Red Seas. And God will do for us as much as for David. In our distress let us also cry. "Far up within the bejewelled walls, and through the gates of pearl, the cry of the sufferer will be heard." "My cry came before Him." The voice is thin and solitary, but the answer shakes creation.

THE CLAIM OF THE RIGHTEOUS (20-27).—The righteousness of which David boasted was not his own, for he was willing to admit that he was not free from impurity, but it rather indicates purity of motive and integrity of heart as contrasted with hypocrisy and wickedness. Every man finds God what he himself is. Compare 26 with Lev. xxvi. 21-24. Our moral character gives its shape to our thoughts of God.

JOYFUL ANTICIPATION (28-45).—God's way is perfect, and He maketh our way perfect. Walls and troops cannot oppose us, when God's way lies through them, and we are on the line of his purpose. Swift and sure-footed in slippery places (33). Strong in battle (34). Oh, the gentleness of God. It has done more for us than severity. The Common Prayer-book translates, "Thy loving correction."

THE CLOSING HALLELUJAH (46-50).—We must stint our words when we thank our fellows, lest we be extravagant. But mortal lips need never refrain themselves for fear of saying too much to God.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 28.—Psalm XIX.

The Psalm of the Two Books. If Psalm viii. were written at night, this must have been by day. God is called EL in the first part (1-6); JEHOVAH in the second (7-14); as if his glory as Creator were the stepping-stone to loftier conceptions of Him in redemption. From both sources comes the sense of sin.

NATURE.—There is the blue tapestry of the azure, and the expanse of the firmament, woven by God. There is the sacred silence of the dawn. "No speech, no language; unheard their voice." There is also the universality of their witness-bearing. "Line" is the compass or territory through which they speak; some translate it "chord"; but there is no tongue in which the works of God do not speak. Does not the picture of the dawn, in which the sun comes forth radiant as a bridegroom, strong as an athlete, make us think of the resurrection? And is not Jesus our Sun, from the heat of which no loving heart need be hid? (Mal. iv. 2; John i. 14; Rom. x. 18; Eph. iv. 10).

REVELATION.—Six synonyms are used of the Word of God; and twelve qualities are ascribed to it. How truly might our blessed Lord have appropriated ver. 10. The man who, as David, lives a simple natural life, is he who best appreciates the Bible.

CONFESSION AND PRAYER (12-14).—"Errors"; the same word is used Lev. iv. 2, 13. Errors, &c., will, if not checked, lead on to presumptuous and deliberate sins. The dominion which the Psalmist feared is expressly referred to in Rom. vi. 14. What a claim we have on God when we can say, "Thy servant." For the seventh time he repeats the covenant name Jehovah, with two last, loving epithets, Rock and Redeemer.

THURSDAY, MAY 29.—Psalm XX.

This Psalm may have been written on such an occasion as that of 2 Sam. x. It may be used especially when the armies of our king are going forth to war.

THE PRAYER OF THE SOLDIERS (1-4).—Ready drawn up for the fight, the soldiers pray for their king, who was wont on the eve of battle to bring sacrifices and offerings for success. The name of God is his character, and the God of Jacob will not reject or forsake any worms as weak as the patriarch was once.

THE RESOLVE (5).—As the banners wave in the breeze it is expressly said that God is the object of trust. The Lord is our banner (Ex. xvii. 15), and we succeed so far as we set forward in his name and for his glory.

THE VOICE OF THE KING (6).—The devotion of the soldiers seems to their leader an omen for good. God's holiness is a gaurantee of his faithfulness. The Hebrew for "strength" is plural, implying the infinitude of God's resources.

THE FINAL CHORUS OF THE HOST (7-9).—As they look across the field to the embattled array, they contrast the chariots of cavalry of the foe with their slender equipment, and their respective boasts. But, lo! as they gaze, their enemies are scattered, and with the brief ejaculation, "Save!" they hurl themselves headlong in pursuit.

FRIDAY, MAY 30.—Psalm XXI.

This is evidently a companion Psalm to the former. The blessings there asked are here gladly acknowledged to have been granted: and bright prognostications are entertained for the future. How much of it is only true of our King. Let us read it over with an especial reference to Him, as He rides forth on his white horse.

(2.) Contrast the silent desires of that spoken request.

(3.) God's help anticipates our needs. It goes before us.

(4.) Our life is to be measured only by eternal ages.

(5.) These terms are used of our Lord in Heb. ii. 9.

(6.) Blessedly true of our beloved dead.

(7.) Trust is the secret of permanence.

(8-12.) Our foes, and the foes of Jesus, must perish. Not one of them shall escape. In the garden of Olivet, Christ's gentle I am He overthrew the soldiers. How will it be when the wrath of the Lamb flames forth? Who will be able to stand? (Rev. vi. 16). Fear them not, "they are not able to perform." The dog may snarl, but it is muzzled.

(13.) Every loyal heart must join in that devout wish. But we may ask whether we have exalted Him to the place of power in the inner kingdom. God has exalted him to be Prince and Saviour; and we shall not have peace until we have done the same (Acts v. 31).

SATURDAY, MAY 31.—Psalm XXII.

The Hebrew inscription to this exquisite ode, which demands as many pages as we can give it lines, is "the hind of the morning." The hind stands for one persecuted to death, and is also an emblem of loveliness (Sol. Song ii. 9). The cruel persecutors are designated as "bulls, lions, and dogs." Perhaps the addition "of the morning" refers to the dawn of brighter and better days. There is a remarkable exchange in the latter part of the Psalm (22-31) of triumph for complaint. Of course, our blessed Lord is in every syllable. Indeed, it reads more as a history than a prophecy. It seems as if the Divine Sufferer recited it to Himself during the agonies of his crucifixion, for it begins with "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me?" and it ends, according to some, in the original, with "It is finished!" "It is the photograph of our Lord's saddest hours, the record of his dying words, the lachrymatory of his last tears, the memorial of his expiring joys." If we have here the sufferings of Christ, we certainly have also the glory that should follow.

Complaints that He is forsaken and unheard, although He had trusted for deliverance (1-8).

Expostulations on the ground of past favour and of the extremity of his sufferings (9-21).

Ejaculations of praise, as the cloud begins to roll away (22-31).

Ah, Psalm that was balm to the pierced heart of Jesus, how precious art thou to those who drink his cup!

International S.S. Lessons.

Sunday Afternoon, June 1.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN.—LUKE x. 25-37.

GOLDEN TEXT: LEV. xix. 18.

"A CERTAIN LAWYER."—A professed student and teacher (1) of the law of Moses, and (2) of the traditions of the elders—the written and the oral law. The difference between the "lawyer" and the "scribe" was very small, and was not clearly drawn. Whom Matthew (xxii. 35) calls "lawyer," Mark (xii. 28) calls "scribe." Probably the scribe dealt more with the text of the law, and the lawyer with its principles.

"TEMPTED" = Put him to the test, the motive of the testing being undetermined. "WHAT IS WRITTEN IN THE LAW? HOW READEST THOU?" Observe this interrogative reply; how courteous to this public teacher! Yet, how effective! Also, how it ignores all authority but that of the written Word—to Jesus the only court of appeal!

"THOU SHALT LOVE THE LORD," &c.—Love—not serve; for service without love cannot be acceptable to the love-desiring Father. Our love is more to Him than gift or service can ever be; nay, the highest service cannot be without love. Such love to God involves the abiding presence in the heart of the God of love, and the consequent experimental knowledge of his love.

"AND THY NEIGHBOUR AS THYSELF."—Put second, because dependent on the first. God's love only, by producing supreme love to Him, can kill our natural selfishness, and lead us to put our neighbour's honour and well-being on a level with our own.

"THOU HAST ANSWERED RIGHT."—"Thus to love is, as Jesus says, the path to life; or, rather, it is life itself. God has no higher life than that of love. Salvation is really loving. The Gospel does not differ from the law in its aim; but only in its indication of means, and the communication of strength."—Godet.

"WILLING TO JUSTIFY HIMSELF."—Had any condemned him? Only his own heart. It is significant that he seems to have no doubt of his love to God, though probably he had none at all. It is the lower law that convicts him.

"DOWN FROM JERUSALEM TO JERICHO."—called "the Bloody Way"; it has well earned its name, being until quite recently the favourite haunt of brigands, who hid in its numerous caves and defiles.

"BY CHANCE."—Rather, at the same time. "The word 'Chance' does not occur in Scripture."—Farrar.

"PASSED BY ON THE OTHER SIDE."—Consider how many and weighty the excuses he might have made for doing this. "It's every man's duty to look after himself." "The danger is tremendous: if I stop, there will soon be two robbed and murdered, instead of one." "He is half-dead now: probably my care won't save him; my risk will be made for nothing." "I am no hand at sick-nursing; perhaps someone else will come along who can help," &c. But even these excuses, so weighty in the court of human selfishness, avail nothing in the court of heavenly love.

"LEVITE."—Perhaps he excused himself thus:—"The priest, my superior, didn't feel bound to care for the poor man, why then should I?" "The Levites performed the humble services of the Temple, as cleaning, carrying fuel, and acting as choristers. Levites were also writers, teachers, preachers, and literati. The scribes and lawyers were frequently of this tribe, which were set apart by Moses as the intellectual body in the nation."—Whedon.

"A CERTAIN SAMARITAN."—Marvellous boldness to make a Samaritan, the half-heathen, the heretic pretender, the hater of every Jew, and whom every Jew hated as a religious and patriotic duty—to make him the hero of his story, while a Jewish priest and a Levite are but foils for the display of the Samaritan's virtues. This is all the more remarkable in view of our Lord's judgment respecting the Samaritan religion. His wonderful patriotism, too, adds to the marvel of this saying. "Christ contrasts the Samaritan with the priest and Levite, not to honour Samaria or do despite to priests and Levites, but to teach that the most despised outcast who fulfils the law of love is better than the most honoured minister of religion who disregards it."

"ON THE MORROW."—What "patient continuance in well-doing," perseverance in kindness! He did not set limits to "his duty," and then leave the rest to others. No! He had taken the man's case to heart, and so had made it his own. Thus self is lost sight of throughout.

"TWOPENCE" = Average wage of labourer for two days (Matt. xx. 2); or price of a full meal of bread for twenty-five men (Mark vi. 37).

"WHICH...WAS NEIGHBOUR," &c."—The key to this parable. The question asked was "Who is my neighbour?" The question answered, "Who is the neighbourly man?" The lawyer's question was never answered. Herein we are taught that he who has a neighbourly heart will surely find his neighbour. True godliness is not doing prescribed duties; it is life—the outcome of living love.

"GO AND DO THOU LIKEWISE."—"Go"; don't wait, or loiter; but go immediately. "Do"—not dream, or talk; but act.

LESSONS.

(1) The importance of judging ourselves, not by our own thoughts, or by our neighbour's opinions, or actions, but by God's Word alone.

(2) How calmly Jesus assumes that this law of love rests on all alike.

(3) Our great concern should be to be right within.

(4) To get a right spirit we must receive Jesus, not only to forgive us, but to remain in us a never-failing spring of loving life.

(5) He is the good Samaritan, and we the wounded traveller. How that man must have loved his deliverer! how he must have trusted him too. "Go and do thou likewise."

(6) The central lesson is the holy beauty of self-forgetting compassion. This should be pondered long, and with much prayer.

PERSECUTION IN SPAIN.

(Translation of an article in a Madrid paper.)

"OUR readers will remember the disgraceful things which happened in Criptana some months back, which show at what a low ebb liberty of conscience is still in our restored Spain. We publish to-day a letter from the daughter of the Protestant pastor, Mr. Lawrence, which is a leaf torn from the history of religious intolerance of our own times. It is as under:—

"'Criptana, April 21, 1890.

"'DEAR FATHER,—We have had fresh annoyances. We thought peace had begun to prevail, so we decided to remain at home with the doors and windows closed, living in the back part of the house. They thought we had left the town, so that, with the exception of some cries of "Long live the Virgin," they left us in quiet. When at night time all appeared in peace, we opened the door for our friends, among whom was one who said that while the procession was passing, he and others would keep the door and warn all to leave us in peace. About nine o'clock, while we were talking, we heard a violent rap at the door, given by some men who were determined to enter at all hazards. Two of our friends went to tell them they must not come in. Soon after all were gone the house appeared to be quiet, and we retired to bed, when after a little time we heard again violent rapping, which we thought would break down the door, with shouts, "Let them come out, let them come out." We do not know how many men there were. You can imagine what was our agony, not knowing what to do. But I plucked up my courage, and opening the window, asked who was there. To which I was answered many times, "Your servant." "Who are you, and what do you want?" The answer again was, "Your servant." Seeing that we would not open the door they went away. But twice after they returned to repeat the scandal further on in the night, accompanied by loud knockings and vile words. In vain, as at other times, we sought protection from the authorities, and seeing the state of matters here, we decided to get a cart and go to Alcazar de San Juan, because we felt sure that we could not possibly pass another night here without certain danger.

"'This morning the Bishop arrived, so there is naturally much excitement in the town. To-morrow we shall go to see the Judge at Alcazar, unless we have a telegram from you to the contrary. 'ISABEL LAWRENCE.'

"The Alcade of Criptana answered Miss Lawrence that the affair being before the tribunals, he could not interfere. We should like to know if liberty of conscience exists in Spain, and if we are worthy of a place on the map of Europe."

KESWICK CONVENTION

FOR THE DEEPENING OF SPIRITUAL LIFE.

JULY 21 TO JULY 26.

BELOVED FRIENDS AND SERVANTS OF JESUS CHRIST,—Again in humble yet rejoicing confidence that the Lord will meet with his gathered children when acknowledging Him as Head over all things to his Church, we invite all who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, to a Convention proposed (D.V.) to be held at Keswick, from Monday, July 21, to Saturday, July 26, 1890.

Our desire is that we may humble ourselves before God, and seek from Him the fulfilment of his wondrous Promise in the abiding Presence of our Lord Jesus Christ, by the indwelling of the Holy Ghost, enabling us to glorify Him, and be his witnesses, in a world that forgets and denies Him.

We ask Him to search us, "Who hath his eyes like unto a flame of fire"—and who says "I know thy works" (Rev. ii. 18, 19).

May we come together prepared for, and desiring this searching, and trying of our ways, and seek that we may be "cleansed from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God" (2 Cor. vii. 1), the Great Cleanser Himself abiding in us and keeping us clean.

We are afresh reminded how short the time for service is, by the call Home of our beloved brother Henry F. Bowker, who for the past six years was one of the Conveners of this Convention, and presided over us since our dear brother Canon Harford-Battersby fell asleep in Jesus.

Happy indeed is the thought that the Great Head of the Church Himself presides over us, and changeth not; so in trustful confidence let us again prove the mightiness of his love, and his delight in blessing his children.

The day of our "redemption draweth nigh;" may we be whole-hearted in seeking to be prepared for the coming Bridegroom. So many signs of his approach are around us that we may well lift up our heads and rejoice—at the same time desiring to be taught by Him what is wanting in each one, to prepare us to welcome Him, and "not be ashamed before Him at his coming" (1 John ii. 28).

May his words to the Philadelphian Church be addressed to us, and the promise "to him that overcometh" be our blessed portion (Rev. iii. 7, 13).

May we believingly ask the fulness of the Holy Spirit in our meeting together, and that He may by the mouth of his servants, through his Word, take of the things of Christ and show them unto us—that God may be glorified in us, and we richly blessed in Him—and more used in his service.

Our dear Brethren who have, we trust, been "sent forth by the Holy Ghost" to foreign lands from our midst are filled with Praise, for "all things that God" has "done with them," in Ceylon, India, and elsewhere.

Valueing as we do the "life more abundant" ourselves, may it be ours to hand on the blessing to others, as the Lord may open the way; may our God count us "worthy of this calling, and fulfil all the good pleasure of his goodness, and the work of faith with power, that the name of our Lord Jesus Christ may be glorified" (2 Thess. i. 11, 12).

Yours faithfully in Christ Jesus,
For the Trustees of the Keswick Convention,
Broughton Grange, Carlisle. ROBERT WILSON.

Mr. John Postlethwaite, Eskin-place, Keswick, will again kindly act as Hon. Secretary, to whom applications for lodgings or hotel accommodation may be sent, stating particulars of what is desired. Anyone taking rooms for longer than one week will find it easier to obtain accommodation early.

THE PURE LITERATURE SOCIETY is exercising an influence for good in many parts of the country, mainly by inducing small dealers in books and papers to cultivate trade in really wholesome publications. During the past thirty-six years the Society has done much to promote the circulation of good periodicals, also to popularise books which everyone may read to profit. Parochial and other libraries are supplied with volumes at half price, and small newsvendors are induced to give up selling trash, and let pure literature have a fair chance. From first to last the work has been good, and we are glad to see, from the report for 1890, that those who have the interests of the Society at heart continue to receive much encouragement. The offices of the Society are 11, Buckingham-street, Strand, W.C.

MISSIONS TO SEAMEN SOCIETY.

Patron—Admiral H.R.H. THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH, K.G.

THIS Society labours among the great seafaring population of our country, numbering upwards of 625,000 men, who man some 36,000 Merchant, Passenger, Emigrant, Light, and other Ships, and 29,000 Fishing Vessels; not one of which carries a Chaplain. It also labours among the 60,000 Seamen of the Royal Navy.

AFLOAT—Its work is carried on by holding Services or Bible Readings on board the ships when in ports or roadsteads, distributing Tracts, selling Bibles and Prayer Books, and giving Boxes or Books of sound reading to be taken to sea.

In 1888, about 6,000 Bibles were sold; 750,000 Disused Bibles, Tracts, &c., distributed, and 10,000 Boxes or Bags of Books given to ships.

ASHORE—Its work is threefold:—

I. Spiritual: In 51 Churches or Mission Rooms at various ports, at home and abroad, where seamen are ministered to on Sundays and week-days, by the Society's Chaplains and Scripture Readers.

II. Philanthropic: The men being rescued from publichouses and crimps, and induced to come to the Society's Institutes, where they are provided with good reading, newspapers, &c., with means of writing to their families, and harmless games.

III. Temperance: In 1888, about 8,000 Seamen signed the Temperance Pledge; and during the last 10 years 77,000 have signed it.

Information as to the details of the work is given in the Society's Magazine Word on the Waters.

Increased FUNDS are urgently appealed for, to enable this good work to be maintained and extended. Subscriptions and contributions should be sent to the Secretary, Commander W. DAWSON, R.N., at the Society's Offices, 11, Buckingham Street, Strand, London.

To the Readers of "The Christian."

DEAR FRIENDS,

I am now in very urgent and exceptional need of Funds for the support of my large and increasing Family of 3,450 Destitute and Orphan Children, containing many Blind, Crippled, Deaf and Dumb, and otherwise helpless Little Ones.

Any gifts of love offered by Christ's servants now, will be specially valued by

Your faithful Co-Worker among

DONATIONS
RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT TO MONDAY, MAY 19, 1890.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

FOURTH ANNUAL CONVENTION

For the PROMOTION of SCRIPTURAL HOLINESS, will (D.V.) be held in WELLINGTON ROAD HALL, STOKE NEWINGTON, LONDON, N.,

JUNE 2nd to 8th inclusive.

Rev. F. D. SANFORD (Boston, U.S.A.) will Preside.

It is with much pleasure, and devout thankfulness to God, that we again have the privilege of inviting His dear children of all Denominations to meet with us in our Annual Convention at Wellington Road Hall.

It has pleased God, in the years that are past, to have made these Conventions the means of great and lasting blessing to many souls: and therefore, with confidence and assurance in the Lord Jesus Christ, we are this year looking for an outpouring of the Holy Spirit which shall result in the sanctification of a large number of believers.

The question of personal holiness is one that is being pressed more and more by the Divine Spirit upon the minds of God's people; consequently there is everywhere an increasing spirit of inquiry, to know the Scriptural teaching upon this most important subject.

The doctrines of the Bible should find a confirmation in Christian experience; therefore the object of this Convention is twofold. First, to develop the Scriptural and doctrinal basis of true holiness; and secondly, that many, through the sanctifying power of the Holy Ghost, may find a confirmatory and satisfactory fulfilment of the truth in personal experience. Let us, therefore, assemble in the name of Jesus; relying upon Him to open the Word to us, in order that we may measure up to the exceeding great and precious privileges held out to us in the promises of God. With this end in view, we have decided to announce a subject for each day's consideration; trusting the Holy Spirit, during the days we are together, to throw much light upon His own truth.

F. MONTAGUE MILLER — FRANK D. SANFORD.

"Full of choice thoughts, beautifully expressed, this work breathes a truly Christ-like spirit, which will render it dear to all spiritually-minded readers."
Word and Work.

"The glow, as from a golden sunset, which the imagination sheds over his style, gives it a great charm."
The British Messenger.

"This work is instructive, suggestive, full of spiritual force, and at the same time strong and manly. These latter adjectives we find it impossible to use concerning many of the devotional books produced in our day. Because we may honestly use them in this case, we heartily commend this book for the refreshment of our busy teachers."—Sunday School Chronicle.

WORKS BY REV.

"Another 'gem of purest ray serene' from the deep waters of our brother's teeming mind. He possesses a ripeness of thought and a beauty of expression which, in our judgment, are scarcely equalled, and in not one instance surpassed, by those of any other living teacher known to us."—The Sword and Trowel.

"This very handsome volume on a subject of perpetual importance will be welcomed, especially by those who are acquainted with Dr. Culross's other excellent works. Dr. Culross has here pre-eminently exhibited his usual excellence as a religious writer. Clear in style and eloquent in argument, striking in illustration. Never wordy or tedious, never flat or cold, but always exhibiting great Christian affection, with the obvious sense of the fidelity his subject so solemnly demands. We are sure this work will be useful wherever it is read."
Baptist Messenger.

JOHN, WHOM JESUS LOVED.

A SKETCH OF THE CHARACTER, WRITINGS, THEOLOGY, AND INFLUENCE OF THE BELOVED DISCIPLE.

With Chromo-Lithographic Views.

Tinted covers, 2s.; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d. Cloth bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

Rev. C. H. SPURGEON says:—"Preachers abound; but divines are few. The printing press pours forth a mass of matter; but a real book is a phenomenon. We count ourselves happy, for we have met with a divine in Dr. James Culross; and in his work, entitled 'John, Whom Jesus Loved,' we have found a book. Many writers are mere echoes of other men's voices—they imitate the good steward in bringing forth things old, but things new are quite out of their way. One of the excellences of Dr. Culross is the freshness of his thought. The dew is on his branch; he is no withered bough of the autumn frost. His mind allows young flowers to break through its soil after their own fashion, and to blossom in their own sweet way."

"It is altogether without reserve that we commend the work before us. It is not a bottle of milk for babes, but a portion of meat for men. A half-dozen readings will only make it more interesting to those who meditate upon what they read."
The Sword and Trowel.

"We can most heartily commend this most refreshing and helpful book to all our teachers. It is full of carefully selected information, most valuable to those who have to use the writings of John as a text-book. It is the work of one who is evidently in close sympathy with the ardent loving nature of the beloved Apostle. ...It is a most healthy book for quiet, meditative moods. . . . Our teachers will get a great blessing in communing with the apostle John through the help of this truly valuable book of Dr. Culross."—Preacher's Storehouse.

THE HERALD OF MERCY.

A MONTHLY ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE FOR THE PEOPLE.

PRICE ONE HALFPENNY.

PRESS NOTICES.

"'THE HERALD OF MERCY' ought to be very widely spread in the homes of the poor, where we are certain it would meet with a hearty welcome. To ministers and visitors we recommend it as one of the best works we know."
Preacher's Analyst.

"This excellent magazine is in every respect worthy of its originator and of its name. It contains a great variety of interesting and instructive articles, both in prose and verse, all illustrative of some important truth; but its principal aim seems to show the fulness and freeness of God's mercy, and the simplicity of the way of salvation. We heartily recommend it."
Wesleyan S. S. Magazine.

"This 'HERALD' ought to be specially welcome. The illustrations that abound on every page will make Gospel truth attractive to the eye as well as to the heart, and the simple poetry by different writers ought to help many weary souls. We most heartily wish 'God speed' to 'The Herald of Mercy.'"—Congregational Magazine.

"Few periodicals succeed in preserving their original fervour as 'The Herald of Mercy.' The editor has gathered around him a staff of writers who are animated by the same spirit which shone so brightly in Duncan Matheson. Primarily designed for humble homes, 'The Herald' is sure of a welcome in the mansion as well as the cottage."—Christian Leader.

A DEVOTED LIFE.

Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d. Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

PRESS NOTICES.

"This is one of the most readable biographies we have had the pleasure of perusing. . . . Christian workers will find it a most helpful, stimulating, and instructive book. We have great pleasure in recommending this interesting work."
Irish Congregational Magazine.

"In its subject and in execution this biography is of no common order. We have found the study of so sweet and noble a life, a joy to our heart and a stimulus to our zeal. . . . The sketch is a vade mecum for any who seek to be saviours of the sin-sick, and helpers of the poor."—Cambridge Congregational Magazine.

PEARLS OF WISDOM,

FROM THE PARABLES.

By A. L. O. E.

With 24 Full-page Original Illustrations.

Cloth boards, 3s. 6d.;
Bevelled boards, gilt edges, 4s.

"The precious pearls of divine wisdom are here set forth to the readers in unique setting of Oriental treatment, at once pertinent and instructive. We commend the volume to the special attention of ministers, lay preachers, and Sabbath-school teachers as a most helpful auxiliary to the elucidation of the Saviour's parabolic teaching."—Primitive Methodist.

"Never were the parables seen to better advantage, never did they seem so full of meaning, purpose, point, and never were their details made so winsome and stimulating. Religious teachers of all denominations will find the volume exceedingly suggestive and stimulating."
Oldham Chronicle.

A Special Cheap Edition of "PEARLS OF WISDOM" is also published, price 6d., in Tinted covers; 1s. in cloth; 1s. 6d. cloth boards, gilt edges.

PERCIVAL'S PICTURE GALLERY

By A. L. O. E.

With Coloured Frontispiece.

Elegantly bound in cloth boards, with gilt edges, 2s.

FOOTSTEPS OF TRUTH says:—

"Thank you, A.L.O.E., for introducing us to 'Percival's Picture Gallery.' We have walked through with great pleasure, admiring the chaste productions of a rich fancy, and the skilful interweaving of the moral with the picturesque. We recommend our readers to follow our example, which they can do for two shillings."

THE CHRISTIAN COMMONWEALTH says:—

"This book is a gem. The invalid artist, sketching his pictures and telling his wonderful stories, is a tender and beautiful portraiture. The get-up of the volume is a credit to the publishers. It will make a fine Gift-book, fit for any recipient."

ONE RECENT CASE WILL BE GIVEN IN THIS JOURNAL EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.
(THIRTY-THIRD SERIES.)
INFLAMMATION of the PLEURA, or MEMBRANE of the LUNGS, and GENERAL WEAKNESS.

Two years ago I was consulted by Rev. G. Bromley, then of Whitby, Yorks, relative to the case of Miss Annie Bennett, of Scoresby-terrace, Whitby. He says:—
"The mother is very anxious, and has been strongly advised to apply to you."
The patient was a girl, then twelve years old. Bronchitis had first attacked her, and there was at this time inflammation of the lining membrane of the lungs—subacute, accompanied with severe cough, and profuse primrose-coloured expectoration, and dull, heavy pains in the left side. She was getting weaker every day, and had been for six weeks. She was highly nervous, and the brain weak.
A month elapsed after following my advice, and I heard as follows:—"Her doctor says the lungs are better. The expectoration is less."
Two months after this I received a report still more favourable. "Spitting much reduced, throat improved. Medical report, lungs in very much better condition."
On the 4th October last the mother (Mrs. Bennett), writing me herself, says:—"My daughter is now quite strong and well, thank God. I quite feared I should lose her when Mr. Bromley first wrote you on her behalf."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

MEMORY. The Christian World of August 8, 1889, says:—"Prof. LOISETTE, by accurate observation of the working of the mind, has attained to a knowledge of its weakness and of its strength, and on this knowledge he bases his power to steady the attention and to reinforce the mental grasp." The Gentleman's Magazine of October, 1886, says:—"The acquirement of this system is a memory education." Lessons by Post, in Class, at Reduced Fees. Ask (on a postcard) for a Prospectus.

"Dr. BARNARDO'S HOMES for ORPHAN and DESTITUTE CHILDREN."

The Friends of Christ's Work among the Waifs and Strays of the Streets are invited to attend

THE 24TH ANNIVERSARY

OF THESE INSTITUTIONS, TO BE HELD (D.V.) IN

THE ROYAL ALBERT HALL, on Wednesday Evening, June 11, 1890.

The Most Honourable THE MARQUIS OF LORNE, P.C., K.T.,

Will take the Chair at SIX O'CLOCK precisely, and will be supported by, among others,

The Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, The Right Hon. Lord Kinnaird, The Rev. Canon Fleming, B.D., Mr. Samuel G. Sheppard, Sir Arthur Blackwood, K.C.B., The Rev. Canon Girdlestone, M.A., and Mr. William Fowler.

Among the other interesting items of the Programme will be the following:—

1. The Presentation of Prizes to Old Boys and Girls by the Hon. the LADY KINNAIRD.
2. Gymnastics & Musical Drill by Little Boys, led by Mr. Matthews.
3. Choir Singing by 1,300 Children, conducted by Mr. J. Proudman.
4. The Babies' Brigade. "To Arms! To Arms!"
5. Calisthenics by our Ilford Girls, under Mr. Solly.
6. Manitoba Emigrants (en route).
7. Our Cripples' Salutation.
8. Weird Music.
9. The Collection. A most important Function!

TICKETS for SINGLE SEATS in different parts of the house Now Ready, varying in price from 1s. to £1 1s., and can be obtained as follows:—Gallery, 1s.; Balcony, 2s. 6d. and 4s.; Arena, 4s.; Stalls, 7s. 6d.; Loggia Boxes, 10s.; Second Tier Boxes, 15s.; Grand Tier Boxes, 21s. TICKETS for BOXES:—Loggia Boxes, to hold 8 persons, £2 10s.; Second Tier Boxes, to hold 5 persons, £2; Grand Tier Boxes, to hold from 10 to 20 persons, £4 and £6.

The engagement of so large a building as the Royal Albert Hall is, under any circumstances, a serious undertaking, but a half-filled house would prove so great a discouragement, that it is hoped the supporters of the Institutions, who can afford to do so, will generously order a number of Tickets for distribution among their friends.

To facilitate this, the Secretary will supply One Dozen SINGLE SEAT Tickets to any part of the house at a REDUCTION of 25 per cent., or 3d. in the shilling, if ordered and paid for on or before May 31. After that date no reduction can be made.

THE UNSUCCESSFUL CANDIDATES.—Contributions are earnestly solicited by the Committee of the Ladies' Samaritan Society, in aid of the Unsuccessful Candidates at the election of Pensioners on the Incurable Fund, recently held at the National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, Queen Square, Bloomsbury. There were 22 Candidates and only five Pensions to bestow, 17 have consequently been unsuccessful. Many poor sufferers looked forward to the election with great anxiety, and it is the wish of the Committee to send a gift of money to those who have failed, to comfort them in their disappointment. Will not kind friends help? Cheques and money orders should be made payable to ROSA PEARMAN, Vice-President, to whom all communications respecting the Society should be addressed, at the Hospital, as above.

ON APPLICATION TO THE PUBLISHERS.

PRESS NOTICES.

"'THE HERALD OF MERCY' ought to be very widely spread in the homes of the poor, where we are certain it would meet with a hearty welcome. To ministers and visitors we recommend it as one of the best works we know."
Preacher's Analyst.

"This excellent magazine is in every respect worthy of its originator and of its name. It contains a great variety of interesting and instructive articles, both in prose and verse, all illustrative of some important truth; but its principal aim seems to show the fulness and freeness of God's mercy, and the simplicity of the way of salvation. We heartily recommend it."
Wesleyan S. S. Magazine.

PRESS NOTICES.

"This 'HERALD' ought to be specially welcome. The illustrations that abound on every page will make Gospel truth attractive to the eye as well as to the heart, and the simple poetry by different writers ought to help many weary souls. We most heartily wish 'God speed' to 'The Herald of Mercy.'"—Congregational Magazine.

"Few periodicals succeed in preserving their original fervour as 'The Herald of Mercy.' The editor has gathered around him a staff of writers who are animated by the same spirit which shone so brightly in Duncan Matheson. Primarily designed for humble homes, 'The Herald' is sure of a welcome in the mansion as well as the cottage."—Christian Leader.

LARGE SCRIPTURE TEXTS.

Printed in very distinct type, in large blue letters. Size 31 in. by 20 in.

From the late AGNES ELIZABETH JONES, Lady Superintendent of Nurses at the Liverpool Workhouse.

"The Lady Superintendent of Nurses begs to acknowledge the receipt of the Parcels of Texts as ordered. She more and more feels their value. The patients lying in their beds can read the words—the print is so distinct.

"As she is going to undertake the charge of several hundred more patients, she wishes to give other Wards the advantage of these Texts on the wall."

70 different Texts, 3d. each.
Mounted on canvas, varnished, and with eyelet holes, 9d. each.
Mounted on rollers and varnished, 1s. 6d. each.

LIST OF THE TEXTS.

1. "Choose you this day whom ye will serve."
2. "The wages of sin is death."
2.* "The gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord."
3. "Repent ye, therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out."
4. "Repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance."
5. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die."
6. "In whom we have redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of sins."
7. "All have sinned, and come short of the glory of God."
8. "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God."
9. "The Lord is nigh unto all them that call upon Him, to all that call upon Him in truth."
10. "Behold the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world."
11. "The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost."
12. "The Lord is good to all; and His tender mercies are over all His works."
13. "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge; but fools despise wisdom and instruction."
14. "Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sins are covered."
15. "When we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly."
16. "Ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus."
17. "Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely."
18. "Now in Christ Jesus ye, who sometime were far off, are made nigh by the blood of Christ."
19. "Seek ye the Lord while He may be found; call ye upon Him while He is near."
20. Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the Just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God."
21. "Herein is love: not that we loved God, but that He loved us, and sent His Son to be the propitiation for our sins."
22. "God commendeth His love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us."
23. "As by one man's disobedience many were made sinners, so, by the obedience of One, shall many be made righteous."
24. "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain, to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing."
26. "The just shall live by faith."
31. "As many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God."
32. "The blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin."
33. "Through this Man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins."
34. "Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by Thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation."
35. "God sent not His Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through Him might be saved."
36. "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life."
37. "He that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him."
38. "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool."
39. "God so loved the world, that He gave His only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have everlasting life."
40. "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by Me."
42. "Let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus."
43. "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners."
44. "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."
45. "Suffer little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not."
46. "He shall gather the lambs with His arm, and carry them in His bosom."
47. "Children, obey your parents in all things: for this is well-pleasing unto the Lord."
48. "I love them that love Me, and those that seek Me early shall find Me."
51. "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth."
52. "Rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for Him."
53. "Casting all your care upon Him; for He careth for you."
54. "The Eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms."
55. "He hath said, I will never leave thee nor forsake thee."
56. "I have learned in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content."
57. "As thy days so shall thy strength be."
58. "In all their afflictions He was afflicted."
59. "Whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth."
60. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved."
61. "Whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God."
62. "He is despised and rejected of men; a Man of Sorrows, and acquainted with grief."
63. "He was wounded for our transgressions, He was bruised for our iniquities."
64. "The chastisement of our peace was upon Him; and with His stripes we are healed."
65. "All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way."
66. "The Lord hath laid on Him the iniquities of us all."
67. "Look unto Me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth."
68. "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters."
69. "If any man thirst, let him come unto Me, and drink."
70. "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised Him from the dead, thou shalt be saved."
71. "It is the blood that maketh atonement for the soul."

The eight following are in Extra Large Type.

25. "Jesus only."
27. "Now."
28. "God is love."
29. "Behold, He cometh."
30. "Have faith in God."
41. "Prepare to meet thy God."
49. "Thou God seest me."
50. "Be ye kind one to another."

THE BIBLE STUDENT in the BRITISH MUSEUM. A Descriptive Guide to the Principal Antiquities which illustrate and confirm the Sacred History. By the Rev. J. G. KITCHIN, M.A., Hon. Curator of the Biblical Museum.

The Archbishop of York writes:—

"I heartily approve of your plan for illustrating the knowledge of Holy Scripture by means of appropriate objects and models. I think 'The Bible Student in the British Museum' is a very good idea, and the book will awaken curiosity as to other objects besides those found in the Museum."

Cassell & Co. (Limited), Ludgate-hill, London.

Just published, price 5s.

"COME, YE CHILDREN." Sunday Stories for Young People. By the Rev. BENJAMIN WAUGH, Author of "Sunday Evenings with my Children," &c. Illustrated.

The Spectator says:—"Mr. Waugh, so widely known for his advocacy of the rights of helpless children, has a care for their souls as well as for their bodies. . . . . This new book is not meant for the children themselves—as it is rather 'over their heads'—so much as for their teachers. It is full of wise suggestions for cultivating their love for and confidence in God and His Divine Son, and for leading them on through love for Him to the love and care for their human brothers and sisters. . . . . The illustrations are very numerous, and many of them very beautiful indeed.

DOROTHEA TRÜDEL:

Or, THE PRAYER OF FAITH.

With Engraved Portrait.

Presentation Edition:

Cloth boards, gilt edges, 2s. 6d.

Cheap Editions:

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.

"Dorothea Trüdel appears to have been a simple-minded woman, of remarkable devotedness and faith. She became deeply penetrated with the striking passage in the Epistle of James, 'The prayer of faith shall save the sick.' Led by circumstances to minister to the afflicted, she carried into practical action the settled conviction of her heart; and in hundreds of cases soul and body were alike healed without other visible means."—Record.

PASTOR BLUMHARDT,

AND HIS WORK.

By REV. W. GUEST.

A descriptive account of the remarkable work of Faith Healing carried on first at Möttlingen, and subsequently at Bad Boll. With Introduction by Rev. C. H. Blumhardt.

With Portrait.

Cloth boards, 2s.

Special Cheap Edition:

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.

"This book contains some most remarkable things, it being the history of a most remarkable man, full of zeal, full of love, full of faith, full of the spirit of prayer, and living in close communion with his God: he was an immense power through the Spirit in the towns and villages of his native land. It will be read with considerable interest; and the Christian reader will be compelled to exclaim, 'What hath God wrought!'"

The Christian.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. David Kerr Cross, M.B., C.M., of the Free Church of Scotland Livingstonia Mission, Lake Nyassa, Africa.

The action of the National Vigilance Association in endeavouring to purge London public hoardings of objectionable posters is much to be commended. The magistrate before whom a recent application was heard seemed to think it was a matter that could be dealt with by the police. By all means; but how is it that the police take no action till the evil has done its work, and till the aid of law is invoked by a private society? The constant recurrence of these offences against public morals clearly shows that the price of protection is unsleeping vigilance. The National Association, under the active guidance of Mr. W. A. Coote, its secretary, is ready to take action wherever it is needed, but the Christian public must accord it an ungrudging support.

Another welcome triumph for social purity is to be found in the judgment of Mr. Justice Cave, in which he condemned to a term of imprisonment a solicitor who had sought to defeat the course of justice by screening wealthy offenders against morals, and by helping to place inconvenient witnesses beyond the jurisdiction of the English Court. The judge properly commented in terms not at all too severe on the complaisant acquiescence of the Attorney-General, who was prosecuting on behalf of the Treasury, in a suggested lenient treatment of the culprit at the bar. It is really most discreditable to the profession that the head of the Bar should connive at wrong-doing, and we cannot be too grateful to Mr. Justice Cave for having so worthily sustained the integrity of the English Bench.

The "May-meeting" season draws to its close, and questions are being asked as to the general tone and character of the gatherings. We rejoice to believe that the meetings have, on the whole, shown the true spirit, and given promise of lasting results. The Record, in its last week's issue, said:—

> That upon the whole speakers do thoroughly realise the importance of their work, and that the influence of the May meeting is increasing, there seems good reason to believe. One evidence is found in the sudden conviction amongst High Churchmen that they ought to have some share in the enthusiasm drawn out at this season. They select the annual gathering of the S.P.G. as marking the absence of the enthusiasm and fellow-feeling conspicuous at the evangelical gatherings. They comment with natural regret upon the fact that whilst the C.M.S. can get together, equip, and send off to Africa five men in six days, Bishop Corfe has for six months been looking for half a dozen clergy to join him in his work, and has so far only found one.

High Churchmen, to all appearance, can only follow the "May meeting" at a considerable distance. Without claiming power to prophesy, we may with confidence anticipate the failure of any effort to galvanise ritualistic ecclesiasticism into vigorous independent life.

Even the Roman Catholics are not altogether oblivious of the May meetings. Last week, while Protestants were in session at Exeter Hall, praising God for national deliverance from the Papal yoke, and encouraging one another to resist the insidious encroachments of Rome upon civil and religious liberty, tracts were being distributed outside the building professing to answer the question, "What do Catholics believe?" Zeal for truth and moderation in contention were the warp and woof of these publications of the "Catholic Truth Society." This, however, is not the way of Rome under all circumstances. We must go to her councils and catechisms for the undiluted article, and there we find traces of a spirit quite different from that of these tracts, in which she affects jealousy for God's Word, and expresses detestation of creature worship. Moreover, for evidences of superstition we must go to her manuals of devotion; while for her lust of power, even unto "massacres, treasons, and murders," such as the tract repudiates, we appeal to history, which undeniably shows Rome to have been the usurper of all authority, temporal and spiritual, and the ruthless and anathematising destroyer of the saints of the Most High.

Referring to recent proposals in regard to the conquest and civilisation of Africa, an Irish contemporary says:—

> We hope, however, in the work of conquest and colonisation it will never be forgotten that we are a Christian nation, and that natives will not be prejudiced against Christianity by the methods or policy of a nation so distinctly identified as ours is with the Christian name and character. It is to be regretted that too many of those who represent this Empire in foreign, and especially in semi-civilised countries, carry everything but Christianity with them in their work. We believe a great future lies before this country in Central Africa. We would desire to see Britain extend her dominions and her borders, but we would like her to remember that with the extension of her trade and name there should be the inculcation both by precept and example of those Christian principles without which there can be neither individual nor national prosperity.

We commend these words to the attention of all who may have any influence in the matter. The seed has been sown in Africa by a band of noble martyrs, who gave up their lives for Christ's sake; and it would be lamentable indeed if now the greed of gain and the thirst for territory were permitted to destroy the good that has been done.

It is to be regretted that the proposed legislation in regard to the factory operatives of India, to which we referred in our last issue, does not promise to be of a more distinctly protective nature. A Christian Government ought to have sufficient moral courage to legislate for the cessation of factory work on Sundays, even in India, and it seems like begging the question to provide in the Bill for "four holidays a month," with the idea that the mill owners will find Sunday to be the most convenient day upon which to close their works. The Christianity that is unwilling to defend the sanctity of the Lord's Day is surely not of a very robust kind.

In a recent paper in regard to the grievances of the barmaids, which Miss Black has contributed to the current number of The Woman's World, it is pointed out that in some cases where there is no Sunday work "it is the rule to send the girls out at ten on Sunday morning and not to allow them to return until midnight." It is not difficult to see into what temptations a friendless girl must thus be thrown in a large city, especially when it is remembered how low is the remuneration paid to them in only too many cases. But is this practice confined to the keepers of public-houses and refreshment-rooms? We certainly have been informed that there are large drapery establishments in London where the same rule obtains, and where, if the girls prefer not to go out for the day, dinner is not provided for them. Such employers as these incur a great and terrible responsibility, and it is to be regretted that the matter is one with which legislation cannot deal.

There is in the Irish Metropolis an admirable unsectarian society under the name of "The Dublin Needlework Guild," whose object it is to provide articles of clothing for distribution in charitable institutions, hospitals, poor houses, &c. In the year 1889 no fewer than 4579 articles of clothing were contributed by the 1782 associates, each of whom is obliged to give two garments annually. We should be glad to see this example imitated in other centres, for there is true charity in giving time and thought to the needs of the deserving poor. The blessing promised in Holy Writ is for him that "considereth" the poor, and this consideration involves something more than the gift of money.

At the recent bi-monthly meeting of the Presbyterian Assembly's Board of Missions in Belfast, very interesting particulars were given with respect to the mission work in Syria and Palestine. In Damascus there are twelve native helpers, sixty communicants, an attendance of 240 at Lord's Day worship, and a Sabbath-school attended by 143 children. In many places in Syria the work is flourishing greatly, in one centre the average nember attending the services on the Sabbath being 525. When it is remembered that only so recently as thirty years Protestant Christianity was almost exterminated in Syria, this is a condition of things to thank God for.

Mr. Bradlaugh may be supposed to have studied European Socialism, and his outlook in The Universal Review for May deserves attention. He apprehends that to win back the temporal power, and to thwart the Italian monarchy, the Church of Rome will use the democracy through Continental Socialism. The dictum that the end justifies the means has led to strange surprises on the part of the Papal Conclave, and signs are not wanting of ominous action in the direction indicated.

The Universal Review publishes a long list of members of Parliament and of literary and professional men who join in a protest against recent Russian atrocities. It is affirmed that outrages equal in enormity have been committed by our own Government. If so, an impartial enquiry is demanded which shall satisfy the nation. The protest of Englishmen against a disgrace to civilisation, and against horrible deeds of inhumanity, ought not to be silenced.

Having last week taken exception to a passage in the address from the chair of the Congregational Union, we are the more ready to quote the following from the words which closed the session. The chairman objected to call that a "forward movement" which disguises the sin that was in human hearts, and which, frittering away the idea that men are sinful, teaches otherwise than did Christ. He added:—

I do not want to see the day when a theological professor is bound also to be a professor of cricket and football. My increasing conviction is that, if we fearlessly preach Christ's Gospel, all social matters, amusements, and entertainments will find their own level, and that will be a high and useful one. They will not then claim a regard and attention higher than that paid to Christ Himself. This present danger is a backward one.

Before the month closes reference may gratefully be made to a field of improvement which, while in danger of being overlooked, is the reward of long labours, prayers, and sacrifices. The American Missionary had an article lately on the future of the negro. There are now eight millions of them on the American continent, instead of four millions freed by Lincoln. At the present rate of progress, in fifty years there will be 64,000,000 blacks. They do more work now than before emancipation. Many are coming into ownership of land. They have accumulated property estimated at £50,000,000 sterling. In mechanical, agricultural, and artistic skill, and in the professions of physicians, lawyers, and engineers, their progress is most marked. They edit also and manage a hundred newspapers. All events go to show that the uprising of the children of Ham is a part of the unfolding scheme of God's providence in these days.

A German critic of the highest order, in dealing with a recent sceptical English novel, points out that, though in the volume revelation is included in the list of "impossible miracles," the denial of revelation is "the death of all religion." The author's expressed wish to preserve religion whilst labouring to destroy faith in Christ Jesus, is an untenable position. Professor Beyschlag asserts that the fact that the religious histories of all people are full of fancied miracles only proves that the religious spirit cannot rest in a God whose hands are tied by his own creation. Man's will can disturb the order of creation; then why not God's will?

THE WRECK OF THE "DACCA."—The emigrants on board this steamship, which foundered in the middle of the Red Sea on the 16th inst., left the Emigrants' Christian Home, Blackwall, on May 1, after a season of much blessing. The vessel sank within four hours of striking. All were landed on the reef, some afterwards finding shelter in the lighthouse, and many standing in the water until rescued by the Palmacotta. Mr. A. Wilké, manager of the Home, writes:—"The emigrants lost their all. Who will have fellowship with the Committee of the Home, in praise for the marvellous deliverance, and in practical sympathy, by sending clothing for the 220 single women, 150 single men, and 60 in families, including 40 children under twelve years of age?"

"By Inspiration of God."

IMPATIENCE lies at the root of much present-day error. Scientists have generalised in haste, and not a few followers of Christ have accepted as truth theories which they would have done well to doubt, for the simple reason that they are not reconcilable with Holy Writ. The book "Lux Mundi" furnishes ample illustration of this fault, and instead of deserving commendation for having, as they claim, "faced the facts," the writers stand convicted of inexcusable precipitation and credulity. We are glad to observe that Canon Liddon, preaching at Oxford on Sunday last, exposed the specious character of such concessions. Extolling the authority of Scripture, which the book does not scruple to call in question, he said:—

If the Holy Spirit was really concerned in the production of its contents, they might at least be sure that language was not used in it to create a false impression, and that that which claimed on the face of it to be history was not really fiction in an historical guise. The Book of Truth could not belie either the laws of truth or the Spirit and the source of truth. When they analysed the ingredients that went to make up "the spirit of the time," or any one phase of time, notwithstanding its stout assertions of a right to rule, it melted away before their very eyes, like the fashions of a lady's dress, into shapes and modes which contradicted with an equal self-confidence its former self. They might hesitate before they listened to it as though it were a prophet, or make a fetish of it as though it had within it some concealed divinity.

The "spirit of the time" is ever showing itself to be hostile to the mind of God. It is given to self-glorification, not to seeking the glory of Christ. If the Bible inculcates and promotes a spirit which is humbling to humanity and which seeks first the kingdom of God and the righteousness thereof, then, ipso facto, it shows itself to be Divinely inspired, and not to have originated in man. Well does the Canon say:—

All that wins for the Divine Redeemer more room in the thoughts and hearts of men; all that secures for Him the homage of order and disciplined wills; all that draws from the teaching of the past and from the examples of the present new methods for doing Him the honour which is his eternal due, may be safely presumed to come from a source higher than any in this passing world, and to have in it the promise of true happiness and peace.

This subject of the character of Scripture has been brought with special prominence before the Free Church of Scotland by the writings of Professors Dods and Bruce. Among recent pamphlets is one (published by J. Gemmell, George IV. Bridge, Edinburgh. Price 6d.) entitled, "Remarks on the Bible, by the late Rev. Marcus Dods, father of the well-known professor. Though written in 1828, during the controversy with regard to the Apocrypha, these pages have a real, living interest. The following sentences are as valuable as they are decidedly experimental:—

Few have passed so far into the domain of death, and been permitted to return. I have felt the breath leaving me, that I expected not again to inhale. I have counted the dull, heavy throb of my heart, as it grew fainter and fainter, fully anticipating at every pulsation that it would "heave but once more, and for ever be still!" I have gazed on the faces of those dearest to me till my eye grew dim in the blackness of death, and I could no longer see; and I have listened to the soothing voice of affection, till my ear grew torpid in the apathy of death, and I could no longer hear; and I have felt the icy chillness of death shooting through my veins, arresting the current of life in its course, till sensation itself forsook me, and I could no longer feel.

And while thus placed on the very line that separates time from eternity, what was it that, under a deep consciousness of manifold guilt, enabled me to look forward in the momentary expectation of finally passing that line, calm and tranquil as I am now? It was just that Bible, of whose Divine inspiration I ONCE AS FOOLISHLY MAINTAINED THE LOW VIEW THAT PREVAILS, AS I THANK GOD I HAVE NOW LONG AND CORDIALLY RENOUNCED IT. I consider the opportunity afforded me of bringing it to so severe a test as one of the richest blessings of my life. And recalled as I have been to longer days, I wish to consider every day lost which does not add to my knowledge of its contents, or deepen my experience of its value.

I am well aware that the trying hour will return, and when it does, one of my most anxious wishes will be satisfied if the prolongation of my life be made a means, however humble, of extending the knowledge of the Bible—of maintaining its integrity, and preserving its purity.

Rev. Robert Howie, M.A., in a pamphlet, "Strictures on the Report of the College Committee in the Cases of Drs. Dods and Bruce" (Gemmell. 4d.), ably states the position of those who are jealous for God's Word. Remarking that the Confession of Faith lays down no theory on the subject of inspiration, he says:—

The term inspiration is introduced by the authors of the Confession only as the connecting link between the Divine and the human authorship of the Bible. According to them, inspiration is, as Dr. Martin well puts it, "Just that action of the Divine will which brings the two authorships—the Divine and the human—into concurrence, giving to each its place, and doing injustice to neither. It was needful, because what men were to write was to be the Word of God; because what God was to commit to writing, He was to commit to writing by the instrumentality not merely of men, but of the authorship of men. That is inspiration, defined not as in itself, but by what rendered it necessary, and by what it has accomplished."

"The Moral Difficulties of the Old Testament," by Rev. Samuel Prenter, M.A., Belfast, admirably exposes the perversity, or shortsightedness, which would divorce the Law from the Gospel. There are no "difficulties" in the Old Testament, except such as the New Testament brings to view. The former is revelation in its childhood; the latter is revelation in its full manhood. That the comparison discloses want of uniformity is not surprising. Incompleteness is written on every page of the Old Testament Scriptures. The Gospel, however, is not in conflict with the Law, but it has grown out of it. Christ came "not to destroy, but to fulfil."

COUNT CAMPELLO.—A rumour having been set afloat of the perversion to the Roman Catholic faith of the well-known Count Campello, Mr. Carmichael, a member of the Committee of the Italian Church Reform Association, writes to The Pall Mall Gazette of Tuesday, declaring the rumour to be baseless. He has recent letters from the Count and his fellow workers to that effect.

THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.—By special invitation, Mr. A. J. Arnold, secretary of the Evangelical Alliance, addressed the Assembly in session at Liverpool of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodist Church, briefly setting forth the principles of the Society and touching upon its practical work. A resolution was unanimously passed cordially approving of the aims and objects of the Alliance.

BANBURY.—Mr. Charles Inglis has held an eight days' special mission in connection with the opening of Grimsbury Hall. In the after-meeting many were enabled to rejoice in a knowledge of their sins forgiven. The sixty-minute Bible talks each afternoon in the Baptist Church were greatly enjoyed, and proved a time of real blessing to many. So encouraged were the Lord's people with these services that they were continued by Messrs Newell and Hall.

Mr. H. M. Stanley has suggested to the Executive Committee of the Stanley and African Exhibition that the Stanley Fund should be devoted to the placing of a steamer on the Victoria Nyanza.

THE THREE GARDENS:

EDEN, GETHSEMANE, AND THE GARDEN "WHERE THEY LAID HIM."

BY REV. JAMES CULROSS, D.D.

THE GARDEN OF EDEN.

II.—Innocence.

God's six days' work culminated in man, whom He formed out of the ground, and into whose nostrils He breathed the breath of life, making him a living soul. Up to this point creation had given proof of the power, wisdom, and goodness of its glorious Author; but did not represent Him. Man—quickened by the breath of God, and endowed with reason, emotion, conscience, will—shows forth what his Maker is; not as a shadow, nor as the reflection in a mirror, nor as a marble statue, or "stony image cold and numb," but as a child may be the picture of his father.

Man, God's child, was not left to build and furnish a home for himself by his own labour, like some castaway thrown by a storm on a desert island. Love was in Eden beforehand, and made a place ready for his coming.

Where Eden lay and what were its boundaries the writer of Genesis does not tell.* A distinct locality was evidently present to his mind, which it was presumed the reader would at once think of, or at least be able to discover. General consent fixes it somewhere in Western Asia, in a district intersected or bordered by the Euphrates and Tigris.

Eastward in Eden, as Kalisch says, "in the region of light, where the sun sends his first and purest rays, in that region with which the notions of joy and splendour are naturally associated," the Lord God planted a garden, or (as the Septuagint translates) a paradise. The usage of the word suggests a "park," fenced in, and planted with trees, shrubs, and flowers, and stocked with peaceful animals. We think of glades and groves, fresh with dew, and bright with morn, the gleam and music of sparkling rills, sunlight quivering through green leaves, the song of birds, the hum of insect tribes, wide expanses lying to the sun, delicious odours scenting the breeze, fruits hanging ruddy or golden to the hand, and, overcanopying all, the pure azure sky. Whether God prepared this paradise by the slow processes of nature or otherwise, no hint is given: the hieroglyphic picture is that of a gardener setting plants in the ground, and tending them as they grow into trees. The extent of the garden could not be great, being limited by the ability of a single pair to dress and keep it. Certainly there is no warrant for saying that it "comprised extensive countries."

In the midst of the garden were two mystic trees distinguished from the rest—the tree of life, and the tree of knowledge of good and evil, of which latter man was forbidden to eat under penalty of death. In these two trees God set forth the way of life and the way of death; and, in so doing, asserted his sovereign right to rule in a manner impossible to mistake.

Placed in this garden, man sustained two relationships. On the one hand, he was God's subject, bound to Him in love and duty. He alone on earth was capable of knowing God, of saying Thou to Him, of rendering Him intelligent homage and obedience; of living in fellowship with Him and glorifying Him as God. On the other hand, he was creation's lord, entrusted with undivided sovereignty over the earth. The ground required tilling; the seed required sowing; the herb and tree required culture: the fruits required gathering; the beast of the field, after its kind, required a master's guidance and rule; and to man, as God's vicegerent, the ruler's place was given, and the sceptre was put into his right hand.

Everything lay within his reach that was necessary to his happiness, to the development of his nature, and to the fulfilment of his great destiny. There was sustenance for natural life in the fruits with which the trees were laden, and in the produce of the ground. In dressing and keeping the garden, maintaining its beauty and order, and bringing out its hidden riches, there was provision for healthful labour—for innocence does not imply idleness, nor idleness happiness. There was all the delightsomeness of human affection between two pure hearts. In the mysteries of nature on every side, and in the glories of the sky, there was incentive to the quest of knowledge. There was unbounded scope for moral training in obedience to the Divine will as it might be progressively unfolded. Crowning all, there was the blissful privilege of walking with God.

We have no warrant for attributing to the first man angelic endowments and virtues: such a picture is purely fanciful: but neither can we imagine him a low-browed savage, herding with beasts of prey, making his lair in cave or thicket, little higher than a Caliban or an ape. The inevitable impression made on the reader of the Genesis record is that nothing was awanting to man's well-being and the development of his nature; a path of illimitable advance lay open before him, with no hint that he must rebel against his Maker in order to possess his freedom and enter upon his true inheritance. It would almost seem, too, as if he were endowed with some "sense," now lost, whereby he stood en rapport with the spiritual realm; or as if some window, since curtained or built up, looked to the heavens—like that through which the prophet's servant saw the mountain full of chariot's and horses of fire round about. "Happily joyous of heart toward God," says Melancthon,* "delicately susceptible toward all good and Divine things, he lived in and from God, as the child lives in and from the mother."

The tenure of this happy estate lay in the obedience of faith. Man was to stand by simple fealty to God, rooted in trust. Nothing of the nature of fate or destiny compelled him—no resistless law like that which keeps the planets in their orbits. Trustful dependence on God, conjoined with gratitude, issuing in free-hearted and loving obedience—this was the very idea of his life. As a test of obedience the tree of knowledge of good and evil was planted in the garden, within sight and reach, but fenced off by a prohibitory "command." Had the command been "grievous," had it involved suffering or even great difficulty, it might have been said: The balance is loaded at the danger end, and the test is not fair. But the command was light and easy to obey; and disobedience consequently the more inexcusable. "Thou mayest not eat; for in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." Die; an awful word, yet not interpreted to Adam in its full scope of significance—only enough to create dread, if dread be possible to innocence.

As we find in pursuing the story, sin entered and death followed. Nay, in a sense, the sinning was the dying; and the Divine treatment of man from this point assumes his death, and proposes to raise him from it. At once man took the place of death, and that whole primeval dispensation was brought to an end, and another and higher was introduced. It was not that God exercised "his royal prerogative," and granted a reprieve; it was not that He proceeded to re-knit the broken thread, that the shuttle might go on again, and the pattern be completed; but a new dispensation, involving principles of "grace," was initiated, under which a grander and diviner life than the Edenic was opened up for man, and God was manifested in Redeemer-love.

"Thou shalt not eat of it; for in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." Is this, then, an appeal to man's self-love, and dread of suffering? Is he to be held fast in his allegiance by the mastery of fear? Is he to obey like a slave, under terror of a curse? Is this how "conscience" is created? Does God begin the training of the noblest creature of his hand by issuing a threat? Nay; here is no threat, but merciful forewarning adapted to a will-endowed and responsible moral agent. Without the "command," there had been no summons to obedience; without exhibition of the penalty, man (sinning and lost) might have replied against God: Why was there no danger signal held up—no red light exhibited? But the loving Father bars the entrance on the road to death by a double fence. It should have been enough to say, Thou shalt not, by Him who had the right to say so; but He also shows what must inevitably follow if man shall fall off from God; and this not merely that man in sinning may have no excuse, but that there may be a moral barrier in the way to ruin.

* The name is usually derived from a word meaning "Delight." It seems more probable, however, if not certain, that it comes from Idin, a plain, which is more in keeping with the Genesis narrative.

* Apology for the Augsburg Confession.

HOME OF INDUSTRY.

A large and choice company gathered at the usual workers' meeting last week to greet Miss Synge on her return from the West, where she had inaugurated so many happy meetings and classes for postmen and telegraph messengers, and Mr. Kirkham returned from his visit to the Holy Land.

The farewell hymns sung by the sixtieth band of children gathered in at the Home of Industry touched all hearts. They sail by the Parisian on June 5, in charge of Mr. Merry, Sen. During the past winter much sickness and death around have filled the Homes with young life. Many a touching tale of woe has sunk into the hearts of the workers, to be blotted out, we trust, by Canadian kindness.

The two special speakers awoke feelings of gratitude among the interested audience for God's preserving care. Miss Synge recorded earnest, loving work, in spite of many difficulties; answers to prayer; hearts won by gentleness and wisdom. The incidents of travel in Eastern lands from Mr. Kirkham created mingled feelings of joy and sorrow. The presence of the Lord was felt, as prayer arose for absent fellow-workers in many climes, and for blessing upon the band of orphan boys and girls.

MAY MEETINGS.

Belleville Mission, Paris.

ON Tuesday afternoon last week a meeting was held at Exeter Hall on behalf of Miss de Broen's Belleville Mission, Paris. The work was well described, and while friends must have gone away greatly encouraged, those to whom the work was less familiar cannot but have concluded that the Mission deserves their cordial support. Mr. F. A. BEVAN, who presided, commended the work with confidence, for he has seen it, as well as watched its progress for years.

Miss DE BROEN was not very well, but she delivered an interesting address. For five months the influenza has been troubling her. She told of her efforts to comfort the poor French refugees in London twenty years ago, and narrated how, under the guidance of God, she entered upon work among the Communists of Paris. She had found great joy in speaking of the love of God in Christ to the distressed people. When she began work at Belleville she had no idea of the difficulties that were in store for her, but grace and cheer have been given as the enterprise has enlarged and the stress of the times has required. Now the agencies include a medical mission, Gospel meetings, temperance work, schools on Sundays and week-days, an orphanage, visitation at the homes of the people, and the circulation of the Holy Scriptures, as well as tracts and periodicals. Scripture portions are sold at the medical mission, and altogether over 20,000 have been so circulated. Last year the attendance at the dispensary reached the high figure of 27,359. Miss de Broen asked Christian people not to forget her work. The door is wide open, and all the agencies are carried on with the small outlay of about £3,000 a year. Ladies and gentlemen wanting to spend would find a ready hearing for the Gospel in the villages round about Paris.

Rev. A. A. ISAACS, of Leicester, declared that he had never come into contact with a work so important, as well as so admirably organised and effectually carried out, as the Belleville Mission. He described a personal visit, and told of the blessing his daughter had experienced as, summer after summer, she had spent her holidays helping in the work.

Lord KINNAIRD eulogised the work, which he had frequently seen. Mr. JOHN TAYLOR, who took an active part on the War Victims' Committee of the Society of Friends, which administered relief during and after the Franco-German War, also spoke. His was a cordial testimony, concluding with the statement that one of his daughters had spent several months at the Mission.

Mr. ANDERSSON, a Swedish gentleman, who has for three winters been working in connection with the Mission, spoke of the great spiritual need of the Paris poor. They are incredibly ignorant. More than once questions have been put to him as to whether he wrote the Bible!

When, on one occasion, he was reading about "Le pharisien et le publicain" (the Pharisee and the Publican), a man interrupted, saying there was a mistake, for it should be le Parisien et le républicain (the Parisian and the Republican)! The people are

WITHOUT KNOWLEDGE OF THE BIBLE.

A poor woman told one of the workers, Mr. Hoste, she had "full assurance" of salvation; when asked to explain, she went to a cupboard and produced a bottle of "holy water." Yet, joyful news, some have yielded to the Gospel message. A woman, a flower-maker, has not only acknowledged Christ herself, but brought to the Saviour two girls who work with her.

About a month ago, said the speaker, I visited a woman who was dying of consumption. I asked her whether she was ready to meet death, and she said "Yes," for she had "done her penance!" The people grope in darkness. Eight months ago a man came to the medical mission to be healed; the disease, however, was too far advanced, and the patient had for some time been expecting death. Last week he told Mr. Hoste: "I came to you for bodily healing; I did not get it, but I got healing for my soul. I am saved, and although I suffer very much, I am waiting for the dear Master to take me to Himself." An old woman who had found Christ said: "When I die, don't weep, but say 'What happiness!'"

That the work is of God was grandly demonstrated, and it is hoped that Miss de Broen and her helpers will be much cheered by the steady response of friends to the needs of the Mission.

China Inland Mission.

QUITE a numerous company of deeply interested friends met in the Mildmay Conference Hall on the afternoon of Wednesday week for the anniversary of this Society. The relations and intimate friends of the large body of British missionaries now in the field would in themselves constitute a host, and no doubt many of these were present last week.

In his introductory words, Mr. GEORGE WILLIAMS sounded a note of praise to God for all the favour He had shown to the work and workers of this Mission. Prayer has been very markedly heard and answered in the past, and we may confidently expect that God will smile on the devising of large things for the evangelisation of the millions of China. This, of course, was a reference to Rev. J. Hudson Taylor's plea for a thousand fresh workers from Europe and America, who should give themselves to itinerant evangelisation.

Mr. THEODORE HOWARD read an interesting letter that had come to hand from Mr. Hudson Taylor, dated Singapore, April 16, and addressed to the friends assembled at the annual meetings. We reproduce some parts of it:—

"As our numbers increase and the work grows we need all the more prayer. Each new station opened and each effort to open one brings its own record of difficulties; for our work is a warfare, and we are sure of opposition, at least, from those unseen but mighty powers, the wicked spirits in heavenly places, and not seldom, also, from opponents who make themselves both seen and felt. Where, then, is our strength or even our safety to be found, save in abiding in Christ? We ask your fervent prayers that all our workers may be kept so abiding; and beg for special remembrance for those who, as senior missionaries, superintendents, members of our councils, and directors, are sure to be specially tried, and who need special guidance and support."

Mr. Taylor proceeded to report that in March, 1890, the total number of workers in China, and on furlough, including associates, was 383. "It is no small joy to me that among the last party from England was my dear son Dr. F. Howard Taylor, the third of my children who has joined our work. May I here ask prayer for the children of all our missionaries, that they may all be converted and blessed, and that many of them may be called to missionary service?"

The number of stations with resident missionaries was stated to be 87 (an increase of ten during last year), besides many out-stations worked largely by native helpers. The number of baptisms during the year was 538. On this point Mr. Taylor said, "Great care is now taken in most of the stations not to baptize candidates without a previous testing probation, in which the profession of each one of having passed from death unto life has been supported by the testimony of a consistent walk. We may therefore hope that there will be fewer subsequent disappointments than where this precaution has been neglected. As an evidence of growth in grace among the converts, we may add that the number of unpaid native preachers has considerably increased. For this we are profoundly thankful: no feature of the work is more cheering. The hope for the future lies, in no small measure, on the work of the Holy Spirit through the spontaneous efforts of the native Church."

After a reference to finances and to mission premises, Mr. Taylor alluded to the fund for superannuated missionaries. "God has put it into the heart of one of our oldest and most liberal friends to found a special fund for worn-out workers by a donation of £4000, hoping that many others will sympathise with his desire to see such workers provided for independently of the current income of the Mission, and will add to the fund."

"Lastly, may I ask your earnest prayers that the whole Church shall be stirred up to quickly obey our Saviour's great command to 'preach the Gospel to every creature,' so far as China is concerned? We have shown the possibility of speedily obeying this command in the pages of China's Millions and in THE CHRISTIAN. A little reprint of this paper, called 'To Every Creature,' has been published by Messrs. Morgan & Scott at 6d. per dozen, and can be had by those who will help to circulate it. The force of the argument and the practicability of the plan have been recognised by many missionaries in China and by returned missionaries in America and Europe; not a few are daily praying for its accomplishment. It would be a great blessing to the whole Church to do the work: hence our desire to see many missions and countries engaged in it. The thing is of God,

AND WILL BE ACCOMPLISHED."

Supplementing Mr. Taylor's statement, the secretary, Mr. BROOMHALL, said the total receipts for the past year were £51,484; but of this £9,188 went to the famine fund, £3,255 to the building fund, and £4,046 to the superannuation fund, leaving £33,642 available for general mission purposes. This was an increase of £3,638 on the previous year, but it was not in proportion to the increase of workers. The brethren and sisters from America are provided for by funds sent from that land. There is need of prayer and trust, said Mr. Broomhall, in reference to funds. In the past we have joyfully raised Ebenezers to God, and we must continue to count upon his faithfulness in providing for those who have gone out to do his will in China; but for these things He will be inquired of, and it is right that each should individually search and see if there be in him or her any cause for the withholding of the needed means.

Touching on the publications of the Mission, he said that a new edition of "China's Spiritual Need and Claims" has just been issued, and also a new edition of "Days of Blessing in China." The circulation of these books would be very helpful to the work. Mr. Broomhall said he did not feel so sanguine as Mr. Taylor as to the number of people who could be reached within a given time, but every true Christian must sympathise with the longing desire that the Gospel should be proclaimed to every creature; nothing less than that could satisfy the heart of Him who tasted death for every man, and who now waits that He may see of the travail of his soul. If the churches at home were aroused to a due sense of their responsibilities and privileges, the work could be carried out both as to workers and to means.

Some very earnest words in the same line of exhortation followed from Mrs. HUDSON TAYLOR. Then Mr. GEORGE ANDREW had an interesting account to give of pioneering work in the provinces of Yunnan and Kwei-chau, and of the hindrances that come from the terrible opium habit. A Chinese lady, wife of Mr. Parker, one of the missionaries, also spoke briefly, dwelling in simple, but truly eloquent words on the havoc wrought among her own family connections by the ruthless opium. In addition to that, since she became a Christian she had seen much of the opium poisoning so common. She put in a touching plea for more medical missionaries, who could deal with the bodies as well as the souls of the people, and for lady workers who would teach her benighted Chinese sisters the way of life. The closing address was by who was most impressive in his statement of the needs of the great heathen communities. We must get beyond mere enthusiasm, he said, and face the hard facts as to the world's condition. After describing, in figures familiar to our readers, the immensity of the world's spiritual destitution, he contrasted with it the existing provision for the spreading of the Gospel light—700 workers among China's 350 millions; about as many more for India's 400 millions; only 13 missionaries to Siam's 8 or 10 millions. Then think of the 90 millions in the Soudan region without a single evangelical witness; and the 40 millions in the Central African lake districts, sitting in heathen darkness. Prayer to God and the passing of resolutions are not enough; something must be done for these perishing souls. There must be a far greater sacrifice of self, and of property, to this work of missions. Instead of a paltry 2½ millions annually, the churches might raise 45 millions a year, if each of the 30 million church members gave but a penny a day. Passing from this point to the wonderful opportunities of service that now exist, Dr. Pierson described the marvellous and really miraculous way in which country after country, and continent after continent had been opened, in the providence of God, to the labours of the Gospel missionary. We shall have to answer for it at the judgment seat of Christ if these opportunities are not utilised in obedience to our Lord's command.

EVENING MEETING.

At the meeting in the evening, Mr. J. E. Mathieson drew attention to the attractions which China offers for workers in the Gospel. Mr. Theo. Howard again read Mr. Taylor's letter. Colonel Morton, as the new superintendent of the Mildmay work, expressed very heartily his interest and sympathy with the Inland Mission. Mr. Edward Pearse told something of the encouragement which he has experienced in opening up work in the city of Chung-ku, Shan-si province, during the past two years.

Dr. PIERSON again delivered an address, his theme being "the regions beyond," which had yet been untrod by the Christian Church. His remarks were based upon 2 Cor. x. 15, 16. Here, he pointed out, the Apostle was warning the followers of Christ not to look back with satisfaction and self-complacency upon the things already attained, but to reckon all that as nothing, and to reach forward to something sublimely in excess of what has been seen before. Some of these "regions beyond" were pointed out. First there was the region of unclaimed promise, and this land was exceeding great. The Church had been told to possess the land, but they had not yet claimed it. Joshua and his followers were commanded to take possession of the Promised Land, but before they could do so they were to measure it off with their feet; they only went over about a third of it however, and they only got a third. Here is an allegory full of meaning to the Christian Church; she should have faith to lay hold of God's promises. Then there is a vast region of prayer that has not been entered. The Son has bidden us to go to the Father in his name, and has promised that whatsoever we ask, believing, it shall be done. This is a "region beyond," which few have realised. Dr. Pierson also drew attention to the privilege of giving, and urged that all Christians should lay aside of their substance regularly and systematically, according as the Lord had prospered them. Lastly he emphasised the need of holy living in the churches at home. This is another region in which there is much land to be possessed. If the power of God is to be manifest among the heathen there must be a high standard of holy living amongst God's people. They must be dwelling in God, and have God dwelling in them, and be continually praying in the Holy Ghost.

This last point was further enforced by Rev. J. H. Horsburgh, and after him Miss Campbell spoke briefly, saying that she had come home from China for no other reason than to tell the people throughout England that the Lord had need of them in his service among the heathen. Mr. George Parker and Mrs. Parker also added a few earnest words.

Christian Blind Relief Society.

IN the hall of Sion College was held, last week, the annual meeting of this Society. It aims at relieving, without distinction of sect, those whose poverty is greatly aggravated by blindness. Lord ROBARTES presided, and spoke in warm terms of the principles and work of the Society. The report of the hon. secretary, Rev. J. PULLEIN THOMPSON (Vicar of St. Stephen's, Bow, E.) told of increased work and advancing prosperity. Nearly 300 poor blind persons are, by means of this Society, relieved from the grinding pressure of want. Residence in distant parts of the United Kingdom is no bar to benefit, pensioners being found from the Channel Isles to the Orkneys. The report concluded with a vigorous appeal for increased help, in order to enable the Committee to double the amount of pension granted. An increase is sadly needed.

Canon SCOTT pointed out how the afflicted poor are often regarded by unkind relatives as incumbrances, and how a little pension gave them a wonderfully different aspect. Rev. C. H. KELLY said that, if the report were well circulated, it would appeal to the sympathies of benevolent people, for affliction knew no denomination, no nationality, and no rank. The blind have compensations, it is true, but none that can really set aside the greatness of their affliction. It was important that relief should be given in the homes of the poor—that husband should not be separated from wife, parent from child. The donors and visitors are themselves blessed; their hearts are softened, their sympathies broadened, and their natures bettered by contact with the blind, who can teach them many lessons.

Mr. F. A. Bevan, Sir John Colomb, M.P., Rev. C. Moinet, Mr. Griffiths, and Mr. Wainwright, treasurer, also addressed the meeting. Dr. Campbell's Junior Choir, from the Royal Normal College of Music for the Blind, sang at intervals.

The Friends and Regulated Vice.

SINCE the repeal of the English Contagious Diseases Acts, in April, 1886, the entire English repeal party have dissolved, except the Ladies' National Association, and the Friends' Association. The latter organisation met for their annual meeting on May 22, at Devonshire House, E.C.

Mr. WILLIAM FOWLER, who was the first to raise the question of repeal of the English Acts in Parliament, exactly twenty years ago, very appositely presided at this meeting. Having got rid of the State legalisation of vice in England, the Friends' Association, like the British and Continental Federation (whose meeting we refer to in another column) has turned its attention to the cause of morality in India. The Friends' Association has a Commissioner in India, collating facts and details as to the provisions and working of the Cantonments Act, which, as that Commissioner alleges, contains clauses practically allowing the licensing of immoral houses, and the more odius powers of the old English Contagious Diseases Acts. Against this system the Friends' Association makes itself an ally of the British and Continental Federation; the Commissioner in India has established two local newspapers in the cause of morality, and so the double object of educating local public opinion, and of collating facts to bring pressure upon the Home Government is accomplished. The moral instruction of the Indian public has really to be conducted de novo; child marriage and all its attendant horrors have to be combated; obscenities of all kinds, and an inherently low standard of morality have to be counteracted; in this good and Christian work the Friends' Association co-operates with its money, its prayers, and its practical activity.

Professor STUART, M.P. was one of the principal speakers at the meeting, and his statement of the relations of the English repeal party and the India Office and Lord Cross, was listened to with very great interest. There is little doubt that unless Lord Cross can show Professor Stuart and the Right Hon. James Stansfeld, M.P., that the Government of India is really and loyally acting up to the letter and spirit of the English House of Commons on this question, the Friends' Association will with energy link itself to the re-organised repeal party which will arise in England, and the cause of righteousness and public purity will be fought again, as it was for the eighteen years prior to 1886.

Thames Church Mission.

THIS Mission gave an account of its stewardship for the past year at its annual meeting, held under the presidency of Sir ALBERT K. ROLLIT, in Sion College, on Wednesday of last week. The district occupied by this Mission extends from Richmond Bridge to the Nore Lightship—a distance of seventy-five miles, forty-five of which are navigable by the largest ocean going craft. The workers have endeavoured to discharge their duties with energy, zeal, and a due sense of responsibility. The figures submitted as to visitations, meetings, the distribution of literature, &c., were eloquent from their magnitude, and their far-reaching significance. To use the words of the secretary, Rev. H. Bloomer, in summing up results, "simple, unvarnished stories of sailors converted, of drunkards made sober, of thousands of homeless emigrants gathered together to listen to the old, old story of Jesus and his love, of bargemen brought in, are evidences that God is with this Mission." There is, it was regretfully stated, a deficit of £582.

The Chairman said the report was interesting, satisfactory, and suggestive, and he gave a very full analysis of some of the most important of its figures. From his long experience as a shipowner, and his more recent connection with deep sea fishing, he had an interest in all that concerned the welfare of sailors. To sailors, England was mainly indebted for her national greatness. He was glad to notice that the Mission cared for the bodies as well as for the souls of seamen. The benefits of the Mission were not confined to sailors; emigrants and others shared its good influence.

Canon BARKER delivered an eloquent address in support of the Mission. He had recently observed that rich men, recognising the responsibility of their wealth, gave away princely sums for good works, such as polytechnics and the like. He would suggest that some rich man should come forward, wipe off the deficit, place this Mission on a sound financial basis, and permanently extend its operations. Rev. BURMAN CASSIN hoped that the Mission would be munificently sustained. Rev. Dr. WHITE said that the Religious Tract Society would always be ready to support the Mission with literature for distribution; he urged private prayer as the means of making its labours effectual. Rev. Mr. BLASHFORD drew attention to the evangelical character of the work; it had nothing to do with ceremonials, but everything to do with Christianity.

Social Purity Alliance.

THIS sturdy little Society, which was the first to take a stand in the interests of public morality, and to maintain the obligation of the moral law upon men and women alike—from which the White Cross Society became an offshoot, and of which the Gospel Purity Society and the Church of England Purity Society owe filial obligations—held its annual meeting in the Council-room at Exeter Hall on May 20, with that well-known champion of morality, Mr. H. J. WILSON, M.P., in the chair. There was a most pleasing reunion of veteran workers, and the establishing of fresh friendships.

During the year, 110 new members have given in their adhesion, making a bead-roll of one three thousand supporters—each one of whom is pledged, not only to personal purity, but to the dissemination of their principles by word and influenee. A large number of public meetings has been held under the auspices of the Alliance throughout the kingdom, and it was encouraging to hear the Secretary report how provincial cycling clubs voluntarily mustered to listen to a sermon on social purity, or members of a local branch came together to discuss the fundamentals of social ethics. A strong, buoyant, combative, and aggressive spirit pervaded the entire meeting—not merely the speakers. Since the inception and formation of the Alliance, the number of offshoots taking up very much the same kind of work had multiplied; no one looked upon this fact as a reason for cessation of effort, but, on the contrary, a motive for renewed vigour in propagandism.

The need of voluntary workers is greatly felt by the Alliance, and while the Secretary has got many new committees and private individuals at work during the past year, he has abundance of openings for other workers.

The speakers included Mr. H. J. Wilson, M.P., Miss Blanche Leppington (who made a most thoughtful, clever, and incisive address), and several ministers. The spirit of the meeting breathed encouragement and hope.

British and Continental Federation.

THIS Federation for the removal from the world of every form of sanction or regulation of immorality by Government and Legislation, which Mrs. Josephine Butler took so large a share in starting nearly two decades ago, held its annual meeting on May 21, at Westminster Palace Hotel, under the presidency of that veteran of the cause, the Right Hon. JAMES STANSFELD, M.P.

The focus of interest in the meeting was a statement from Professor STUART, M.P., in regard to India. The English Parliament, after twenty years of agitation, consented to repeal the English Contagious Diseases Acts; and Lord Knutsford has co-operated in making the regulations in British colonies consistent with that repeal spirit in the House of Commons. But in India the case is different, and the English repeal party have fairly good evidence that the medical and military authorities in India have secured clauses in the new Cantonments Act, which will enable them to supervise and manipulate public immorality as was done under the English Contagious Diseases Acts. Lord Cross, as Secretary of State for India, declines to believe that the Government of India will try to infringe the spirit of the House of Commons on the question, but Professor Stuart and his party at this meeting were sufficiently convinced of the intentions of the Indian authorities to form a kind of Watching Committee, or Committee of Investigation; and they are very firmly resolved that if their subsequent inquiries shall prove their suspicions correct, the whole of the forces in England which fought so stubbornly for twenty years against State Legislation of Vice shall be reorganised, and the campaign on behalf of public and legislative purity shall be restarted.

Certainly Professor Stuart's statement about India was an important and interesting one. He spoke with good authority, with deep appreciation of the gravity of his words, and with chapter and verse for every quotation. Painful as the subject is, it must, for righteousness' sake, be faced, and Christian repealers will face it.

Female Penitentiary and Guardian Society.

FOR eighty-three years this gallant little Society has proffered a helping hand to girls and young women whose one slip from rectitude might have led to their utter ruin, had not that helping hand been extended. And what a tremendous catalogue of good done was read to the meeting on May 21 by the secretary, Mr. W. EDWIN PAGE. Nearly 10,000 women have been suitably married from the Home, placed in respectable situations, reconciled to friends, and otherwise given a fresh start in life since the Society began its philanthropic work. No less than 175 have been so relieved during the year just ended, an average of over three a week.

"The extreme youth and ignorance of those who compose the greater part of the inmates of these Homes must necessarily awaken the compassion and interest of every benevolent mind," said the secretary; and when it is stated that the average age of inmates received was eighteen years, and that five per cent. were led astray at the tender age of thirteen years or under, who would hold a different opinion?

The good done by this Society is not bounded by assisting in one act of reclamation to virtue. Most pleasing testimony of moral and spiritual benefits were laid before the meeting: habits of order and the discipline of life have been inculcated, ignorance has been educated, turbulent and evil passions have been put under moral restraint, modes of livelihood, as well as industry and thrift, have been taught, and in not a few cases the salvation of the body has led to the salvation of the soul.

The financial statement was exemplary, though insufficient. The maintenance of each inmate on a wholesome and healthy dietary is done for 3s. 4d. a week, and the young women are trained so much in "self-help" that during the year they have earned £2,075 in the laundry, and, after allowing for every working expense and cost of necessary fuel, &c., have realised a profit of £826. Friends are invited to give the Home employment by sending their laundry work, which we can testify is beautifully and cheaply done.

The address of the Society is Stamford House, High-street, Stoke Newington. The speakers included Lord Kinnaird (who presided), Rev. R. P. Downes, Rev. J. M. Gibbon, Rev. J. M. Laycock, and others.

Primitive Methodist Missions.

A VERY large and fervent audience attended the annual meeting of the Primitive Methodist Missionary Society in the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Tuesday evening of last week. Much enthusiasm prevailed. All the reports of the home, colonial, and foreign missions gave assurance of further success. Measures have been taken for an extensive system of evangalistic work in London and other large cities. What had actually been begun with much courage and zeal was pioneer missionary effort in a hitherto unattempted field in South Central Africa. In the Australasian colonies the Connexion had been obtaining a firm foothold through its supply of the means of grace to a population scattered widely, in very many instances, over vast areas.

After some earnest words from the chairman (Mr. J. H. PETERS), the advancement of the Connexion in wealth, education, and refinement within recent years was discussed by Rev. R. R. CONNELL, with the view of showing the danger attending that improved material condition of slighting or neglecting spiritual things, and of warning against quenching the missionary spirit. Rev. EDWARD SMITH gave a graphic account of scenes and incidents attending mission work in the slums, and counselled warmly a hearty co-operation with the missionaries, whether labouring at home or abroad. Rev. JABEZ SMITH, who had come home from Fernando Po to recruit his health, and was soon to return to his former station, pictured very vividly the difficulties which the Gospel and those who proclaimed it had to encounter there. Of the old inhabitants he had little hope; and he aimed, therefore, at winning the young, and that was no easy matter. To the delight of the audience, a little native boy, who had been taken to England by Mr. Smith, was brought forward. The child had a very intellectual face. At the request of Mr. Smith, he sang, very sweetly, a version in his native language of the hymn, "Jesus Loves Me." Mr. GEORGE WARNER sketched rapidly what he had seen and heard of mission work in the Australasian colonies. After the customary votes of thanks, a motion protesting against compensation to liquor-dealers was proposed and carried unanimously.

London Anti-Vivisection Society.

THIS Society, founded in 1876, seeks the entire abolition of tortures practised upon sentient animals, under cover of an Act of Parliament that is supposed to protect them from pain and wilful hurt. Instances of infringement have been reported to the Home Secretary (who alone may sanction a prosecution) without effect. Vivisection is practically uncontrolled, while professedly supervised, and, in certain cases, prohibited. The rejection of last year's Parliamentary motion to reduce the salary of the inspector under the Act shows that public opinion is not yet sufficiently educated to warrant the introduction of a prohibitory Bill; but the debate gained new friends to the cause, and exposed the ignorance of the Home Secretary respecting an Act, for the enforcement of which he is responsible, when he declared that the present inspector (Erichsen), whose first annual report bore date 1887, had, for ten or fifteen years, discharged his duties satisfactorily.

Lord TRURO, presiding at the meeting in St. James's Hall on Tuesday afternoon last week, mentioned figures showing an increase in the practice, with disregard of attendant suffering. Mr. REID (secretary) read letters of regret for absence from the Duke of Portland, Mr. Justice Hawkins, Viscount Sidmouth, Right Hon. James Stansfield, Rev. Canon Bell, of Cheltenham, Lady Florence Dixie, and many others. That vivisection is contrary to true science; useless, fallacious, and misleading in its results; virtually uncontrolled; and unreasonable upon religious, moral, and humane grounds—these facts were embodied in resolutions, and abundantly proved and illustrated in the speeches of about a dozen gentlemen, representative of the medical, legal, ministerial, and scientific professions. Mr. GEORGE CANDY, Q.C., while avoiding personality, was unsparing and logical in examination and condemnation of the report (and favourable comments thereon of The Times) furnished by "an inspector who does not inspect," but confines his visits to a licensee to one in twelve months, and is dependent for information upon vivisectors whose communications are not made public. Christians should obtain the annual report and other publications of this Society, that they may inform themselves and use their influence in efficient protest against brutalising, revolting, and fruitless cruelty.

British Women and Temperance.

On Thursday evening last week, the public annual meeting of the British Women's Temperance Association was held in the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street. The large assembly-room, as the hour of opening approached, was filled to excess, and an overflow meeting had to be provided for in the library. The chair in the large hall was taken by Lady Henry Somerset, who had been elected President of the Association, as successor to the late Mrs. Lucas.

The report for the year was read by Miss J. A. Fowler, the hon. secretary. It opened with a touching tribute to the memory of Mrs. Lucas, and the expression of the hope that her mantle might fall on the officers and members of the Association. The number of directly affiliated societies was stated to be 264, and to these must be added 161 branches dependent, making in all 425 organisations. The past twelve months gave evidence of real and steady progress. There has been no decrease in the demand for deputational service; the autumnal meetings in Liverpool were most serviceable, the drawing-room meetings have been attended with advantage, and the quarterly conferences have been instructive and directive. From the visit of Mrs. Leavitt an impetus had been imparted to the movement.

Lady Somerset delivered a most eloquent address, stating that she had felt constrained through her duty to Christ to accept the office of president after careful deliberation and earnest prayer. With exceptional perspecuity and elegance she described the change in the topics and tone of the poetic literature of the country within the present century. Poets like Hood and Mrs. Browning found worthier themes for their muse than imaginary love-sick swains. The terrible struggle of the poor for food and better surroundings has only in comparatively recent times found voice in song. This indicates a healthful, hopeful sentiment in the mind and heart of the people. There are indications that statesmen are awakening to this fact. Sunday closing must remain untouched in Wales. She had received a letter from Lord Randolph Churchill, stating that he believed the time had now arrived when the people ought to have the disposal of the liquor traffic in their own hands. Her ladyship proceeded to show that compensation to the liquor-dealers was illogical, unjust, and impracticable. She had received a copy of a protest, influentially signed, against the action of the Church of England Temperance Society in pledging its support to the Local Taxation Bill. The conclusion of the address was a grand appeal for union among themselves, and strong affiliation with kindred organisations abroad, so that they might go forward, prayerfully, enthusiastically, and zealously against intemperance, in the assurance of ultimate triumph.

Miss Forsaith sketched most felicitously the work of the Association and the character of the ladies engaged in it. Mrs. Henry Kingsley said that ten years ago it would have been impossible to get together such a meeting as they had there then, and there is every encouragement to go forward with temperance reform work, cheered by the Lord's promise, "not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit." Mrs. Barnes, of New York, who carried with her to the meeting the greeting and sympathy of 200,000 temperance women in America, devoted the principal portion of her address to a description of the rise and progress of the Young Women's Temperance Organisations in the United States. She suggested the expediency of following in Great Britain the course and the methods which had been of such signal benefit from the Lakes to the Gulf and from Maine to the Golden Gate.

Miss Conybeare proposed and Mrs. Meehan seconded a resolution which, whilst approving of the proposals in the Local Taxation (Customs and Excise) Duties Bill so far as they might tend to restrict the consumption of liquor, expressed strong condemnation of the attempt of the Government to establish on a side issue, and without due notice, the principle of compensation for annual licences, and to create by Act of Parliament a right to a continuance of licence or compensation for its suspension; and called on the Government forthwith to withdraw those clauses. This resolution was adopted with enthusiasm. Canon Leigh and Dr. Barker also addressed the meeting in the large hall.

Protestant Alliance.

A Conference, followed by a general meeting of Protestants of all denominations, convened by the Alliance, was held on Wednesday and Thursday last week, at Exeter Hall. The first day opened with a morning meeting of delegates, under the presidency of the Dean of Achonry, with a discussion on "the Duties of Protestants," followed by an afternoon gathering, with papers on Brotherhoods, Convents, and "A Protestant Party in Parliament."

General Sir Robert Phayre presided at Wednesday evening meeting. He said that Jesuits, Ritualists, and Rationalists seek, at any cost, to get rid of God's Word. The root of Bible hating is found in Genesis, and illustrated throughout Scripture. Private judgment and public testimony are the two great principles of the Reformation. Jesuit intrigues, which bring desolation and degradation wherever found, are following British explorers and missionaries into Africa.

Rev. James Kerr, of Glasgow, pleaded for an education which does honour to the King of kings amongst rich and poor. Neutrality here is virtually hostility. Protestants demand that the Word of God be elevated to the place of honour in all Imperial institutions, for "What evil hath it done?" The question is not of practicability, but of duty. Is Leo or Christ the lord of the nation? Who has given legislators the right to stand between the Sun of Righteousness and any subject of a Christian and Protestant nation? Even the Papist is not pleased with what he rightly calls Godless schools. Romish denominational schools receive subsidies from Imperial funds, while used for mutilation and misrepresentation of history, and for training in loyalty to a foreign potentate.

Dr. Kennedy Moore considered Sir John Simonds had yielded the defences of the country. Surely Malta may be ruled without a mission to the Pope!

Rev. W. Wyndham spoke of the urgent need for union amongst Protestants. True Protestantism is gentle, persuasive, but strong, severe only against lying, intrigue, and oppression. Potent signs of Jesuit craft may be discerned in the war danger. Rome escaped the effects of revolutions through the adhesion found in mental and moral slavery. Heavenly motives must not be credited to the work of hell. Is it uncharitable to interfere with the work of a burglar? Does it savour of bigotry if we apply that simile to what is seen in the Established Church? Does the apathy of Nonconformists arise from hopes of Disestablishment, from spurious charity, or from declensions in doctrine? The need of the hour is a closer union, not of system, but of interest, with the Word of God as a centre. Rome's tactics must be met outside religious bounds, in politics and in the press. Divisions must, for the time, be altogether forgotten in the exercise of faith, courage, and wisdom against a united foe.

Rev. J. Ormiston dealt with "The Extent and Danger of the Romanising Movement." For the Church of the Firstborn there is no fear. The secret of episcopal treachery is found, not at Oxford, but in Vatican archives, and in the operations of the unscrupulous, protean, and ubiquitous Jesuit, as testified by converted Romish ecclesiastics, and by eminent Romanists themselves. Apostolic succession is the fundamental error from which all the mischief flows, and is opposed to the Scriptural truth of direct dealing with God, without man's interposition. We are face to face with a gigantic, well-organised, and influentially patronised movement in the national Church. A speaker at the English Church Union meeting in Bristol stated that the Bible is not generally necessary to salvation, but the sacraments administered by the Church. Mere externalism is congenial to the natural heart. If we would avert from Church and nation the Divine woe pronounced upon Scribes and Pharisees, we must unite against an un-English, immoral, and soul-destroying conspiracy

Rev. Newman Hall said the priesthood of service and worship, as distinct from that of mediation, belongs to all believers. All who—openly, or secretly and dishonestly—recognise the priesthood of a special class, are Romanists, whether they acknowledge the Pope or not. The Holy Spirit, in bestowing spiritual gifts, ignores man's ordination. Mr Hall was tired of sects and divisions. Oh for the time when all denominational distinctions shall be at least in abeyance! The possession of Christ's Spirit is a sufficient bond of union.

On Thursday delegates met again for earnest conference in the afternoon. In the evening Colonel Sandys, M.P., took the chair. Resolutions were unanimously passed, condemning the revival of monastic orders; efforts for the predominance of the sacerdotal system; the retention of preferments by clergymen who seek reunion with Rome; and the contemplated reintroduction of a Bill to favour the appointment of a Roman Catholic Chancellor for England and a Lord Lieutenant for Ireland. Colonel Sandys said the Alliance seeks to promote unity amongst those who hold the truths of the Reformation in common; and individual exertions may go far in that direction. Men must be returned to Parliament who will put Protestant policy and institutions in the forefront of political action; and the spirit of inquiry must be stimulated throughout the country.

Mr. A. H. Guinness, secretary, reported the passing of resolutions in the afternoon, that a Protestant Hall be erected in London, and that a Ladies' Protestant Union be formed, with branches throughout the country, for electoral work.

Sir Arthur Blackwood condemned the policy of despair and expediency disclosed by the monastic proposals brought before Convocation. Why resort to systems shown by the Word of God and by history to be vicious and ruinous? He was thankful that the Protestant Churchman's Alliance had become an army of action instead of a committee of observation, but could not join them because at the head of their programme is the maintenance of Acts of Uniformity.

Mr. Jas. Inskip, of Bristol, said Romanisers would stop the clock of English history, and put it back for several generations. Re-union with Rome was advocated under the Stuarts, and the country suffered for it. Tractarians, Puseyites, and Ritualists only revive an old failure. Moreover, the lessons of the Old Testament are not worn out. A Protestant revival must spread from individual witnesses in the churches.

Mr. Wm. Johnston, M.P., set loose a storm of hisses by mentioning the name of "that gifted but erratic individual, William Ewart Gladstone," as the second on Mr. Campbell Bannerman's dropped Religious Disabilities Bill, a circumstance not in harmony with his former utterances on the Papacy. Protestant citizens, he said, only need information concerning danger and duty to secure the banner of the Bible over an undivided empire and a Protestant throne.

Rev. Talbot Greaves said the favour shown by opposite leaders to the principle of the Disabilities Bill, proved them either unconscious tools or conscious agents of a pre-concerted Jesuit conspiracy. The national deliverance of 1688 was delayed through Protestant dissensions on political grounds. The present dangers are union or compromise with enemies of the truth, and want of union and love among the Lord's own believing people. Rev. W. H. WAINWRIGHT, of Blackpool, said the constitution under which our country has prospered is endangered through giving to Rome power which our fathers wisely denied, the excuse being found in that she can be mild when with the power of being savage. The DEAN OF ACHONRY, among other stirring words, said nations, when they sin, are punished in this world, because they do not exist as nations in the world to come. Ireland needs England's sympathy; for her state is due, not to land laws, but to those who put out her eyes and cause her to grind in the prison-house. Discouragements will vanish under prayer, Scripture light, and energy. Mr. T. A. DENNY related circumstances of personal contact with Jesuit refugees in London, and denounced the confessional as the most awful thing ever forged in hell.

"Articles of piety in English convents"; iron, horsehair, and other disciplines of "the Church"; and pictorial representations of the horrible practices of Rome, were displayed about the hall. The meetings were large and enthusiastic throughout. Much regret was expressed at the Alliance's loss in the recent death of Dr. Wylie.

Barbican Mission to the Jews.

THIS well-known London Mission, carried on for many years by Mr. Warschawski, is now superintended by Mr. C. T. Lipschytz and his devoted wife, with Prebendary Gordon Calthrop as president, and friends belonging to various denominations of Christians as supporters. It is doing a good work in a singularly quiet manner. The annual meeting was held at Exeter Hall on Friday last, with Mr. ALFRED HUGHES in the chair. A very interesting report was read by Rev. E. A. WESLEY. Over 5000 Jews attend the various meetings, and already the need of a larger room for Saturday afternoons is felt. The earnest labours of the missionary have been greatly blessed, many having found in Jesus the Messiah of ancient promise, and submitted to baptism in token of their faith. The missionary not only attends at the room in Albion-place, London Wall, which is open daily excepting on Wednesdays, but visits the Jewish restaurants as well as homes, distributes Bibles and tracts, and delivers open-air addresses. These and other engagements are additional to the Saturday services, while Mrs. Lipschytz testifies for Christ among the Hebrew women. The funds at disposal to meet all claims amounted to the small sum of £185, of which only one-third was allotted to the missionary, whose whole soul is in his much-loved work.

Rev. BURMAN CASSIN, in testifying to the reality of the Mission, expressed a hope that the promising character of the work, and the great need for public support, would be placed before the readers of THE CHRISTIAN. He said: If this is done, I will answer to say that help will be forthcoming. Some time ago Mr. Morgan put in his paper a note about a mission-all I wanted to open, but for which I needed £7 10s. Without delay, I received a cheque from a lady at Brighton for £10—which left me £2 10s. for other work. It is perfectly marvellous what that dear little paper does in the way of helping all sorts of cases of a deserving character. It is a paper that everybody ought to take regularly. It has much improved of late, and while containing the most valuable instruction on the truths of God's Word, it gives excellent suggestions as to Christian work in general. I certainly think that everyone—surely, all teachers and ministers—ought to possess himself of a copy of THE CHRISTIAN, not only for the varied information and instruction he will receive, but also because through its pages he will be helped in his work of teaching others. It is a paper we can all trust — thoroughly Protestant and Scriptural—and you will never find anything in its pages which goes against the truth of God, either in one direction or another. You will find no superstition in THE CHRISTIAN, no free thinking, but the old truth as it is in Jesus, set out in every part of that most valuable paper. Therefore, I most heartily recommend it, and do hope that it will take up this Barbican Mission; and if it really takes it up, you will find that its funds will increase in amount. In some further remarks, Mr. Cassin told of the changed attitude of the Jews towards Christianity; they are in large numbers inquiring into the truth, and many are coming to the faith.

A letter was read from Mr. G. E. MORGAN, who was to have spoken, but was unable to be present. He heartily congratulated Mr. Lipschytz on having surmounted many obstacles; expressed confidence in the work; and rejoiced at the blessing which has attended the efforts put forth.

Rev. J. B. BARRACLOUGH, chaplain of the London Jews Society, bore strong testimony to the effective character of the work. He said: The meetings are the largest and quietest I have seen in London. I believe the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ is earnestly and faithfully, lovingly and plainly preached. The speaker emphasised the importance of special work among the Jews, who, while not excluded from the general commission, "preach the Gospel to every creature," are still specially mentioned as objects of evangelistic endeavour —"to the Jew first."

The blessed character of the work was also the subject of short addresses by Dr. R. W. F. Brooks, Rev. A. McCaul, and Mr. W. Greene. It was pointed out that the secret of the hold Mr. Lipschytz has upon his brethren according to the flesh is to be found in his sincere love for them. This is, of course, inspired by the love of Christ, which will, we trust, so constrain him that he will, as time goes by, have increasing encouragement and joy in the blessed service to which he has given himself.

Paris City Mission.

A DRAWING-ROOM meeting was held at the residence of Mr. F. A. Bevan, on Thursday afternoon, to hear Pastor D. A. DE MOUILPIED relate his experience of what has been done and what remains to do for the cause of Christ in this important city. The speaker's animated manner, evident love for souls, and hopeful view of the future, were impressive. For three years he had done evangelistic work in the churches which readily accept such help. Isolated English work in Paris would be poor in results; but the Mission's agents are placed under ministerial control, with good effect. The English residents, too, are benefited, and work goes forward among the jockeys and stable lads at Chantilly. The Parisian fine art of pleasure, or making sin beautiful, must not blind the mind to the existence of a working city with religious aspirations, and which has not turned its back upon Jesus of Nazareth, all signs to the contrary notwithstanding. It is the Jesus of the Jesuit, and the cross of the crucifix, opposed to home life and national progress, that is being rejected. Can a nation be called frivolous which has broken twenty Governments to obtain its idea? A cultured and intelligent people demands evangelists full of grace and power, such as this Mission provides, and not mere users of works which people connect with priestcraft. The Mission's halls are often crowded, and always attended by some hundreds every Sunday. "Ah! madam," said one man, "we are tired of atheism." The worlds of pleasure, art, science, did not despair of Paris after her tribulation, and shall Christians do so? Tourists do not see the working Paris which hungers for righteousness and waits for Christ.

Mr. George Williams contrasted London's five hundred City missionaries with the soldiery required to keep the peace of Paris. Commendatory words were also spoken by Mr. Bevan, Mr. T. B. Miller, Miss de Broen, and Mrs. Travers Lewis. Mr. J. M. Weylland, hon. sec. (31, Carlton-hill, St. John's Wood, N.W.), read an abstract of the report, which was duly adopted.

Jewish Missions.

ONE of the most interesting of the May meetings is that of the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews, the forty-second anniversary of which was celebrated on Tuesday of last week in Exeter Hall. The annual report, presented by Rev. J. DUNLOP, the secretary, was a record of earnest faithful service both at home and abroad, attended by a considerable measure of success; but it is to be regretted that the Society is suffering at the present time from a lack of financial support, due, as the chairman (Alderman FOWLER, M.P.) explained, to a falling off in the amount received under the head of legacies.

The claims of the Society upon the Church of Christ were ably advocated by Rev. P. HUSBAND DAVIES, first of all on the ground that it is a Christian Mission. The command of Jesus Christ, he said, is as clear and emphatic to-day as when it was uttered: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." The Jew has a soul that has been redeemed by the blood of Christ, and in his heart there are needs and cravings as great as in any other race under the sun. Yes, and are there not special reasons why we should strive for the evangelisation of the Jews? How great a debt of gratitude do we owe to the fathers of the present Hebrew race! God has been in very large measure revealed to us through their history. The Bible has been given to us by God, through the Jewish people. "What advantage, then, hath the Jew? Much, every way; but chiefly because unto him the oracles of God were given." The Bible was the outgrowth of theocratic life, and no one can measure the moral and mental quickening that has been imparted to nations and movements by its influence. In the tides of human progress the mightiest currents are made from the waters that flow from the Hebrew mountain. In a word, the Jew gave us the Old Testament, and we ought to give him the New—not in return, but in completion of the whole. Again, Christ Himself was, humanly speaking, the offspring of the Jewish national life. He was born of a Jewish maiden mother, and, while we thank God for his unspeakable gift, even Jesus Christ, let us never forget that Jesus Christ was born of the seed of Abraham according to the flesh, and let us show our gratitude in a measurable way. We should also remember that the Jewish synagogue system provided the platform in all the great cities of Asia for the propagation of the Gospel, and we should not have been as a Christian nation in the favoured light we are to-day were it not for that fact. At the present time it is computed that there are upwards of eight million Jews on this planet, and only about 250 missionaries labouring among them.

Rev. ISAAC LEVINSOHN told the meeting that the number of converts to Christianity was about 100,000. In a telling speech, Rev. WILLIAM CUFF urged the need for more earnest prayer and united effort in the work of this Society—firstly, for the Jews' sake, for they are a wonderful people with a wonderful history; secondly, for the Church's sake, for the Christian Church will never have the fulness of the blessing of the Gospel of Christ until the Jews be reached by the Gospel too; thirdly, for the world's sake, for when the Jew is converted the world will be better than it is to-day; and fourthly, for Christ's sake, which is the greatest of all. He pleaded for more faith in God, and in the power of his Gospel in connection with this movement; and if we exercised absolute, unshaken, and unfaltering faith in Almighty God, the Jew as well as the Gentile would ere long bow before Jesus and call Him Lord of all.

Work for God in the Army.

THE annual meeting of the Army Scripture Readers' and Soldiers' Friend Society was held in the afternoon of May 23, at Princes Hall, Piccadilly, under the chairmanship of Rev. J. C. EDGHILL, Chaplain-General of the Forces.

After prayer for Divine blessing, an abstract report was read by the secretary, Mr. W. A. BLAKE. The financial statement showed that more funds are urgently needed to meet current expenditure and increase the staff of agents. Seventy-eight readers are employed at the principal military stations at home and abroad. The claims of India are pressingly felt by the Committee. An earnest, evangelical, and eminently practical address was delivered by the chairman, who urged that the initial duty of the Army Scripture Reader was to lead men to Christ and seek the conversion of souls.

The band of the Northamptonshire Regiment, quartered in the Tower, attended, and accompanied the hymns which were sung. They also performed selections of sacred music, and their presence lent additional charm to an unusually interesting reunion. Speeches from General Sir Arthur Lawrence, K.C.B.; Rev. J. B. C. Murphy, B.A., Chaplain to the Forces, Aldershot; Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, M.A., Vicar of St. Paul's, Onslow-square; Colonel J. F. Morton, late of the Border Regiment; Major John Smith, late of the 7th Dragoon Guards; and Colonel J. Hay Puget, were made in furtherance of the Society's aims.

The Peace Society.

THE record of this Society for the past year shows persevering and successful work. A permanent office is established in Paris, where a Peace Congress last summer was largely attended. A like gathering is to be held in London in July. Resolutions in favour of arbitration have been adopted in the United States and in Norway. The Governments of Brazil and nine other Transatlantic Republics have adopted the arbitration recommendation of the late Pan-American Congress at Washington. These and other events are encouraging evidences that the objects of the Society are becoming practically recognised by diplomatists and rulers, and are extending also to questions affecting the relations of capital and labour.

The earnest and hopeful tone of those who supported Sir JOSEPH PEASE at the meeting in the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, on Tuesday evening, had due effect upon a large and enthusiastic assembly. The chairman condemned England's evil example in increasing naval and military expenditure, and its evil effects upon other nations, especially France and Italy. The voice of democracy, when directed by intelligence, and particularly by religion, will favour reduction of armies and international peace.

Mr. WM. JONES said pulpits had been largely offered for a Peace Sunday. He was encouraged by the growing enlightenment on this question, which was evident in his visits to the Colonies and to America. The sentiments of "barbarians" in China and Japan made him feel ashamed for those of his own and other European lands. Mr. SNAPE, of Liverpool, deprecated the military character of the "Boys' Brigade," and condemned "assaults-of-arms" in connection with Y. M. C. Associations. Rev. ARTHUR MURSELL asked how long are homes to be poor and children hungry to keep up "the balance of power"? Miss ROBINSON, of Liverpool, lamented the familiarising of young minds to war. Mr. JOSHUA ROWNTREE, M.P., said Parliament, lagging behind public opinion on this matter, talks more of rights than of duties. In the course of subsequent speeches it was suggested that an appeal be made to Sunday-school teachers for a "Peace Lesson."

FIGUERAS EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

THE obstacles to aggressive work in Spain are numerous, and nothing but patient endeavour, with the blessing of God, is equal to surmounting difficulties such as are continually arising. We rejoice to learn that the enterprise of Pastor Lopez Rodriguez and his devoted wife is making cheering progress. It is hardly needful to say that, owing to the influence of the priests, it is by no means easy to secure or retain buildings in which to teach the children and preach the Gospel. In many places the only practicable course is to buy land and build, and this has been done at Figueras. A central Hall has long been needed, and, after having been once overbought by the Romish hierarchy, the workers at last acquired an admirable site, on which a suitable building has been erected. In a circular "Letter from Spain" Madame Rodriguez says:—"On October 4 we must leave our present inconvenient Hall and schools, on the outskirts of the town, and greatly desire, therefore, that the new buildings may be ready for use by that date. But, unhappily, the building fund is exhausted, and the workmen have been obliged to retire. The sum needed to complete the work is £1100."

This is the first permanent Gospel Hall in the province of Gerona. We trust the time is not far distant when every town and village in the province will have its meeting-room. In a recent letter Mrs. Lopez-Rodriguez says: "The other day Margarita, one of the converts in a fishing village on the Mediterranean, paid us a visit. Great was her delight on seeing the Hall, and she said: 'On the day of the opening all the converts from the different stations must come and partake of the Lord's Supper together. The people in my village ridicule our meeting-place, and say we have nothing beautiful, such as altars, saints, &c. I answer that that is enough, and far better than anything else!'

"Father Zafra, the converted priest, works on quietly in his school, and preaches well. The other night at Rosás, at the close of the service, a sailor introduced himself, saying that the last time he saw Father Zafra was on board a vessel bound for Africa. Little did he imagine that the next time he should see him, would be in a Protestant pulpit!

"The meetings in connection with the Mission are all well attended, except in Gerona, where every second person is related to, or dependent on, a priest or his mayordoma. The Bishop is wealthy and popular. In face of tremendous difficulties, the courage and sincerity of the little congregation is the more to be admired and appreciated...The Pastor is much cheered by the remarkable and sustained interest of the people of Castillon, notwithstanding much opposition from the priests and wealthy employers. There are often 300 and more persons at the Saturday evening meetings. It is quite touching to see how anxious the men are to learn the hymns, several looking over one book. A few weeks ago, four men came forward as having accepted Christ—firstfruits of the Gospel in a place which has been for centuries a stronghold of Romanism."

There are now several stations in connection with the Mission. Four English young ladies are all of them hearty workers, and make a happy party. The address of the Mission is Calle Pedro 3, Figueras, Gerona, Spain; but communications in England may be sent to the hon. treasurer, Rev. J. C. Stewart Mathias, Theberton Rectory, Saxmundham, Suffolk.

PERSECUTION IN CHINA.

DEAR SIR,—But very few Christians in our favoured England realise how much native believers in China have sometimes to suffer for the cause of Christ. One's heart often burns with indignation at the thoughtless remarks, made by those who know not whereof they speak, about the easy way in which the Chinese take up and lay down Christianity according as the question of profit or loss is settled; and one is tempted to wish that the critics could have some of our painful experience in witnessing suffering which we are powerless to relieve.

We have in our house at the present time six persons who have been cruelly beaten, had their things stolen, their wheat and vegetable crops destroyed, and themselves driven from their homes, because they refused to give money for the support of the idols. For six weeks they have been here, at serious loss to themselves and heavy expense to me, and yet their case seems as far from being settled as ever. The English Consul has kindly done all he could, but the magistrate has, so far, hardly moved in the matter, excusing himself on the ground of distance (about thirty-five English miles), and the difficulty of controlling people so far off. One of our most trying experiences is seeing our native Christians tried and ill-used, while we are unable to protect them, and are ourselves protected and allowed to live in comfort.

It might interest some of our friends to know how the Gospel found an entrance to this country village of Odzing. Less than two years ago a native colporteur visited the place with books and tracts. A woman welcomed him, and as he began to tell her of Christ, she answered that once, when visiting the city of Wenchow, she heard, at the Native Orphan Asylum, a man telling of this Jesus, and ever since had been longing to hear more. The colporteur was delighted to find that he was the very man who had spoken to her then. He stayed some few days, and instructed her and her household. At present there are eight or nine Christians in the village, and though now driven from their homes, their faith and confidence in God was in no way shaken. May I ask our many friends to join us in prayer that God would restrain the wrath of unreasonable men, and that our poor people may be permitted to live in quietness while worshipping God and minding their own business.

The general work of this station has been carried on most earnestly, and I was delighted to find on my return that several new places had been opened up to the Gospel; and in one place, where there was but one Christian when we left, there are now ten.

The native church is supporting an evangelist at one of these newly-opened places, and is doing a little towards the support of another, while the women are doing their share in supporting a Bible-woman. I am anxious, if possible, to organise a small band of volunteer preachers to carry the Gospel to the surrounding villages; they to give their time on Sundays, the Christians in whose houses they may preach to provide them with rice; while I defray their travelling expenses. Of course, they will return to their work on Monday morning. I shall be glad of the prayers of friends for blessing on this proposed plan. If the Gospel is spread far and wide in China, it must be done by the native themselves, for they are the most successful evangelists.

Yours sincerely, GRACE STOTT.

The Scottish Assemblies.

By an Occasional Correspondent.

Edinburgh is full just now of ministers and elders from every part of the country come up to attend the supreme courts of the Churches of Scotland, Established and Free. The facilities of access by railway bring in also many visitors, attracted by the Exhibition and the mere pleasure of being in the most beautiful city of Europe; and the air is thick with "Disestablishment," "Dods Case," "Confession of Faith," and other watchwords of such eager discussion as only Scotchmen seem capable of indulging in. Whatever it may be politically, Edinburgh is for the time very really the ecclesiastical capital of the country.

There was nothing specially remarkable about the opening of the two Assemblies on May 22. To a stranger the brilliant pageant connected with the procession of the Queen's Lord High Commissioner, the Marquis of Lothian, from Holyrood Palace to the Assembly Hall, with heralds, trumpeters, horsemen and servants in queer antique liveries, is interesting as a spectacle, but decidedly suggests a secular association with a Church which claims spiritual independence—an association which it is not very easy to understand. No other Church in Europe has this in so pronounced a form, and yet it must be admitted that no other State Church enjoys so much freedom in its actings.

An allusion to Disestablishment in the speech of the retiring Moderator was significant of a certain uneasiness as to whether the connection with the State may long endure; if it ceases, and whenever that may happen, the very large amount of agreement in doctrine and practice, and the steady increase of benevolent and missionary work, furnish ground to hope that there may then be a fruitful reconstruction, in some form which it is too soon to anticipate, of the living Presbyterianism of Scotland.

The Assembly Hall of the Free Church is separated only by the width of the High-street from that of the Established Church, and the effect of stepping from the one to the other is rather striking. Much the larger building, it is thronged in every corner by an earnest body of men and women, and only the court dress of the Moderator indicates the connection with the State which ceased at the Disruption of 1843. The chair is occupied by Dr. Thomas Brown, an Edinburgh minister, one of the few remaining whose ordination dates before that event. Last year he moved the appointment of another to the Chair of Theology, to which Dr. Marcus Dods was appointed, and he is regarded as representing the constitutional or orthodox party; but the reason of his appointment to the office of Moderator is that he combines with an unquestioned soundness in the faith much wisdom and conciliation in the discussion of difficult matters. His opening address was warmly received on both sides of the House, and the one side as much as the other approved his rebuke of those "who doubt for doubting's sake, thinking it the mark of a superior person," and his condemnation of lifeless, fruitless orthodoxy as the worst of evils.

There will be four subjects of grave importance before the Free Assembly: Disestablishment; the Education Policy in Indian Missions; the Revision of the Confession of Faith; and the Dods Controversy. As to the first, the position taken up by leading men is that the time has come when the Free Church must, in mere self-defence, agitate for it, the policy on the other side being to secure from Parliament such legal recognition of the Church's spiritual independence, as would make the position of the Established Church precisely that which the Free Church went through all the sacrifices of the Disruption to obtain.

The Revision Committee presents only an interim report, one year being sufficient only to arrange the lines on which so serious a duty shall be carried out.

The College Committee present a report regarding the views of Professors Dods and Bruce, which will no doubt be warmly discussed. Meanwhile, many on both sides are prayerfully hoping that some gracious issue may be reached. Solomon's cargoes contained "gold and silver, apes and peacocks," and there can be no question either which part was the most valuable, or which would make the most noise on the voyage. There is plenty of the gold and silver about the Free Church, and the hope is—an anxious one, no doubt, but sincere and fervent—that the Head of the Church may "bring the blind by a way that they know not, making rough places smooth and crooked things straight."

Dr. Lindsay's report on his visit to India is a long document, singularly able and valuable. It marks a new departure on the part of the Church, in which the higher education founded by Duff and Wilson will largely give place to more direct and extensive efforts at conversion. It is shown that the higher education has borne splendid fruits, and that it cannot be abandoned without losing a hold for Christ on the higher caste natives; but at the same time it is clearly demonstrated that the very fruits of that higher education on the acute minds of the natives demand now greatly increased efforts to bring them into personal fellowship with the Lord Jesus. The following sentence is striking: "One of our educational converts has converted 1200 Mangs; another has organised a splendid system of girls' schools at Madras, and has been able, by quiet, continuous work, to provide Christian schoolmistresses for every class; a third is the leading barrister in Calcutta and the foremost orator in Bengal—perhaps in India. Others are scattered over India in the public service, as missionary superintendents in the service of other missions besides our own, and in University chairs." For all that, more direct Gospel work must henceforth go on alongside the work of education. Perhaps those who to-day are in danger of being rather estranged from one another by keen doctrinal controversies may, before the end of another week, be fused in a warm uniting impulse of Heaven-sent zeal for this great object.

Edinburgh, May 23.

THE BIRDS' NEST, KINGSTOWN.—The thirty-first report of this Institution, providing accommodation for 230 children, tells of cheering success attending a very good work. During last year seventy-four children were admitted, a number nearly equal going out. The report says:—"Unless one actually saw the children in their homes, one could hardly imagine what the need is for a 'Birds' Nest.' A sad tale could be told of nearly every one of these children: 'Father out of work, mother dead, no food, and no one to take care of them,' and so on." Some of the children who went out have gone to Canada, and many are in good situations. Copies of the report may be had from the president of the work, Mrs. J. Smyly, 35, Upper Fitzwilliam-street, Dublin.

HOME OF REST FOR FEMALE SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEACHERS.—The opening of this Home in Wykeham-road, Hastings, recently took place, when a large gathering assembled. The chairman, Mr. Tresidder, referred to the benefits derived by those teachers who had visited the former Home, opened some three years ago. Mr. F. W. Warmington spoke of the self-sacrifice and love of the teachers engaged in mission and other schools. Mr. Watson referred to the splendid situation of the Home and the pleasing country surroundings. Other friends also spoke. Since the Home was started, nearly six hundred teachers have visited it, and found great refreshment. Some £2500 is now needed to furnish and purchase the house, and three friends have respectively promised to add £30, £20, and £10 to each £100 contributed towards the furnishing.

FERVENCY IN PRAYER.

The lack of fervency is the loss of many prayers. The lazy petition is eaten up by wandering thoughts, like cold honey by wasps and flies; whilst fervent prayers, like honey boiling over the fire, are free from such ill guests.—George Swinnock.

REVELATION.

Could He who is the Life be the unmoveable; He who is Love be the silent one? It would be a contradiction to his being! and even when his existence had been fully demonstrated, this contradiction would make us falter in our belief. So little is revelation a contradiction of God's nature, that the want of it would much rather contradict Him.—Luthardt.

SELF-EXAMINATION.

Sum up at night what thou hast done by day
And in the morning what thou hast to do,
Dress and undress thy soul: mark the decay
And growth of it: if with thy watch, that too
Be down, then wind up both; since we shall be
Most surely judged, make thy accounts agree.

George Herbert.

GENESIS I. AND II.

Whence do these chapters come? I do not know. There they stand, and ever continue to stand, however much it has been sought to explain them away; and there, doubtless, they will remain until the end of the world, until the conclusion of God's kingdom on earth joins hands with the beginning, and the light of the beginning can again be recognised in the light of the end, and the light of the end in the light of the beginning, that God may be all in all.

THE BIBLE.

I hope you all try the Word of God every day in your own daily life. It is a splendid Book for the throne; it is equally good in the kitchen. It is a blessed Book to put into your pocket and carry with you when you are in the railway train; you will find it precious if you stay at home. In poverty or in wealth, in joy or in sorrow, the many-sided Bible only presents to you some new phase of its everlasting adaptation to your state and case. Give up the Bible! We will sooner give up our lives.

C. H. Spurgeon.

PEACE MUST PRECEDE WORK.

"Peace be unto you; as my Father hath sent me, even so send I you" (John xx. 21). Peace is the starting-point of work. And if it be so, then there is no work which is worthy of the name apart from the possession of peace. The personal appropriation of the manifold blessings of redeeming love in Christ precedes the personal adoration of God by the Christian. Sonship is anterior to service. Devotion, whether active or contemplative, must have as its preliminary peace with God.—Dean Lefroy.

For the Young.

A PARABLE.

A NOBLEMAN there was,
With many household slaves,
Who went to be made king
Of lands across the waves.

But just before he went
He called his servants three,
And gave them each a pound,
And said, "Keep shop for me."

Long time he was away,
But at the last came home,
And set at once to tell
Those servants three to come.

The first was pleased and proud,
He bowed full low, and then:
"With your pound, lord," he said,
"I've gained another ten."

His master smiled with joy:
"Well done, my faithful slave!"
And for each well-earned pound
A city's wealth he gave.

See, as he leaves his place,
A second, glad, arrive:
"Lord, with your pound," he said,
"I've earned another five."

His master smiled again
Upon the faithful slave,
And for each well-earned pound
A city's wealth he gave.

The first had cities ten,
Over them all to reign;
The second, not so rich,
Five cities did obtain.

And then there came the third,
Upon his face a frown,
And with ill-tempered words
One lonely pound put down.

"You are so hard to please,
I put it by," he said;
"See, there you have your own!"
The master shook his head.

"You say I'm hard to please,
And yet you never try:
Take his one pound," he said,
To servants standing by.

"And give it to the first."
"But, lord, that man has ten,"
The servants said; but he:
"I give to faithful men."

This story Jesus told
Before He left the earth;
Like all his simple tales,
It has a hidden worth.

Jesus the Master is,
And we the servants, meant;
And all we have the pound
Which the rich Master lent.

Jesus will come again,
And we must then appear,
And show what we have done
With what He gave us here.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., June 1, Gen. iv. 1—16; Mon., June 2, Gen. vi. 5—52; Tues., June 3, Gen. vii. 1—12; Wed., June 4, Gen. vii. 13—24; Thurs., June 5, Gen. viii. 1—12; Fri., June 6, Gen. viii. 13—22; Sat., June 7, Gen. ix. 1—17.

ABOUT THE YEW TREE.*

Now, where shall we look for a yew tree? Who will be the guide? Perhaps we may find one in the churchyard, for the people of former times thought this was the fitting place for its dark head—some say because it looks gloomy and sad, and some because it lives for ages, and is always green. The churchyard is not the home that the yew-tree chooses for itself, but the one we choose for it. When it does its own house-hunting, it sometimes settles in a place where we should think not even a bush could grow. It will perch on a little ledge on the steep side of a precipice, and flatten itself against the rock. Yes, it delights in rocks and cliffs, and bare hill-sides; it likes to feel the wind beating it, and to hear the storm-wolves howl.

The yew grows into a great tree, but it never shoots up high. It loves mother earth, and keeps close to her. Look what a short trunk it has! You can catch the branches, and swing on them, and your father has to bow his head low if he would walk underneath. It is like the fir in its leaf-dress; but it has its own pattern of flowers and fruit, and it is also unlike the fir in figure, for it spreads out its branches far and wide, instead of shooting up into a spire.

You know what sort of fruit the yew-tree bears, for you have often gathered its berries. Lift up its twigs in autumn, and there they hang below the leaves, one by one in a row down the stalk, like drops of blood. What a funny berry it is! A bright red cup of sticky juice, with a brown seed in the middle. It is something like a little cherry with the stone on the outside. This brown seed must be very hardy, for it is not covered up with many coats and hidden away in the heart of the fruit like most other seeds. It peeps out as if it wanted to feel the fresh air, and the rim of the cup just shelters it. Wasps often come to these berries for a feast.

Now, what are the flowers like? You know the red berries; but who knows the flowers? They are shy little things that hide away from sight. The yew tree does not boast of his deeds and treasures, and so only his friends know of them. He works away in silence, and shows his fruit when it is ready. Look in the early spring at that tree from which you plucked the berries. In the corner of nearly every leaf on the new end of the twig you will find a wee flower. This is a green cup on a short stem, covered with tiny scales. It is the same cup that grows rosy and plump in the autumn, and by its bright colour invites the birds to come and feast on its juice, and carry away the seed to some place where it may take root and grow.

What is that you are saying? Are there no berries, no little green cups, on that tree you have found, nothing but leaves? Is it an idle tree that will not work, or is it sick and unhealthy? No; the yew trees divide their work. Some trees make seed-flowers and fruit; others make dust-flowers. If you have found a yew which has no little cups under its leaves, you must visit it in March or April, and then you will probably find the stamen-flowers growing in the corners of the leaves on the new twigs. Those little yellow buds—are those flowers? Why, they do not deserve the name. Ah! look closer; we are so ready to speak before we know anything about it. Each of those yellow buds looks like a very tiny plant. A cluster of stamens crowns a little pillar covered with tiny scales. What funny stamens! you would not have known them. They look like a little tent of shields; for each stamen has a round head, beneath which hang, not two dust bags, but six. These open at the bottom when perfect, and the wind shakes out the dust and catches it up, and carries it away to the little cups on another tree. Sharp eyes can discover all this, but a little magnifying glass will help them to see it more distinctly.

It is very important for you to know the yew tree, for it is a dangerous tree. Its leaves contain strong poison, and for this reason it is never planted in fields, or by the roadside where cattle might browse upon it. You must never tie your pony to a yew tree, nor throw any of its branches or clippings away carelessly where animals might find them. Gilbert White tells of nine young bullocks that were found lying dead under a yew hedge in a garden into which they had forced their way. In old-fashioned gardens these yew hedges were very common, and the trees themselves were also cut into curious shapes of animals, and kept carefully clipped every year.

Perhaps you wonder how it is those red berries you have so often eaten have not harmed you. There is no poison in the red juicy part of the berry, but there is some in the seed. A safe rule which you should always keep, is never to taste any part of a plant unless you are quite sure that it is harmless. There are many poisonous English plants in the fields, and some poisonous trees and shrubs in our gardens that come from Asia and America; but of all the trees that are natives of Europe, the yew is the only one that bears this dangerous character.

There are some very old yew trees now living, perhaps two thousand years old, and of great size. Like the oak, the yew works very slowly, making its wood as close and hard and firm as possible. Some yew trees have been known to do a very singular thing. The trunk having cracked at the top, either from old age or from storms, a soft, rich mould of decaying wood and leaves has been made in the open place. One of the branches has then put out a shoot, which has taken root in the mould, and grown down into the trunk, a new tree inside an old one; so that when the old trunk split up, there was a strong young one ready to take its place, just as if the old yew were determined to live for ever.

The ancients called the yew the tree of sorrow and gloom and death, for it seemed to sympathise with them in times of sadness and heartache. When you stand in quiet awe before the churchyard yew, it will tell you first of the many tears that have been shed there; but then it will show you leaves that are always green, and a life that continues year after year and century after century; and so it will remind you of One who came long ago to wipe away tears and bring comfort to sorrowing hearts, and reveal to us a life that the winter of death cannot touch, a life that no time can change.

The yew tree in the graveyard is the symbol of sorrow and death, but it is also the symbol of joy and the resurrection life.

LIVERPOOL SHELTERING HOMES.—It is always a pleasure to call attention to the progress of the work which Mrs. Birt superintends with such good results. Two bands of children—one of boys and one of girls—have already been despatched this season, and found homes in Canada. Mrs. Birt hopes to sail herself in June with another party, making the thirty-fifth since the work began. Liverpool yields only too many sad cases of the orphan and destitute class calling for the shelter and protection of the Home in Sugnall-street.

Is Consecration a Gift?

Do we always remember, when we speak of consecration, that it is not so much a matter of voluntary gift as of dearly purchased service? Are we in danger of forgetting that God gave for us the most precious thing in heaven to redeem us to Himself?—that Christ laid down for our ransom, not his life only, but the favour which is better than life (Ps. lxiii. 3), that we might live unto Him? We are bought with a price in a twofold sense, by a distinct and definite transaction. Can we give again a purchased thing to the owner? Never, in the sense of gift. We are free to live to ourselves if we will—we only rob God of his own. We may lay ourselves on the altar—it is but our reasonable service; only let us bear in mind, as we do it, the infinite grace that accepts so poor an offering, and the infinite condescension that stoops to call it "holy and acceptable" to God.

Not our own to give ourselves, neither are we our own to keep ourselves. "Those that Thou gavest Me I have kept," said Jesus. "Father, keep through thine own name." Mark the threefold security by which God takes us out of our own hands into a Divine and mighty keeping of Father and Son in the highest heaven, and on earth gives the indwelling of the Holy Ghost to garrison that which is already his. Let us tremble as we see the infinite preciousness of one sinner to God, the costly price of our redemption, when God's beloved Son sank in the waterfloods of judgment that they might not come nigh unto us (Ps. xxxii. 6). "He spared not his own Son." Let us learn, if we can, the awful meaning: not spared, when He bore our sentence on the accursed tree; not spared, in the training of suffering obedience, that He might learn thus to shepherd his redeemed ones, through every trial and temptation, safely home to God.

Shall we not cover our faces with shame as we measure with our own half-hearted yielding that other sacrifice when He offered Himself without spot for us—our feeble, changing devotion, with his fervent love? Only a while ago lost and guilty ones, children of wrath, even as others, shall we not think less of our poor giving, and more of God's "unspeakable gift"; more of the responsibility that rests on us, not to consecrate ourselves—God has already done that by the shed and sprinkled blood—but to let every redeemed moment be an Amen to God's consecration?

The Holy Ghost teaches us by pictures in the Jewish offerings. In Lev. viii. we find, in the consecration of Aaron and his sons, a figure of our own. It was all done by Moses as the servant of God, "faithful in all his house," "for a testimony of those things which were to be spoken after." We read, "The Lord spake unto Moses, Take Aaron and his sons"; and again, "This is the thing which the Lord commanded to be done." The washing and anointing, the girding and the sprinkling—all are done for them by Divine appointment; and the one who takes the consecration offering off the hands of Aaron is the same who just before filled his hands with that which could be accepted on the altar. How much does this, as a type, leave us to glory in? Just one thing—the manifold grace of God.

Perhaps this is strange to us. Perhaps we thought that we might bring Him the gift of service. But He had already bought it. Christ had been beforehand with us, when He sank in the deep mire where there was no standing, that He might set our feet on the everlasting rock, that we might live unto God. One thing only is left us—to do as Aaron did: to hold our hands wide open for God to fill them. We cannot do again what has been done already, but we can live it out: we can say Amen to God by our lives in this matter of consecration. We can walk in the path that Christ has marked by his own blood; or we can go on either side, losing step by step as we go God's blessing and favour. Which shall it be? We cannot lose ourselves, God has taken care of that; but we can lose our reward—we can let slip, as leaking vessels, our one opportunity to glorify Him in this brief testing time till He come. A. E. W.

Science and Religion.

By Sir J. W. DAWSON.*

We must not take for granted the truth of the assertion so often confidently made that science is hostile to religion. It is, no doubt, true that monistic and agnostic evolution, and those forms of Darwinianism which follow the author of the system in negation of the living God, are inconsistent with religion, as well as with all the higher interests of men. There may, however, be a theistic principle of development apparent in all nature, and which represents what we can perceive of the plan and methods of creation, understanding by that word the making of all things by almighty power, whether immediately or mediately, through means of things already made, and laws previously established. It may be said in favour of this view that it gives an inexpressible dignity to man, and to science. It shows that the human reason must be after the model of the infinite Divine reason, that in scientific inquiry we are studying God's laws and revelation of Himself in nature.

Nay, more: if we regard Christ as an incarnation of the Creator, we have in Christianity itself a higher revelation of God, which must be in harmony with nature; and we shall have a right to hold that the scientific investigator is doing Christ's work and God's work; and, on the other hand, that those qualities of humility, faith, sincerity, and love of truth which God requires of his followers are also those most profitable in scientific study, while scientific habits of thought are of the utmost value in the study of revelation and in the difficulties of the Christian life.

It is also to be observed that even the positivist and agnostic admit, as appears in recent controversies, that some religion or substitute for it is necessary to the highest perfection of man. For example, Mr. Frederic Harrison, in a recent paper in The Nineteenth Century, believes as a positivist in what he calls the religion of humanity; that is, in setting up an ideal standard of human nature, based on historical examples, as something to live up to. His opponent, Mr. Huxley, from the point of view of an agnostic, thinks this futile; stigmatises man as a failure and as a "wilderness of apes," and would adore the universe in all its majesty and grandeur.

In this they rehabilitate very old forms of religion, for it is evident that the most ancient idolatries consisted in lifting up men's hearts to the sun, and moon, and stars, and in worshipping patriarchs and heroes. Thus we find that there can be no form of infidelity without some substitute for God, and this necessarily less high and perfect than the Creator Himself, while destitute of his Fatherly attributes. Further, our agnostic and positivist friends even admit their need of a Saviour, since they hold that there must be some elevating influence to raise us from our present evils and failures. Lastly, when we find the ablest advocates of such philosophy differing hopelessly among themselves, we may well see in this an evidence of the need of a Divine revelation.

All this is precisely what the Bible has given us in a better way. If we look up with adoring wonder to the material universe, the Bible leads us to see in this the power and Godhead of the Creator, and the Creator as the living God, our heavenly Father. If we seek for an ideal humanity to worship, the Bible points us to Jesus Christ, the perfect Man, and at the same time the Manifestation of God; the Good Shepherd giving his life for the sheep; God manifest in the flesh, and bringing life and immortality to light. Thus the Bible gives us all that these modern ideas desiderate, and infinitely more. Nor should we think little of the older part of revelation, for it shows the historical development of God's plan, and is eminently valuable for its testimony to the unity of nature and of God. It is in religion what the older formations are in geology. Their conditions and their life may have been replaced by newer conditions and living beings, but they form the stable base of the later formations, which not only rest upon them, but which without them would be incomplete and unintelligible.

The lesson of these facts is to hold to the old faith, to fear no discussion, and to stand fast for this world and the future on the grand declaration of Jesus: "God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish but have everlasting life."

GORDON MISSION, PLUMSTEAD.

About a year and a half ago this Mission was started at White Hart-lane, Plumstead, a densely peopled locality, with very few religious agencies at work. An iron room was erected, with a seating capacity of 270, and in it much really good evangelising work has been done. Two special missions have been held with most hopeful results. There is a well-attended Sunday-school and other departments of helpful endeavour for the benefit of the people. The Mission is unsectarian, and has the favour and approval of all sections of the Church. With the exception of the resident missionary, Mr. Richardson, the workers are voluntary, so that the annual cost of the work is only some £150.

It is earnestly desired now to erect a permanent structure on the site of the iron room, and the estimated cost of this is £1000. Seeing the great need that exists, and the good work being done, we hope many friends will help. The hon. treasurer of the Mission is Mr. W. H. Lewis, London and Provincial Bank, Woolwich.

NO COMPENSATION.—The organisers of the Hyde-park demonstration on Saturday, June 7, against the compensation project of the Government, write:—"It has been suggested, and we gladly take up the idea, that prayer should be offered in all the churches of our land, in regard to the compensation question. We therefore earnestly suggest that on Sunday, June 1, every clergyman and minister of all denominations should offer and suggest prayer to God that the present intention of the Government, to practically endow the liquor-dealers to the extent of hundreds of millions of money, may be frustrated."

Lord Bishop of Durham.

No more fitting sucessor could have been found to the late Bishop Lightfoot than the well-known divine who has just assumed the responsibilities of the see of Durham. For many years the new Bishop has had a wide-spread reputation in Christian literature, and it is sincerely to be hoped that his preferment to a position of distinction will prove to be for the furtherance of the work of God in the north of England.

Brooke Foss Westcott was born in Birmingham in 1825, and was educated at King Edward's School, under the celebrated Dr. J. Prince Lee. It is a most rare occurrence for any foundation to count amongst its former students three prelates of the eminence of those who stand in this relationship to King Edward's School—viz., Dr. Benson, the Archbishop of Canterbury; Dr. Lightfoot, the late Bishop of Durham; and Dr. Westcott—a trio, it is said, that, as boys, Prince Lee "loved more than any others else in the world, and whom he took every human interest in pushing forward." From Birmingham Dr. Westcott passed to Trinity College, Cambridge, whither he was followed by Lightfoot a year or two later. His university career was brilliant, giving full promise of a life of great usefulness in the world of thought.

Honours and prizes attended his entire academical course, and graduation in Arts was followed by Divinity studies, the degree of D.D. being taken in 1870. Dr. Westcott also received from Oxford University the honorary degree of D.C.L. in 1881, and that of D.D. from Edinburgh University at its Tercentenary Commemoration in 1883. He held an Assistant-Mastership in Harrow School from 1852 to 1869, under Drs. Vaughan and Butler. In 1870 he was elected Regius Professor of Divinity at Cambridge, on the retirement of Dr. Jeremie. For many years Dr. Westcott has been the most prominent of Cambridge "dons," his thin ascetic face, his flowing locks, and his student's stoop, combining to make him one of the most striking figures in the University.

Not until twenty years after his ordination in the ministry did Dr. Westcott hold any parochial appointment; for twelve years, 1870 till 1882, he was incumbent of Somersham with Pidley and Colne, three united parishes in Huntingdonshire. He has discharged many important functions, having been Canon of Peterborough from 1869 to 1883, when he was appointed Canon of Westminster, a post he has held to the present time. He was a member of the company for the revision of the Authorised Version of the New Testament.

Though he has so long lived in an academic atmosphere, and is reserved and retiring, as becomes a scholar, Dr. Westcott has the faculty of suiting himself with dignity and grace to the more public engagements of life. Alike at Cambridge and Westminster his influence has been wide and deep, and it has never been possible to confine him within the narrow limits of mere ecclesiasticism or student isolation. Dr. Westcott's writings have been numerous and important. In conjunction with Rev. Dr. Hort he has given to the world a valuable edition of the Greek text of the New Testament. The work of twenty-eight years' joint labour, it is as highly esteemed by scholars to-day as it was when first published ten years ago. He was a contributor to the "Speaker's Commentary" and Smith's "Dictionary of the Bible," and among his other works have been: "The Elements of Gospel Harmony," "Characteristics of the Gospel Miracles," "An Introduction to the Study of the Gospels," "A History of the English Bible," "The Social Aspects of Christianity," "Christus Consummator," "The Epistles of St. John, with Notes and Essays," "Commentary on the Epistle to the Hebrews," "The Revelation of the Risen Lord," "The Revelation of the Father," "The Gospel of the Resurrection," "The History of the Canon of the New Testament." The mere titles of these works are eloquent as to the bent of the author's mind, and the purpose of his heart. As a controversialist he has taken up the challenge of modern unbelief, and shown the warrant of our faith in the Holy Scriptures. As an expositor, though having the reputation of being somewhat of a "mystic," he has brought much learning and a well-balanced judgment to bear upon the statement and illustration of outstanding truths of Christianity. In ecclesiastical matters he is liberally disposed, putting Christ first, and reckoning himself among the servants of mankind "for Christ's sake." The source of his sufficiency is thus tersely indicated in his book "Social Aspects of Christianity":—

> If the work to which we look were to be wrought by human power, I should not dare to speak. But it is the work of God. He is pleased to work through us, but He Himself works. The righteousness, the peace, the joy, which we are charged to make our own, and to bring to the world, are in the Holy Ghost. They are the revelation of his Spirit. We are not called to found, but to receive a kingdom.

The Bishop is a warm supporter of the Church Missionary Society, and in the advocacy of its cause he has more than once given expression to his strong evangelical sentiments. At the May meeting in Exeter Hall three years ago, he made the following strong appeal:—

> Shall it be said that merchants go forth for gain, explorers for adventure, and soldiers for the love of country, but the love of Christ fails to prove a sufficiently constraining motive to missionary consecration? We want, indeed, men of devotion, faith, and love at home, and therefore I say, 'Send your legions abroad.' The work of missions is our work at home . . . Listen then; listen in the presence of God; listen on your knees in prayer, if to you, perhaps, the call comes.

Of late Dr. Westcott has shown a lively interest in the cause of universal peace, by urging the exchange of big armies for a board of international arbitration. In April last year, in a letter to The Guardian, having mentioned that some blame statesmen for the danger and disgrace of the present armed state of Europe, he said:—

The real blame ought, I think, to be laid elsewhere. It rests upon Christians, and, in the largest measure, upon English Christians, who have been, and are, in a position to claim an impartial hearing from the Continental Powers....There is a growing conviction that Christians, as Christians, have a witness to give on social questions. They have spoken on temperance and on purity. And now at length the time seems to have come when they can unite to express some of the views which they hold as to the true relations of States.

Realising the bearing of this on the attitude of men toward Christ, he added:—

Men can see that if our faith is true we ought to have the remedy for the great sorrows of the world, and to show openly that we believe in its efficacy. They ask for great deeds, and not only for great words. If we are enabled to show that we have, as Christians, that which inspires us to work unfalteringly for a noble end, I believe that many who now range themselves against us will be ready to do homage to the truth which they have misinterpreted through our past faithlessness. In this aspect we cannot forget that the favourable time for Christian action may soon pass away. The policy of disarmament, which can now be pressed as a service to the brotherhood of nations, is likely, before long, to find other advocacy, if the cause is not won in the name of God. And it will be an evil day for the world, if that which may now be so effected as to guard all the noblest heritages of the past, is at last extorted by the revolutionary movement of a class.

No strong partisan, the Bishop is friendly disposed to all who love our Lord Jesus Christ. He was a member of the "Langham-street Conference" of Churchmen and Nonconformists held last year. Since his consecration at the beginning of this month, he has given further evidence of the same generous spirit. The Wesleyans of the Whitby and Darlington district, which is for the most part included in the diocese of Durham, at their annual meeting recently, sent the Bishop a fraternal greeting; a reply, which has been received by the chairman of the district, Rev. Robert Stephenson, says:—

Your most kind note with the resolution adopted by your meeting enables me now to offer to the meeting, through you, my grateful acknowledgments of the generous welcome which they have given me. I believe that God will give us, in his own way, that great blessing of unity for which on all sides faithful hearts are waiting and praying, and in the meantime I trust that we shall realise the power of the Spirit sent in his Son's name in our common endeavours to combat the terrible evils by which the life of men and of peoples is at present darkened.

This agrees with the Bishop's words elsewhere as to the unity of the Church:—

The unity of the whole is consistent with a wide variety of parts, each having to a certain degree a corresponding unity in itself. The essential bond of union is not external, but spiritual; it consists not in one organisation, but in a common principle of life. Its expression lies in a personal relation to Christ, and not in any outward system.

If the true unity of the whole Church, which is derived from the participation in the Spirit of Christ, is compatible with the existence of outward divisions on earth, it is no less compatible also with the existence of independent centres of local and partial authority in its manifold organisation. Christ Himself is the one Head; and He left no single successor to represent in outward form the relation in which He stands to the body.

Like his beloved predecessor, Bishop Lightfoot, Dr. Westcott is an avowed advocate of free and open churches. If he is not young in years, he is certainly mature in judgment. He has been actuated by a sense of duty in accepting a bishopric. Just after his appointment, he said in a letter to the Dean of Durham:—

My whole strength lies in the trust that the prayers of friends of the whole diocese will be with me. I come in simplest obedience, offering the little which I have without reserve.

The Bishop has a numerous family, several of his sons being clergymen, three of them missionaries. We sincerely trust that God's blessing will rest upon him and his work; that his learning and spirituality will combine with his energy and devotion to make him, in his new sphere, a worthy servant of Him who is emphatically and fully the Shepherd and Bishop of souls.

WHITTINGTON AVENUE Y.M.C.A.

THE tenth annual meeting of the Whittington Avenue Y.M.C.A. was held on Thursday evening last, under the presidency of Mr. ROBERT BARCLAY. The report, which was read by the secretary, Mr. N. R. HUGHMAN, told not only of good work being done for the young men of the City, but also of very interesting endeavour on the part of young men to make the name of Christ known among those who are strangers to his saving grace. Some of the members engage in village mission work, and others conduct classes at Institutes for poor lads. Altogether, it was a cheering report, showing a lively sense of the true object and purpose of the Association.

Dr. PIERSON delivered a stirring address on the relation of the Y.M.C.A. to mission work abroad. He spoke of the progressive character of the age, showing the greatness of our opportunities. These involve corresponding obligations. It is no trifling thing to be living in these days; if we are not improving time, we are awfully wasteful. If into one hour are crowded opportunities that formerly were not included in years and centuries, we cannot let an hour slip by without letting go that which holds the possibilities of those ancient centuries. The great bulk of nominal Christians are doing simply nothing to bring others to Christ. God's call to-day is specially to young men, because old men cannot do the work of world-wide evangelisation. People who have advanced in years are fettered in various ways, therefore the young men must arouse themselves. Millions of people are passing away without so much as hearing the Saviour's name.

Having referred to the remarkable movement in America during the past two years, wherein thousands of young men and women have bound themselves to enter the foreign field if the doors are opened, the speaker urged his hearers to consecrate themselves to the service of God. If we are true children of God, and filled with the Holy Ghost, we shall be missionaries wherever we are—in dark Africa, or dark London. The world is wide open, as never before, for Christian labourers, and even now someone is required to take up Livingstone's work in Central Africa—to go without weapons of warfare, and win the people by the mighty love inspired by the love of Christ. Who, again, will take up the work of the devoted Mackay, the man who has done more than any other to revolutionise missionary operations in the Dark Continent? If, said the speaker, I were twenty years younger, I would go to the dark depths of lands where the Gospel of Christ has never been proclaimed. Recently in Scotland I was in a small place of twelve hundred people, in which there were five Protestant churches, and five educated ministers. One of the five ministers could take charge of the whole of the people, and relieve the others, to carry the first knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ to the millions of unenlightened in distant lands. It seems to me the greatest pity to waste so much zeal on denominationalism, forgetting in the meanwhile that so many of the inhabitants of the world are ignorant of the Gospel.

Major WHITTLE followed with an earnest exhortation to the young men to work for Christ. Organisations are nothing for God when they have lost their life. Christ must be in us before we can have power in service. Enjoying this fellowship, we shall have in us "the mind which was also in Christ Jesus;" we shall realise our individual duty, and glorify God in our lives.

IN THE WEST INDIES.

MRS. HUNTLEY, of Demerara, has been visiting some of the West Indian Islands, hoping to be instrumental in stirring up others to enter the field. Her helpers, Messrs. Punting and Mitchell, have preached the Gospel in several places, and found willing hearers. In a recent letter from St. Vincent, Mrs. Huntley says:—"We have circulated large numbers of tracts, also copies of the Holy Scriptures. We were quite besieged by the people as they came upon us for the Word, seeing who could buy copies first; and in less than two hours we had sold all we had. Sad to say, there is no Bible depôt here, although it is called a Christian land. Thousands around me are starving for want of the bread of life. How can people sit at home and be happy, in the face of such need!

"There are fifteen hundred people in the valley of Mesopotamia, where I now am, and they seldom or never hear the Gospel preached. Thousands in the town, and hundreds in the various other valleys, are in the same case. There are thirty-six sugar plantations on the island, besides cocoa and nutmeg gardens. The people not only receive tracts with eagerness, but they listen with the greatest interest to the 'old, old story,' and beg for someone to settle among them, if only to give them outdoor meetings. A Christian wife of one of the managers of a sugar estate says board and lodging will gladly be found for any faithful servant of the Lord. At St. George's, Grenada, two earnest women have been praying for help, and saying they want a missionary, and a Gospel hall.

"Would that some would come and 'view the land' here at St. Vincent! Surely Christian people who go to other lands for their health might come here. These islands are beautifully healthy; we scarcely know we are in the tropics, there are such refreshing breezes with the trade winds. There is nothing to surpass the scenery—such lovely hills and mountains."

If she has carried out her purpose, Mrs. Huntley is now at Bridgetown, Barbados. Letters to her, and tracts, which she greatly needs, may be sent to her permanent address, George-town, Demerara.

Baby Farming.

ENGLAND.

AT the recent meeting in the Mansion House, various references were made to Rev. Benjamin Waugh's indictment of baby farming in the May Contemporary Review. It is the outcome of much patient investigation, and may be taken as a faithful exposure of a fearfully prevalent evil. Some brief extracts will indicate the condition of things to which Mr. Waugh is directing his efforts, and his views as to the remedies that are called for. The whole article deserves the most careful study on the part of social reformers:—

"A BABY FARM.

"Here is the goal to which one skilful and busy procurer had conveyed five of her little victims. It was the back room of a tumble-down labourer's cottage, scarcely fit for a coal place, about twelve feet square. Crouching and sprawling on the floor, in their own excrement, were two of them. Two were tied in rickety chairs, one lay in a rotten bassinet. The stench of the room was so abominable that a grown man vomited on opening the door of it. Though three were near two years old, none of them could walk; only one could stand up even by the aid of a chair. In bitter March there was no fire. Two children had a band of flannel round the loins, one had a small shawl on, the rest had only thin, filthy cotton frocks. All were yellow, fevered skin and bone. None of them cried; they were too weak. One had bronchitis, one curvature of the spine, and the rest rickets, all from their treatment. There was not a scrap of children's food in the house. In a bedroom above was a mattress, soaked and sodden with filth, to which they were carried at night, with two old coats for covering. All the children's clothes in the place were the handfuls of rags they wore. And a man and his wife sat watching them die of filth and famine, so making their living. It was their trade. On one which had died a few months before was found a graceful memorial card, with the motto, 'He shall gather them into his arms,' which had been provided for the procurer who sent it. At the farm its mother was not known. These five weary creatures were all removed into restorative care; all injured for years, some for life. Two never recovered, and died in hospital."

"NO CHECK TO FOUL PLAY.

"There is (says Mr. Waugh) little check to foul play. The child cannot complain; the police are not informed; and the neighbours, when they know a little, do not interfere. One, on being asked why she did not tell somebody what she knew was happening, said, 'You get no thanks for interfering for them sort of children.' The system of death certificates is but small security; as a rule it is none at all. Disease generally supervenes, is named on the certificate, and is enough. Even that is often filled in from the lips of the woman who, in the cases supposed, knows that her liberty depends on lies easily and safely told. In most districts there is a doctor who is, as one of the farmers expressed it, 'not troublesome about certificates.' Where there is no respectable registered practitioner of the not-troublesome kind, there is, at least, an assistant, or a non-registered practitioner, or a registered one without integrity, and hard up, who for a consideration will do almost anything. All this is well known in this shameless trade. Unless she is a born idiot at her trade, it is only the baby slaughterer who can supply the coroner's inquest with the material for its judgment. Failing manslaughter, her conduct is nothing criminal. Besides this limit of the coroner's power, there is the limit of the juror's nature. That the baby they have just seen can have been deliberately made ill and left to die by that clean, tidy woman before them, so jars on men's usual notion of woman's instincts that it is dismissed from the jury's mind with something like self-accusation. Inquests on babies usually last only five minutes."

"HOW TO STOP BABY MURDER.

"Procurers as well as receivers must be put under conditions which protect a wretched mother from plunder, and secure an endurable life to the child that that mother commits to their charge. They must be punished for obtaining babies by advertising lies. Receivers—drink-ruined monthly nurses, loafing labourers' wives, and blind old tax gatherers—to whom the little life that is obtained by the genteel-looking procurer goes—must be forbidden to eke out their own living by eking out a baby's dying. The Infant Life Protection Act, 1872, is a pompous introduction to next to nothing. Excluding all infant lives from its protection, except when two under a year old happen to be found together, it leaves to the farmer's mercies a hundred times as many as it even proposes to protect. Its main effect is to teach farmers how to escape its provisions and to conduct their business as they like. For everybody's sake, all round; for the child's sake, first and above all; for the mother's and even the father's sake; for the sake of our own priceless national sentiment of justice and self-respect; it is urgent that there be made thorough and reasonable regulations for these unhappily greatly needed and at present shamefully conducted institutions."

RUSSIA.

A very startling account of the prevalence of infanticide in Russia appears in a recent issue of The Daily Telegraph. A St. Petersburg correspondent of that journal says that wild excitement has been aroused in some parts of the Empire by the discovery of what the press call "angel factories"—establishments in which "new-born babes are systematically starved to death for a moderate charge, in order to spare their parents the shame or the trouble of acknowledging their existence and bringing them up." The writer asserts that wholesale infanticide is incomparably more widespread in modern times than it ever was in antiquity. The examination of a wretched woman, named Skooblinsky, lately arrested in Warsaw, has revealed details of a nature to shock even hardened individuals.

The existence of two immense foundling asylums in St. Petersburg and Moscow, says this correspondent, rather increases than palliates the evil:—

A numerous profession exists in the provinces of Russia, the members of which are needy women, endowed with an instinctive intuition enabling them to scent out all those mothers who desire to get their children put in the Moscow or the Petersburg Asylum for foundlings. They collect the little waifs, pack them in baskets (six or eight in one basket), stow them away under the seats of the third-class railway carriages, along with eggs, butter, rags, and refuse, and those who survive this first life's journey are deposited at the front gates of the foundling asylums; eighty-eight per cent. of these are in due time carted out of the back gates in the shape of little corpses. Now, why, these unfortunate mothers ask, should these little babies be wantonly tortured in a railway carriage, and money paid to the scheming, heartless women who torture them, and kill them in a lingering manner, when they can be finished off more mercifully, and more or less legally, at far less expense? And, in time, the thought becomes the deed, and we read at our breakfast of 835 cases of child murder that came before the courts in 1888, of 2000 cases of children dying from deliberate exposure to hunger, of "angel factories" discovered last autumn in Warsaw, and only wait to get up our horror till Skooblinsky organises the thing on business principles, and makes it a flourishing enterprise.

It is only needful further to state, on the authority of this writer, that a considerable proportion of these children, "nursed into angels" in the Foundling Hospitals, "belong to parents who are married and have a goodly share of the material comforts of life," to perceive that Russian, as well as English society, is yet very far from being permeated with the first principles of Christianity.

SILENCE AND SOLITUDE.

BY H. GRATTAN GUINNESS.

HAIL, sacred stillness! Soundless is the surge
Of the world's restlessness in this retreat;
The rush of life, the roaring of the wheels,
The cries and the contentions of mankind
Are here inaudible. Like a charmed calm
After the rude commotion of a storm
Is this tranquillity. O blessed peace,
The quiet of the ear, the mind, the heart!
My spirit seems to rise into a realm
Of purer interests. Thought takes wing,
And soars with freedom in its native element.
The Past returns; The Future draws aside
Its solemn curtain; hosts of hidden stars
Shine out and circle in the firmament,
As in the beauty of a summer night,
Present to thought; and Uncreated Light
Dawns like a Vision on the chastened gaze.
Sweet contemplation, music of the soul,
The waking of an inward sense, the touch
Of the Eternal, and the hush of heaven!

THE IRISH GOSPEL MISSION.

THE Irish Gospel Mission has now been about two years in the field. For obvious reasons I do not name the towns and villages through which they have passed. Suffice it to say that two pairs of earnest missionaries are still in the South of Ireland, going forward as the Lord opens the way before them. I will give you a few extracts from their accounts:—

"Our first meeting last night was well attended, about sixty present. We have had several talks with Roman Catholic farmers. Our visiting is very good, our most interesting talks are those we have with men on the roadside, or in the fields. In the houses they seem afraid of one another. If two or three are present in such cases they like to listen. After one meeting a Roman Catholic told me that there were as many outside in the lobby listening as we had inside (a large number), and this in broad daylight.

"The Lord has blessed us very much since we have been here. Our meetings were well attended on Sunday last; we had a grand open-air meeting in the village. At the hour announced for a special meeting to begin in the school-room, the place was packed to overflowing, and as many more outside unable to get in. So we turned out into the open air, and had a regular service of hymns, prayers, reading, and addresses. The Roman Catholics came in crowds, behind the hedges and fields round about. Such a scene was never witnessed in the village before.

"We commenced here on Sunday. A Roman Catholic publican kindly supplied the seating free of charge, and offered to get the place cleaned by his own servants. Crowds of Roman Catholics listened most attentively at the door each evening; we have a bookstall open to-day, sold Testaments and St. Peter'sEpistles. Thank God for this blessed privilege of telling what our dear Lord is able and willing to do for these people."

These are a few extracts from deeply interesting accounts; much more could be told. The door is wide open throughout Ireland. It is a little island; yet, sad to say, thousands of poor souls have never seen a Bible, or heard the offer of salvation through the finished work of the Lord Jesus. We want more men and women filled with the Holy Ghost and power to carry the message to every house.

A Memorable Farewell.

MAJOR WHITTLE AND DR. PIERSON AT MILDMAY.

THOUGH it was arranged for at short notice, the good-bye meeting at Mildmay last week to these two American brethren was well attended. During their present visit to our shores they have greatly commended themselves to Christian friends by zeal and devotion in their respective departments of service. In the audience on Friday evening were many earnest and well-known workers in London. After an opening hymn, Rev. CHARLES SPURGEON, of Greenwich, offered thanksgiving and prayer, very happy and comprehensive in expression and heartfelt in tone. His words were full of thankfulness to God for special enrichment conveyed to so many in our British communities through the testimony of our departing brethren, and of ardent desire for a still greater meed of blessing on their labours in the years to come.

Mr. R. C. MORGAN, in some opening remarks, said one of the most encouraging features of the time is the strong friendship that exists between America and Great Britain. Most important of all is the unity of feeling among the Christians of the two countries; and such interchanges of Christian service must tend to knit the hearts of these two great nations together. Our two brethren came for slightly different purposes, but both were equally sent of the Lord on his work, and He has set his seal on the labours of both. Dr. Pierson has been a great power, through his book, "The Crisis of Missions," and through his addresses, in quickening solicitude in the salvation of the heathen. We thank God for sending him and so abundantly using him. His sharp, clear-cut way of stating facts and of setting forth the interests of foreign missions has been most helpful. We are thankful also that God sent our evangelist brother Mr. Whittle, and that his earnest words have been instrumental in the conversion of so many. Mr. Morgan said that the first time he met Mr. Whittle was during the very last mission conducted by him with the late Mr. P. P. Bliss—at Peoria, near Chicago. During this visit to Britain Miss Whittle has been with her father, and has in some measure supplied the place of that gifted and lamented Christian singer.

A VERY INTERESTING STATEMENT

followed, from Dr. JOHN LOWE, of the Edinburgh Missionary Association, of the circumstances that led up to the present visit of Dr. Pierson to this country. The leading facts were recorded in our columns as they occurred, and will, we doubt not, be in the recollection of our readers. The great missionary centenary gathering in London two years ago resulted in Dr. Pierson, Dr. Gordon of Boston, and other workers in the foreign field, paying a visit to some of the principal towns in Scotland. That visit had to be cut short, and it was to supplement it that Dr. Pierson had readily assented to come back and help forward the movement then begun in the Scottish churches. Dr. Lowe spoke in the most unreserved terms of the happy results that had followed from the meetings of two years ago, not only in lifting to a higher platform the missionary zeal in the churches generally, but in prompting not a few to offer themselves for service in the foreign field. He cordially acknowledged the self-sacrificing zeal shown by Dr. Pierson during the seven months' visit now ended, and the loyal way in which he carried out all the arrangements of the committee, notwithstanding that they worked him tremendously hard. Letters from ministers and friends throughout the country speak very thankfully of his visits and addresses, and tell of some of the results. In many towns Missionary Associations have been formed, especially to promote women's work among their sisters in heathen lands. Another source of great thanksgiving has been that in this movement denominational differences have been ignored in a remarkable way. Ministers and officers of all sections of the Church have united most harmoniously. It is hoped that as a result the churches will be drawn more closely together, and that of itself will be a great gain. Students' Missionary Unions have been formed in Edinburgh, St. Andrews, Glasgow, and Aberdeen. Between 200 and 300 students have already intimated their determination to devote their lives to foreign missionary work. Besides, the missionary funds of the churches have largely increased. In connection with the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society, Dr. Lowe said he had since the beginning of the year received upwards of fifty applications from young men to be trained in this important branch of missionary work. The Society is about to organise a Medical Training Institute for young women, so as to qualify them to go forth as fully equipped medical missionaries in the homes of the women of heathen lands. Quite a number of young ladies have applied for such training. Altogether, as the result of Dr. Pierson's visit, there is a prevalent spirit of hopefulness and prayer and consecration that did not before exist. Dr. Lowe, before closing his statement, alluded to Dr. Pierson's appointment as Duff Lecturer on Missions, and he suggested that in the autumn of 1892, when these lectures are to be delivered, the large centres of population throughout England should arrange for visits from our gifted American brother.

The first to respond to the expressions of esteem and goodwill was

MAJOR D. W. WHITTLE.

I want, he said, to leave with you two or three passages from God's precious Word: "I charge thee before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom, preach the Word" (2 Tim. i. 1, 2). "Earnestly contend for the faith once for all (R.V.) delivered unto the saints" (Jude 3). "I commend you to God, and to the word of his grace, which is able to build you up, and to give you an inheritance among all them which are sanctified" (Acts xx. 32). In proportion as we magnify God's Word He will bless us. I have been sixteen years now doing the work of an evangelist; led into it by that bundle of electricity and steam and dynamite combined, D. L. Moody. Years ago he crossed my path. God works in a mysterious way, and brings us into line in order to make use of us. In 1863 I was in Chicago, home on a brief furlough with a wound received at Vicksburg. There was a great demonstration at that time, and that dear eloquent man of God, Bishop Simpson, was to give an address, stirring up the people in connection with the work of the Christian Commission. I was brought on to the platform, and I never felt so foolish in my life as in being there. Dear friends in Chicago received me kindly, because of the patriotism and love of the soldiers they felt. Mr. Moody was in the audience, and as I stood on the platform, he rose to his feet, and waved his hat, with that face of his all lit up. I told him afterwards how foolish I felt, and he said to me, "Whittle, I took you into my heart that night, and you have never been out of it since." I thought I was amply rewarded for being made a fool of. Well, he followed me right along, and one night, in the city of Chicago, I received my ordination, and Mr. Moody was the bishop who ordained me. We stood under a lamp-post as we were walking home. We were talking about the work, and what ought to be done, and what could be done. In that earnest, simple, direct way of his, he pulled out his Bible, and put his finger on 2 Timothy iv. 1, 2, and said, "See here, Whittle, this is what God wants us to do—'Preach the Word.'" That went down into my soul, and I never have got rid of it. This is God's command to us—"Preach the Word."

Mr. Morgan has alluded to his meeting me in America with Mr. Bliss. In 1874 Mr. Moody was in Edinburgh, and from that city there came a message to Mr. Bliss and myself to go out into evangelistic work; since that time I have been in the work. It is a very pleasant coincidence in connection with our meeting to-night that one of the first places that dear Mr. Bliss and I visited was the city of Detroit, where we were entertained by Dr. Pierson, and where we laboured in his church with him for seven very pleasant and profitable weeks. Since then my dear brother and myself have been brethren in Christ, and have loved each other, and have often worked together. I am so glad that the Lord sent him over here to look after me; and I have had the chance of looking after him. I am sure our work has gone hand in hand. As the evangelist has been around in Ireland and in Scotland, God has blessed the Word, and souls have been led to Christ. Then Dr. Pierson has come, and has given a stimulus to many of these converts in being consecrated to God, and in going out to the mission field. I know of many. I have met with three at

THIS DEAR OLD SOUL-TRAP,

Mildmay Conference Hall, who are preparing to go as missionaries. There are also some in Ireland, led to Christ in the meetings, who are preparing to go out as missionaries.

Since that call in 1874 how good God has been to me! What dear friends I have met. God has been good to me in my family and my home. I can testify that it is good to serve Jesus Christ; to take Him as a master, and preach his word; just to believe the Bible from back to back—not to be bothering about any criticism of it, but to take it just as God has given it, and to preach its old-fashioned truths: that men are sinners, that sin is an awful thing, and that it certainly is going to be punished—that a day of reckoning and of wrath is coming upon the ungodly; to lift up Jesus Christ as the sinner's Saviour; to tell of the precious blood that was shed on Calvary for the redemption of men; to tell of the glorious resurrection—how God, in raising Christ, showed that He accepted Him and accepts us in Him; and to preach that He is coming a second time, without sin unto salvation, to all them that look for his appearing. I love to preach a living Christ. A verse has been making melody in my soul all this week: "Christ liveth in me" (Gal. ii. 20). I want to pass it along to you here. It will always be associated in my mind with my last week in London—that the glorious Christ, the living Christ, the Son of God, liveth in me. Liveth—not a dead Christ, not doctrines about Him;

CHRIST HIMSELF LIVETH IN ME.

In 1876 God took away dear Bliss and his wife in a chariot of fire in that terrible accident at Ashtabula. Their memory will be kept green in me as long as I am on the earth—that consecrated, devoted Christian brother, with the gift of melody and song upon him, giving us those sweet songs that he is now singing in heaven. Since then, dear Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan were with me for ten years. Three years ago he was laid aside, and God still spares me, the most unworthy of this trio of brethren engaged in his work. May God lead you to pray that these last days may be the best days. I am fifty years old this year, and I pray to God that it may be a jubilee year. Will you pray with me that God may make it so, as I go back to America to be with dear Mr. Moody this summer, and over there in my own country probably for the rest of my life; that God may fill me more with his Spirit; that I may keep my eyes more upon the Lord Jesus Christ, nay, love Him better, and preach with more faithfulness and power.

I have many regrets in leaving England. It seems now to me like home. I appreciate England as never before. Dr. Pierson and I have been to France and Italy—countries that have been dominated by Romanism for centuries, and that show the highest development of its influence. What are the results? Degradation, superstition, debasing ignorance. To witness all this, and then to come back to the green fields of Old England; to see the church spires; to hear the melody of the church bells; to listen to the preaching of the Gospel, and have the Word of God magnified—oh, it seemed good to get under the old English flag again, and to be on English soil. God bless England, and keep her Christians faithful, earnestly contending for the faith once for all delivered to the saints. Have nothing to do with this revival of Romanism in your borders; this effort to draw men away from the Bible. Do not give place to it, but stand firm for God's book and God's truth. I pray that we may do so in America. We have got the same battle to fight as you have here, and if England wavers and goes down before the foe, how disastrous it will be for America and for the world. The ashes of my ancestors are here in Old England. One of them was burnt 300 years ago down there in Smithfield, under your last Roman Catholic Queen. If you ever have another, and I were to be over here, probably they would burn me. Well, I think I'd love to be burned for the sake of Christ, though I would rather that the Lord would burn his truth into the hearts of the people. We have always thought that old Thomas Whittle died for something when he was burned at Smithfield in 1536. But if it be true what some in high circles are now saying, it would seem as if he did not die for much of anything after all. But he did. He died for the faith of Jesus Christ, and it is worth dying and contending for. So may God bless you, and keep you shoulder to shoulder, without reference to denominational distinction, faithful to the good old English Bible, and may you send it out over the world. And may our new nation, America, and your colonies in Australia, India, and Africa—all who speak the Anglo-Saxon tongue we love—be strong to stand with you in defence of the faith once for all delivered to the saints.

DR. A. T. PIERSON.

An exceedingly interesting address followed from this American "Mercurius," full of points of personal interest, of impressive fact, and of rousing appeal. Considerations of space oblige us to condense somewhat his instructive utterances. He started, like Major Whittle, with a few verses from the Word of God, choosing portions of Acts xiv. and xv., relating to the travels of Paul and Barnabas. The whole of their missionary journey was one experience of the supernatural power God. I want this (said Dr. Pierson) to be the keynote of my words on this last evening in London—that missions are not pre-eminently the work of the Church; they are the work of God. The success of missions is not the success of organisation, or of business method, or even of human consecration; it is a divinely-given harvest. The power that opens doors is not diplomacy; it is not the fear of Governments; it is not sagacity; it is not worldly machination, manœuvring, or wire-pulling; it is simply the power of God. That which throws down the obstacles of superstition, ignorance, and idolatry, is the mighty moving of the Holy Ghost. That which makes the Church in sympathy with missions, and gives the power to promote missions, is the Holy Ghost awakening the spirit of prayer and giving the spirit of consecration in the membership.

THE WHOLE THING IS OF GOD.

Nothing would have induced me to cut loose from what may be called worldly and temporal comfort, and give myself up to work in which there is no settled income, no fixed home, and no definite plan, but the profound conviction that the work of missions is a supernatural work.

After a very warm and unreserved expression of acknowledgment for the personal courtesy and kindness shown to him throughout Great Britain during this seven months' visit, Dr. Pierson made special mention of the services rendered by Dr. Lowe in arranging the meetings in Scotland. I have been amazed, he continued, at the enthusiasm awakened by the simple statements I have sought to make about the great work of missions. I have had audiences numbering from 5000 to 6000; and even in the smaller places I have been told that the meetings have surpassed those held even in times of great political excitement. This surely means a great awakening on the subject of missions. I came across the water, making no charges for my services; but these dear friends in Scotland have not allowed me or my family to suffer any want, and it has all come from their voluntary and spontaneous kindness. I stipulated that we should have no formal votes of thanks, and that there should be no collections at the meetings for my benefit. Dr. Lowe has told me that the voluntary offerings sent in for the expenses in connection with my visit have exceeded the requirements by £250. I believe the committee are proposing to found in the Training Institute at Edinburgh, that will give a bursary every year to some student which will assist him in his training for the missionary field. I am glad that the subject of the unity of all denominations has been alluded to by Dr. Lowe. You know that in Scotland they have very positive opinions, and that when they insist upon their views the controversy sometimes grows a trifle warm. Yet when I appeared on the platforms of these various churches and halls to plead for missions, I was supported and sustained heartily by men of every denomination and of every shade of opinion in the entire body of evangelical believers; for not only the different sections of Presbyterians, but Methodists, Baptists, Congregationalists, Brethren, and Episcopalians have taken part in the meetings. It has been delightful, too, to be received into the houses of all these brethren; and I should not forget to mention those of the Society of Friends who have shown themselves specially friendly. And the blessed results have not vanished with my disappearance. They told me, in perhaps twenty different places, that they had never seen brethren of all denominations on the same platform before. Not only have they organised movements among women, but in several places they have founded missionary bands, and they are going to keep the anniversary of my visit as a perpetual missionary meeting in which all sections of ths Church are to join. Even with regard to the weather there has, as I believe, been a marvellous interposition of God. I have spoken about 250 times since Nov. 16, and only one meeting has been at all interfered with by the rain. That was an afternoon meeting in Ayr, and even then we had some 1500 people present, so that it was not altogether a failure.

TOUCHING GIFTS.

There has also been much that was touching and remarkable in connection with the gifts for missions made at these meetings. During the first visit to Edinburgh, in November, I made a suggestion that a little self-denial, even with respect to our luxuries and conveniences, would yield a large revenue to the work of the Master. A lady, who was present at the welcome meeting in the Established Church Hall, wore upon her arm a bracelet, an heirloom that had come down from her grandmother. She sent it next day to us with this message: "I can get along without the bracelet, but the heathen cannot get along without the Gospel. Sell the bracelet, and use the proceeds to send the Gospel abroad." And we did. At Helensburgh a young man present in the meeting took off his gold chain, worth three guineas, and said, "I will never wear a gold chain again; take this, and give the proceeds to missions." The next day a young man, who had heard me tell about the chain, took off a gold scarf ring, and gave it for the same object. A poor woman, who had set aside a few shillings to buy a pair of kid gloves, sent the money, saying she could manage without the gloves. Many other larger and smaller gifts were received in the same way—in one case nine penny postage stamps—and devoted to the cause of missions. And I tell you, however imperfect an appeal for missions may be, when that appeal reaches the pockets of the people, God is behind the appeal. There are many people who seem to be converted outwards, but their conversion never reaches stomach or pocket; when it does, you may be sure it is a genuine conversion. When the cause of missions reaches the pockets, and when we come to deny ourselves the gratification of appetite, of avarice, or of pride, for the sake of our Redeemer, we shall see a new era in foreign missions.

Here Dr. Pierson told an incident in German history—how at a critical period in the struggle with Napoleon the German Emperor asked his people to give up their gold and silver ornaments, and wear iron instead, so that the national treasury might be supplied. It was then that the Order of the Iron Cross was established. It would be a good thing to institute another Order of the Iron Cross in these days of missions. A woman in New York once could not find the opportunity to exercise self-denial, though a six thousand dollar diamond ring sparkled on one of her fingers. I do not say it is wrong to wear jewels, said Dr. Pierson, though I do not wear them myself; but I think there is no use in our talking about being unable to meet the demands of the work of God when, if we were to sacrifice our superfluities—I will not say our conveniences, comforts, or necessities—we might send the Gospel

ROUND THE WORLD IN TEN YEARS' TIME.

Turning from the past to the future, I want to indicate what appears to me to be the necessary condition of an aroused and increased power in the progress of missions. We must have in the Church of Jesus Christ a new spirit of unity. We hear much about unity, but there is a good deal of it on platforms and public meetings that unfortunately does not extend very far into private life. It troubles me greatly that there is so much denominationalism in the very atmosphere in which we are living. It has been said of Principal Cairns that no man in Scotland carries a bigger brain under his hat; it ought to be added that no man in that land carries a bigger heart under his ribs. In referring to this gathering of all denominations and clans to welcome the American brother, Dr. Cairns told how, when the Forth Bridge was nearing completion, it was found that the two extremities would not meet. Hydraulic pressure and other means were tried to bring them together, but without avail. The thing was left till next morning, when it was found that during the night the temperature had risen some eight or ten degrees, with the result that the two parts of the bridge were brought together. So, said the eloquent Doctor, you cannot bring brethren together from different denominations of the Christian Church until you get

A RISE IN THE SPIRITUAL TEMPERATURE.

It needs the Holy Ghost to create a new spirit of love in the churches, and of zeal of God. If we had this warmer spiritual temperature, we should be like soldiers in an army when they near the foe. They forget their individual differences, and even their regimental standards, and regard only the colours of the nation.

I would add a word to what my friend Whittle said about Roman Catholicism. That experience of ours down in Italy, as well as in France, dispelled for ever any idea we might have had, if we ever had any, of there being no need for Protestant missions in Papal countries. I was never more shocked in my life than when in Dublin the other day: walking down one of the leading streets of that splendid city, I saw on a Roman Catholic church this inscription in Latin, "To Mary the refuge of sinners." When Major Whittle and I were in Italy, we visited some of the galleries in Florence, looking at the pictures of the great old masters. There was one fine painting representing the seed of the woman bruising the serpent's head. The devil is there as a great giant with most malignant form and and face, bending low and supporting himself by his arms, that rest upon the ground before him. The lower part of his body is a long slimy serpent. On its head rests a foot, but it is not the foot of Jesus; it is the foot of the Virgin. She holds in her hands the infant Saviour, who has put his foot on her foot. Major Whittle turned round to me, and said, "That is just what Rome does—puts the Virgin between Christ and the sinner, between Christ and the devil, between Christ and the Church." When the Archbishop of Rio de Janeiro went back to Brazil from the proclamation of the Immaculate Conception, he told an immense multitude in the Cathedral, on the Lord's Day, that he wanted them to understand how great a personage St. Joseph was, because he was really the ruling power in heaven. He explained it in this way: Jesus Christ, as a loyal Son, of course obeys his mother; his mother, as a loyal wife, of course obeys her husband; and so St. Joseph is the ruling power in heaven. I think that, where such a doctrine as that is calmly and deliberately taught, there is a little

NEED OF PROTESTANT MISSIONS.

I have not a bit of sympathy with the tendency that exists in America (I know very little about your country in this respect) to talk of the Roman Catholic Church as though there were no need for sending any missionaries to Papal countries.

At this point in his address, Dr. Pierson made references to and read portions from a little book in which he said he records the most striking facts about missions and their results that he can get hold of. One extract he read gave statistical figures as to the growth and present working power of the London Missionary Society. Another told of the wonderful advances in Japan. A third had reference to the truly marvellous history of the missions of the Moravian brethren. The congregations belonging to that devoted section of the Church of Christ give one out of every sixty of their members to be a foreign missionary. If all the other Protestant churches observed the same ratio, there would be 500,000 workers in the foreign field, instead of 5000 or 6000. Though the very poorest of the denominations, the Moravians give more money per head to foreign missions than the richest church in Christendom. No wonder God blesses them. They insist that every congregation shall make missionary contributions; that every congregation shall give workers to the foreign field; and that every congregation shall take a living interest in the work. They consider a congregation dead if it does not contribute to send forth missionaries. To-day, when the Christian Church is standing appalled at the persistency with which Thibet locks her doors against the outsider, these brave Moravians, unheeding obstacles and difficulties, are climbing up those steppes of Thibet in order to bring the Gospel to bear upon the shrine and throne of the Great Llama. They refused to be frozen out of Greenland, or to be roasted out of the West Indies, and they are not to be driven out of Thibet. What wonderful zeal for God and earnestness in his cause. What apostolic self-denial. God bless them, and teach us to follow the blessed example they are setting to all Christendom.

Dr. Pierson next referred to the fact that October 2, 1892, would mark since William Carey preached the grand sermon in which he exhorted the people to "attempt great things for God, and expect great things from God." If the whole Christian Church in Great Britain does not rise to the occasion (said the speaker), and on that second day of October, 1892, go to Kettering to re-consecrate as missionary ground that place where the first missionary society was formed, I shall be perfectly astonished. I want to be among the number of the pilgrims who go there on that day, to take possession, I hope, of the house, and turn it into a missionary training school for young men and women. Dr. Pierson read from his note-book the twelve cardinal points embodied in the covenant drawn up by Carey, Marshman, and Ward at Serampore, on October 7, 1805, just thirteen years after the formation of the first missionary society. He said he was going to have them published as a tract, and scattered abroad. The first Hindoo convert was baptized in 1800, and fifty years after Carey died the native Christians in India numbered 500,000; the ordained native pastors outnumbered the missionaries.

THE FULL END OF THE CENTURY

Coming to the close of his discursive but most instructive review, Dr. Pierson said: I sail from England on May 31, for home, and I positively have not before me a solitary plan. It is the first time I have been without a plan, and I think I never had so blessed an experience. I have always been planning for myself and arranging affairs ahead. Now I have come to the point where I have submitted myself to God, and said I would follow step by step as He might lead. I want you to pray for me, and for dear Brother Whittle. I owe more, under God, to Major Whittle than to any other living man. When he was in my house in Detroit, in 1874, he told me, after being four weeks there, and just as he was leaving the house, that he felt, if I were only a consecrated man, God would greatly use me. It was a case of great fidelity, and I commend it to your example. He told me faithfully he felt I lacked consecration, and I knew it a great deal better than he did. I could not get his words out of my thoughts, or out of my heart, until I made a new surrender of myself to Christ. He told you we had been like bosom friends ever since, and now you will understand the reason. Do you wonder that he follows me with daily prayer, or that I follow him? I would ask your prayers for him and for me; not because we are of the slightest consequence, but because the Kingdom of God is of consequence, and God can take up the weak and despised things and make them mighty. Enrich us with your prayers, that we may go out wherever the Lord leads, and that He may make us instruments for doing his work.

In some hearty words, Col. Morton expressed the great indebtedness they felt at Mildmay to Major Whittle for his labours in the ten days' mission; and also thanked Dr. Pierson for his inspiring words. On behalf of the company present he warmly shook hands with the two departing friends, and wished them God speed in the name of the Lord. Mr. J. E. Mathieson again commended them and their dear ones to God in prayer, and before the Benediction some verses were sung of the appropriate hymn, "Forward be our watchword."

WORKERS WANTED IN PARIS.—Miss Johnstone, secretary of the Ladies' Committee, McAll Mission, Paris, writes:—"We are at present much in need of lady workers. Various circumstances, ill-health, forced absence, &c., combined during the winter to reduce our staff of permanent voluntary workers. So that those who have been in the breach throughout the season have had more than their share of work, and are now about to leave on their summer holidays. I write, hoping that some of your readers may be induced either to give themselves entirely to mission work here, or to come to us for a few weeks to replace those who will be absent. Christian ladies are wanted to play harmoniums, help in schools and dispensaries, girls' classes, evening meetings, visiting the poor, &c. As our work lies entirely among the French, some knowledge of that language, of course, is necessary. Ladies who may be led to respond to this appeal should write to me, at 17, Rue de l'Arc de Triomphe, Paris."

CAPE GENERAL MISSION.

Mr. Spencer Walton's third quarterly letter dated Capetown, March, contains some interesting items of news as to the progress of the Mission:—

"Our reports are encouraging, and we are still going forward. Our new hall is to be opened next month; we are needing funds for it. Miss Wright is doing well at Wynberg, and Miss Jones, who has only been with us ten days, is meeting with great encouragement at the Sailors' Rest. Our two nurses, Sister Edith and Nurse Frances, are finding more open doors than they can fill. We can do with four more; two must be duly qualified as ladies' nurses and all out-and-out Christians.

"We have had a grand opening in the Transkei. During my King William's Town Mission, friends came forward and offered to buy a horse and kit for a mounted missionary to the Cape Mounted Rifles, and also provide his stipend. This will be a long-felt need supplied. Directly Corporal Holt can obtain his discharge from the Hospital Service Corps he will go. We are buying him out, but there are difficulties as to his immediate discharge. He will have the whole of the Transkei as his parish, and a wide field to reap in. At King William's Town they are forming a committee of ladies to superintend two nurses they wish us to supply. When all is settled we will be ready for two more.

"I sadly need a practical assistant who would take the oversight of the Cape Town work and new hall; he would find it most interesting. I have been enabled to travel about 2500 miles this quarter, and hold three most encouraging missions."

NORTHFIELD SUMMER SCHOOL.

The Students' Conference, held under the leadership of Mr. D. L. Moody, at Northfield, Massachusetts, U.S.A., during the past four years, will have its session this year, June 28—July 10. Mr. Moody himself will, of course, be on hand during the entire gathering. President Patton, of Princeton College, New Jersey, has been invited, and other prominent religious teachers have already agreed to be present.

This series of meetings has now come to be truly a world's gathering of Christian Students, and this coming season its representative character will be fully preserved. Some five hundred "college-boys" will attend from the United States and Canada. There will also be a large delegation of Japanese students, now resident in the States, who will be present. The European contingent will represent Dublin, Glasgow, Edinburgh, St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Oxford, and Cambridge Universities. Upsala University, in Sweden, will also send a delegate, and a student from Berlin has accepted the invitation to attend the Conference. Wilfred Monod, a son of Pastor Theodore Monod, now a student at Montauban, will represent the Christian young men of France, and natives of Asia and Africa will probably be present.

No student can attend the Conference without gaining a personal inspiration and feeling an increased sense of responsibility and opportunity in the service of Christ. We certainly trust that the European delegation will continue to increase in size, and are sure that all who go will be repaid a hundredfold in blessings received.

Canon Wilberforce, in his recent visit to India, carefully investigated the opium question in its various phases and will give his report of what he saw and heard at the annual meeting of the Society for the Suppression of the Opium Trade, to be held at Exeter Hall on Tuesday next, at 7 p.m.

Letters from France.

—UP THE RIVER SEINE TO PARIS.

Mr. Henry Cook, of the Seamen's Mission, Gosport, having arranged to lend his Bethel yacht, the Herald of Mercy, for a few weeks' testimony on the Seine in connection with the McAll Mission at Paris, kindly invited a few friends to accompany him. The party consisted of Mr. Cook, his little boy, Mr. R. C. Morgan with his elder son and wife, and myself. Captain Mountifield and a crew of three managed the vessel. Being a little run down in health, I found it a most agreeable and restful way of spending a portion of my ministerial holiday.

On Thursday, May 1, we went on board at Havre. The masts had been taken down to enable the vessel to pass under the bridges. Mr. Cook delights to tell how the whole cost —£1500—was received in answer to prayer. And the words, "Seamen's Mission," painted on the side of the vessel, and its very appropriate name, made it an object of curiosity to many.

We had on board a plentiful supply of French Testaments and tracts. A number of people gathered on the quay, to whom we would gladly have spoken the message had we known the language. The silent messenger, in the form of a French New Testament, was an excellent substitute, and may speak effectually in after days. In every case the gift was gratefully received.

We commenced our journey at four o'clock, and by about 7.30 arrived at Tankerville lock, where we remained for the night. Early on Friday morning we started again, and reached Rouen at 6.30, after a delightful day's sail. Here we were delayed until the following Tuesday, owing to the difficulty of obtaining necessary permission for the journey and a steamer to tow us. But we made good use of our time, for is an interesting place. To us, however, it was not the cathedral, nor other churches that almost rival it in the splendour of their architecture, that had most attraction. Nor was it the monument erected to Joan of Arc on the spot where centuries ago she was burned. But here we met Rev. J. W. Herivel, the able and earnest representative of the Wesleyan Mission, and were interested in looking over the excellent premises he has erected for his work. These include two reading-rooms, a hall to seat about 200, which is well filled on Sunday evenings for a French service, and a larger hall to seat 400. A large shop below, and dwelling apartments above, bring in a good rent and considerably lessen the financial responsibilities of the work. The block is situated in one of the main streets, and cost about £4000, in addition to £2000 for the site. Mr. Herivel is assisted by his energetic wife, and by a French missioner whose conversion is mainly due to the work of Mr. Cook.

Sunday in Rouen, as in every other French city, is a mixture of superstition, toil, and pleasure. One Sunday spent on the Continent should be enough to warn every man against attempts to secularise the day in England. Yet, much as we were grieved with what we saw in the city, we were still more grieved to hear from our Captain that while the Lord's Day had been regarded on Norwegian, Swedish, and German vessels, on English vessels men had been at work. Strange that so valuable a boon should be so lightly esteemed.

On Sunday and Monday evenings we had a number of sailors on board for a little Gospel meeting. A heavy thunderstorm on Sunday and rain on Monday prevented a large attendance; but on both occasions the sailors showed warm appreciation of an attempt to care for them while so far away from their own land. In these French ports temptations are many and severe, and work that aims at helping the sailors is worthy of all support. Besides these meetings for sailors, a meeting was held in the morning in Mr. Herivel's room, at which Mr. Morgan gave a most encouraging and helpful talk on "Whole-heartedness," as illustrated by the character of Elisha.

On Tuesday, May 6, we were glad to leave Rouen behind us, and to continue our journey towards Paris, where we arrived on Friday morning. The whole journey had been full of interest to us all. Every town we passed had its fine church, but this suggested rather the darkness of superstition than the light of Gospel truth. Before reaching Paris we passed two churches, not far apart, where (our pilot told us) there is no priest, because the people are too poor to pay for one.

But the chief interest to us was in the opportunities we had of distributing the Word of God. Sometimes we were able to throw a book into a passing barge, or to laundry women washing clothes by the river side. Once or twice we failed to reach our mark, and the book was very literally "bread cast upon the waters," but even that may have the promise fulfilled. Twice, when the book thus fell into the river, the bargemen promptly let down a bucket and possessed themselves of the priceless treasure. At the locks we usually had quite a congregation. One or two receiving the book at first, would make the fact known to others, who came in considerable numbers eager to obtain copies for themselves. In one place, where 300 men were employed in building a new lock, the manager, who could speak a little English, received a Testament himself, and allowed us to distribute amongst the workmen.

About 250 copies of the Testament were thus given into the hands of people to whom the Bible is an unknown book. Oh that many may prove to be messages of life and salvation to those interesting but benighted and priest-ridden people! The promise, "My word shall not return unto me void," encourages us to hope for a considerable harvest from such scattering of the seed.

That which delighted us so greatly was the readiness, and even eagerness, of the people to receive the New Testament. There were only two exceptions: one, a poor woman who said she would rather we had given her a bottle of wine; and another, a young man who looked at it very doubtfully, and turned up his nose contemptuously when he was pointed to John iii. 16. But even he received the gift, and was found with others standing by the river side waving us adieu as we left the lock.

We could not help feeling that there is a great work to be done among these French riverside villages; and that a very great responsibility rests upon English Christians to undertake the work. Any Christian man who possesses a yacht, and is able to speak French, could not have greater enjoyment than by journeying up the Seine and other rivers, delivering his message to the people by the way. Anyone disposed to think of such a privileged enterprise would gain much valuable information from Mr. H. Cook, 47, Stoke-road, Gosport, whose one idea is to preach the Gospel to those whose lives are spent on the water, salt or fresh.

Bournemouth. George Wainwright.

DUBLIN CITY MISSION.—The twenty-ninth annual meeting of friends and supporters was held a few days ago, the Archdeacon of Glendalough presiding. The report, presented by Mr. T. P. Law, Q.C., stated that the workers find the people generally accessible. The endeavour is not to form a sect, but to bring professing Christians into living union with the Head of the Church, and to seek the salvation of those who remain without. Jews have been reached in goodly numbers. Many of them visit the agent in his house, and a weekly meeting for Jewesses has been started. Rev. Dr. Prenter said he rejoiced to contemplate the effect of such common work upon the Church at large. It seemed to hint that the day of sectarianism and strife was coming to an end, and that the time for which the Lord prayed is being hastened by common work for his glory. The income of the Mission last year fell short of the expenditure by £75.

OUR BLUE-JACKETS.

I desire to thank your readers very warmly for the kind help they have given to my work, both to the building of the Sailors' Rest, and to the gospel and temperance work in the Navy all the world over. H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh spoke a few days ago of the great improvement in the man-o'-war's man since he first went to sea; how rapidly the temperance cause had grown in the service. Still the drink and its manifold temptations are a great hindrance to all moral and spiritual work in the Navy, and making total wrecks of many brave fellows. The Sailors' Rests at Portsmouth and Devonport have been instrumental in saving hundreds, and I hope will do more in the future than they have in the past. Devonport, enlarged to double its old size, is one of the largest temperance sailors' homes in the world; but if we had had double the number of beds, we could have let them all on Sunday week!

At Portsmouth, not yet enlarged, we are still more crowded. An artist on the staff of The Illustrated London News sketched the scene in our reading-room at midnight—men on the table and under, and in every direction. Having nearly finished Devonport, Miss Wurtz and myself have determined to throw ourselves heart and soul, while we have health and strength, to the doubling of the Portsmouth Sailors' Rest. I possess the ground, freehold, and the workmen are excavating the foundations for a block containing a large number of cabins, reading-rooms, sailor boys' room, Bible-class room, baths, &c.

The estimated cost is £10,000. It is a large sum; but the same loving Father to whose goodness, through his stewards, I owe the £20,000 lately needed for Devonport, will, I feel assured, send in the needful money. Some tokens have come already. A lady has promised £1500 to endow a portion of the building as a memorial to her husband, and other friends have endowed cabins by sending sums of thirty guineas. I have taken a house close, by which to meet the present emergency, which I mean to fit up from top to bottom with iron beds. This house came into my possession in a remarkable way, just when I needed it; and although a fire broke out next door, which at one time threatened to reduce the new possession to ashes, it was extinguished, and scarcely any harm was done. Several kind friends have given me £5 each to buy bedsteads and bedding complete, and I hope in about a fortnight to open the house.

Our Channel Fleet has just returned; the ships lay for some time at Gibraltar, and a ten days' mission was largely helped by the blue-jackets, and great blessing and many instances of conversion were the result. Asking the prayers of your readers,

Yours in the Master's service,

Agnes E. Weston.

Sailors' Rest, Portsmouth.

THE PROTESTANT CHURCHMEN'S ALLIANCE.—On Friday evening last, Lord Grimthorpe presided over a large meeting in Exeter Hall. In the course of an address he referred to the Clergy Discipline Bill, which he drew up at the request of the Bishop of Peterborough and Lord Cross. It went before the Bishops in the beginning of last year. Nothing more was heard of it, but after an interview with the Archbishop the Bill was settled; and at a meeting two months ago the Bishops went through it with wonderful harmony. It looked as if the Bill would soon be presented, but it was sent to the Government draftsman and made twice as long and quite spoilt. Lord Grimthorpe thought that the need was for an Episcopal Aggression Bill. He was quite willing to help the Bishops, and to praise them when they acted rationally. He was accused of being hard upon them, but it was the Government draftsman who had ruined the Bill twice over since 1888. Revs. H. W. Webb-Peploe and W. Abbott, and Mr. J. D. Chadwick, addressed the meeting.

Notes from Cambridge.

ON Friday last, May 23, a meeting of the C.E.Z.M.S. was held in the Guildhall to welcome Mrs. Ahok, the Chinese lady now visiting England. She spoke by an interpreter, Mrs. Robert W. Stewart, of Foochow. Mrs. Ahok said the number of teachers in England, as compared with those in China, is as if one gas-lamp of London were put to light Foochow city. England is the gasometer, but she refuses to give the light to the nations still in darkness, though she has the light so abundantly herself. Mrs. Ahok told of the misery of Chinese women in life and in death. "You women and children of England are so happy, and we never know what it is to walk without pain." Then she earnestly appealed for workers in China. "The Lord Jesus is coming back. Are we doing his pleasure in this matter?" Mrs. Ahok had been to Bedford, among other places, before coming to Cambridge. Sir Charles Aitchison, K.C.S.I., was in the chair, supported by Major-General C. G. Robinson and Professor Babington, F.R.S.

On May 12 sermons were preached in Cambridge on behalf of the Universities' Mission to Central Africa. In the afternoon the usual University Sermon was preached by Rev. G. F. Maclear, D.D., warden of St. Augustine's College, Canterbury. Rev. C. M. Woosnam, chaplain on the Mersey to the Missions to Seamen, spoke to 'Varsity men on the evening of Tuesday, the 27th.

Some interesting work is being done on Sunday afternoons at Addenbroke's Hospital; an address is given by undergraduates and hymns are sung. The whole service lasts only half an hour.

A new Missionary Club has just been started, the "Mchwas." Each of the members selects a mission field, and reads a paper on it, in his turn. This is the third Missionary Club commenced since October; in that month the "Gonds" and "Hydahs" were started on much the same lines. Missionary interest is fully alive among the undergraduates.

The June number of "Our Boys' Magazine"—a monthly paper for schoolboys, edited by University men—is just about to come out. Ten thousand of these magazines are taken in by schoolboys or their friends every month; it is issued by the Schoolboys' Scripture Union. On the list of its former editors have been the names of Dr. C. F. Harford-Battersby, B.A., Messrs. A. R. F. Hyslop, B.A., and C. H. Nash, B.A., all well known in connection with the Children's Special Service Mission.

CLARE COLLEGE,

like the other Colleges, holds a weekly prayer-meeting, during the Michaelmas and Lent Terms, on Wednesday evening.

The College supports a Mission at Rotherhithe, of which Rev. Andrew Amos is the missioner.

There is carried on, under the management of a Clare man, an open-air mission in the lowest part of Cambridge (Barnwell) on Sunday evenings. At this men from various Colleges help. The people are visited in their homes after the service.

Work is also carried on by Clare men at the gasworks, where an interesting meeting is held. It only lasts twenty minutes, just the time a gang is off duty, and consists of a hymn, a prayer, two short pointed addresses, and prayer. The workmen welcome them heartily, and seem very willing to listen. During the winter these services are held every Sunday night in a schoolroom.

Clare has sent many into the mission field. Dr. Daniel Corrie went to N. India in 1806. Since his time there have gone out Dr. Young, now Bishop of Athabasca; Dr. Kelly, Coadjutor Bishop of Moray; Revs. F. W. Amly, B.A. (S. India), H. J. Birkett, B.A. (N. India), W. Weston, B.A. (Japan), W. S. Barker, B.A. (Bombay), and H. F. Whittington, B.A. (S. Africa).

FRIENDS' YEARLY MEETING.

LAST week we anticipated a good Yearly Meeting, and the forecast has been fully justified. Like some of the streets in our cities, where, twenty years ago, the middle-class houses were set back from the road, with greens in front, but are now turned into busy shops and marts of commerce, and consequently are at once more valuable and useful, so the Friends are adapting their Christian principles to the modern needs and wants of different classes of society. They have an honourable history, and their record of noble deeds is something to be thankful for; but a recent instance of ignorance on the part of a great traveller teaches the lesson that a Church, to keep its place, must continue to make history, and meet the present-day needs of the community. The Church with a future must make its beneficence felt. This the Friends' Church is earnestly and definitely aiming at.

The Yearly Meeting proper is always preceded by that of ministry and oversight, where Friends are released for foreign service, and the liberating minutes of their own meetings are confirmed or otherwise. Mary E. Beck, of Brighton, had obtained permission for a period of residence and service in Philadelphia, and this was thankfully confirmed, and much encouragement extended to her in the prosecution of her work. The same liberty was given to Isaac Sharp, in the prospect of his very extensive service in Asia, America, and parts of the European continent. Addison White and wife, of Iowa, were also authorised to visit the families of Friends in Norway and Denmark as way opened for the service that had lain on their hearts.

The Yearly Meeting convened on the 21st inst. with about an average attendance, but a cheerful and hopeful tone has characterised it so far. For perhaps 150 years there have not been so many accessions to membership as during the past year, and the epistles read from America have nearly all the same hopeful expressions, especially those west of the Mississippi, where friends are vigorously carrying the Gospel to the regions beyond.

The Yearly Meeting, true to its ancient traditions, has petitioned against capital punishment, and it has also appealed to Parliament against the compensation of publicans or brewers for the cessation of yearly licences. Henry Stanley Newman, who has visited all the American Yearly Meetings, gave a thrilling account of his travels there. He spoke of the fact that Friends generally prefer and thrive best in the rural districts, but emphasised the need of their facing the great problems met with so prominently in cities. Unless they do their share in elevating the city populations of America, they will miss a great chance of doing good, and fail where they ought to succeed. Reports come to London from all our colonies where Friends reside, and sympathy and help are always secured where needed. Thus assistance is given to a Friends' School in Hobart Town, Tasmania, and towards the building of a new meeting house in Auckland, as well as to Friends in France and elsewhere.

To many younger Friends, more particularly, the gatherings that surround the Yearly Meetings are of especial interest. John T. Dorland, of Canada, has addressed many meetings of young men, doubtless with happy results. The Missionary Helpers' Union had a splendid annual meeting, which was well and ably addressed by Frederick Sessions, just home from a tour in India; Ellen Nainby, an Indian missionary; Clara Herbert, a missionary from Madagascar; and by Rachel M. Clark, who with her husband, Henry E. Clark, will soon rejoin their daughter in Madagascar.

On Saturday, the usual breakfast meeting was held at Bunhill Fields, and was presided over by Arthur Pease, J.P., instead of his brother, Sir Joseph W. Pease, who was unable to attend. In the afternoon, the inauguration of the Friends' East-End Mission took place, with James Reckitt, J.P., its chief promoter, in the chair. The Home is Forster House, in Tottenham-green, where the family of the late W. E. Forster had lived for over a century. A large company of Friends assembled, and the scene was most animated and interesting. The Friends' Quarterly Examiner contributors had a happy reunion, and an anti-opium meeting was ably and eloquently addressed by Mr. Sessions, Wm. Jones (who has just travelled round the world), and others. The morning devotional meetings have this year been remarkably solemn and helpful. As the Meeting is in session, we must defer further notice till next week. WM. HOBSON.

A PLEA FOR EGYPT.

DEAR SIR,—Will you allow me again to appeal to your readers for help and workers for Egypt. There is a wide-open door there, especially in the great cities, in Alexandria and Cairo. Moslems, Greeks, Italians, &c., are all alike accessible.

The two sistors, Miss Johnson and Miss Higgins, whom we sent out in December, met with great encouragement in Alexandria. They especially appeal for workers for the Greeks. Some of the latter know Italian, which is the language the two sisters are learning, but most require that the Gospel shall be preached to them in their own tongue, which is not a difficult one to acquire. Miss Johnson writes: "March 16.—Last Sunday week we had seven adults in the morning and thirty-eight in the afternoon, a mixed assembly of women and children. Sunday, 2nd, twenty-four children and eight adults, all Greeks. There is only one out of these that can speak Italian. This one translates for the rest. They all want so much to have the Word read and explained in their own tongue."

Again: "This morning I have had a good time with a number of Greek women in one of their homes, with John x. They asked for my 'little book,' and desired me to read it to them. It always cheers me to see how they drink in the Word." "We are praying now for help for the Moslems; during the past three weeks we have had so many opportunities of giving them the Word, if we could only have spoken to them, so many have come to us for medicine; they seem to have great confidence in us." "Please make the Greeks special matter of prayer; we have free access to their homes."

Miss Johnson and Miss Higgins are generally well received, but the Romish and Greek priests are not idle. "Last Sunday Miss Higgins was pelted with mud and stones by the children of the Altareen, and called, all the way, a Protestant thief; but it did not disturb the meeting with the children. We feel there is much to be thankful for on the whole; the Lord has given us favour in the sight of the people." "We are asking now very earnestly the Lord to make plain the way for others to come to us, and when I think that a year must be spent in learning the language before new comers can do much, I have to ask the Lord to make me patient in this matter; it is so hard to see so many perishing souls with no one to speak to them. Surely the Lord's children will see to this matter, and will find the means to send forth labourers." "A boy in the school to-day, aged 14, stood up and said he felt his need of salvation. How this cheered us!" "It is wonderful what confidence the Greeks have in us; it is among them that we have the most freedom in speaking and visiting. The poverty here is very great; many of the poor starving."

When our two sisters went out to Egypt, they left behind them, among the many souls whom the Lord had given them when they worked in South London, three young women and two young men, who are all desirous of giving themselves to the foreign work. One of the young women might be sent out at once, and would be a very small addition to the expense out there, as our two sisters have a room for her, and she would live with them. Perhaps some of your readers may be disposed to contribute towards the cost of sending this young woman out.

But are there not many, possessing means of their own, who might go? There are 250,000 souls in Alexandria, and 400,000 in Cairo, besides millions of Moslems in the Delta towns and villages. There is full religious liberty in Egypt. Of what other part of the Turkish Empire can we say the same? And yet the Lord's people are taking scarcely any advantage of it, though the climate is delightful for most of the year, and thousands of English go out every year for the beauty of it.

And what of Arabia? Is nothing to be done for it? We have deeply interesting intelligence from Moab, from the Lethabys, who, with their new helper Miss Arnold, are holding on their way undaunted, amid scenes of lawless violence, murder, and plunder, God Himself being "a wall of fire round about them."—Yours obediently, F. T. HAIG.

Redhill, Surrey.

Personalia.

"Edna Lyall," who has been seriously ill, is now convalescent, but she is forbidden all literary work for some time to come.

Rev. J. B. Gribble.—This well-known Australian worker, we regret to learn, has met with a serious calamity through the destruction of his newly-erected parsonage. Mr. Gribble and his family are thus rendered destitute, as no insurance was effected.

Mrs. Booth's recent increase of strength has been fully maintained, and her appetite is good, but the terrible disease has not been arrested in the least. Opiates have been tried, but totally failed to afford relief. The pain in her arm at times is excruciating in the extreme.

Rev. Egerton R. Young has finished his tour of Britain, and, with his wife, sails for America in the Servia on the 31st inst. He has given over 400 addresses, and spoken to upwards of 400,000 people about his work among the North American Indians. Last week he lectured at Wellington, Shropshire, staying with Dr. Cranage and family at the Old Hall.

Mrs. Bishop, the well-known traveller and author, reached Teheran, Persia, on February 25, after a terrible journey of forty-six days from Bagdad, thirty of which were spent in marching through snow. Mrs. Bishop was expected to start about the middle of April to visit the unexplored parts of the Bakhtiari Mountains.

Mr. Passmore Edwards, proprietor of The Echo, is adding to his public benefactions. He has erected a fountain in Victoria Park to the memory of the late John Bright, and expresses an intention to erect twelve other fountains in different parts of the country. He also purposes devoting £50,000 towards the establishment of a public library in the villages of England.

Rev. S. A. Selwyn has returned from his African tour. He looks much greyer than when he left England, but appears to be in excellent health. Both from Mr. Selwyn's statements of what was done, and from letters from Sierra Leone, we gather (says The Record) that the visit has been one of deep spiritual profit to the Church at Sierra Leone, Lagos, and Abeokuta.

Mr. Robert Rae, the veteran secretary of the National Temperance League, sailed on Thursday last by the Sardinian, on a holiday visit to relatives and friends in Canada and the United States. He expects to be present at the National Temperance Congress, to be held next month in New York, and during his journeyings will also take note of matters that will be of interest to temperance reformers.

GOSPEL MISSION IN SICILY.

THIS Mission was begun in 1879. Signor Varnier was formerly a Roman Catholic priest, who went out to India as a missionary, but while trying to convert the Protestants, he was himself awakened to see the errors of Rome, and was afterwards licensed by Bishop Cotton, of Calcutta, as a missionary preacher. Burning with a desire to carry the Gospel to his countrymen in Sicily, he returned home and began to preach Christ. He suffered much persecution in consequence, and his life was several times in danger. One of his converts was a priest named Scuderi, who soon after joined him as an evangelist. In 1879 Signor Varnier visited this country, and the striking address which he delivered at the Mildmay Missionary Conference held in the autumn of that year led to the formation of a small committee to help them with the needed funds.

Their labours in and around Messina, and in the country towns of Taormina and Mandanici, as centres for evangelisation, have been greatly blessed. The power of the Gospel has been seen in the conversion of large numbers, while multitudes have had their prejudices against the Bible and evangelical truth removed, and the evangelists are everywhere welcomed and recognised as the men who possess the truth and teach it. To the Civil Hospital in Messina they have free access, and many have been brought to the Lord; while, on their journeys, no opportunity is neglected of evangelising their fellow travellers in the railway carriages.

A medical mission has lately been begun by Dr. Scuderi, the son of the evangelist, and it has been greatly appreciated by the people, not merely for the healing of the body, but in bringing souls to Christ. Some of the priests are favourable to the work—a venerable arch-priest most friendly to them, but owing to his advanced age he is unable to face a public secession. By the latest accounts from Signor Varnier, the canon of a cathedral has been brought to the knowledge of the truth. He has courageously resigned his position in the Church of Rome, and is anxious to join the Mission, that he may preach the truth in his own town, where he has hitherto been preaching error.

A new line of railway on the northern coast of Sicily has lately been opened, giving them access to many important towns and villages, but they are unable to continue this work for want of the means to pay their travelling expenses. For the same reason they are maintaining their medical mission with great difficulty, and they are otherwise greatly crippled in attempting to extend their work for lack of funds.

The hon. secretary is Mr. D. Matheson, of 120, Queen's Gate, London, S.W. Miss Garnett, of Waddow Lodge, Clitheroe, will gladly receive contributions of goods towards a sale of work.

UNION-STREET, BOROUGH, S.E. — The Shaftesbury Memorial Mission-hall in this populous thoroughfare supplies a real need. Several agencies for the good of the working classes are being developed. The hon. secretary, Mr. C. F. Worters, 125, Sunderland-road, Forest Hill, S.E., informs us that a library is about to be formed. Several friends have sent parcels of books, and others will be gladly received. Classes for lads and men, with the Bible as text-book, are also being arranged.

HUDDERSFIELD Y.M.C.A.—This Association does a large amount of general evangelistic work. For the summer months it has arranged a series of special meetings, in addition to those held on Sunday evenings at the Market Cross. One part of the scheme is to bring from other places men who are adapted by training and experience to deal with men. The campaign opened with a visit from Dr. Edward Wright, of London, who addressed several meetings in connection with the Association.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. E. J. Parker, evangelist, has taken charge of the work at People's Hall, Millwall, for the months of June and July. A mission is to be held the first ten days in June by Mr. Parker and his sister.

Ireland.—Gospel missions have just been held in the parish church, Athy, by Rev. Mr. Robinson, of Cork; similar services have been held in Ennis, co. Clare, in which the bishop of Killaloe took part, and at Coolbanagher, Kildare. A number of the young people connected with Ormeau-road Methodist Church, Belfast, formed themselves some time ago into a mission band for the purpose of doing evangelistic work in neglected parts of the city, and as the result already over a hundred persons have professed conversion, and fifty-seven of these have united themselves in church fellowship.

Blaenavon.—A week of united prayer by the various churches was found to be a gracious preparation for the visit of Rev. F. C. Spurr, of Cardiff, who conducted a mission for the deepening of spiritual life from May 19 to 22. The meetings were held both in the afternoon and evening in the various chapels, and ministers and members did all they could by personal visitation to promote the prosperity of the same. The closing meeting in the Horeb Baptist Chapel will long be remembered, and the large assembly was moved by the Holy Spirit, which was followed with many cheering results. One happy outcome of these services has been the formation of the "Blaenavon Prayer Union," of which Pastor O. Tidman has been appointed secretary.

Faith Mission.—For the past seven weeks Pilgrims Morrison and Donaldson, of the Faith Mission, have been conducting Gospel meetings in the public hall at Bowling, Dumbartonshire. On Tuesday evening the mission was brought to a close by a very successful social meeting. The building was packed in every part with a lively yet attentive audience. Mr. Govan delivered a very helpful and encouraging address. Many who received blessing at the meetings made pithy remarks, while a great many of the young converts gave testimony to the saving and keeping power of the Lord Jesus Christ. The pilgrims started a mission in the U.P. halls in Dumbarton on Sabbath, May 25. It is the prayer of many in Bowling and district that the Lord will continue to bless their labours.

Mr. T. Shuldham Henry has been delivering a series of Gospel addresses at the Y.M.C.A., Westbourne-grove, on the last four Friday evenings. The hall has been crowded to overflowing, and many souls, it is believed, have been saved. There has been quite an awakening amongst the assistants in the houses of business. We have proved again the declaration of Christ: "I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto Me." Young men do not want things, they need a glorious and Divine person. Will your readers join us in praising God for past blessings, and pray that we may be kept from "things" multitudinous in the shape of pleasing and popular attractions and false doctrines of many kinds. Please pray that the Lord will abundantly bless his servant, Mr. Shuldham Henry. W. W.

Hawick.—Mr. W. D. Dunn has concluded an unusually successful mission here. During the fortnight afternoon Bible-readings were given daily, and evangelistic services held every evening. The hand of the Lord was very manifestly in the work, every night bringing fresh tokens of his power to save. The meetings on the Sabbath evenings, held in the large Corn Exchange, were felt by all to be especially blessed, and the large number of young converts gathered together at the closing meeting proved that the Holy Spirit had been working among the people. The blessing received by Christians was a marked feature of the work. Seeing great interest had been awakened, it was thought a pity that Mr. Dunn's absence should prevent the continuance of the meetings, and Mr. Nicholson will carry them on for another week.

DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.—The June number of London Society publishes an article, entitled "Helping the Trawlers," by Alexander Gordon, which contains, amongst other interesting matter, a statement of the reasons which have led the Council to decide upon the resumption of trawling on most of the vessels of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. John W. Festing, vicar of Christ Church, Albany street, N.W., has been appointed to the bishopric of St. Albans.

Bishop Tucker, writing from the Red Sea, reports a prosperous journey. He has been allowed to hold daily service on board, not without signs of blessing.

Rev. Carr J. Glyn, of Witchampton (says The Record), is not afraid to encourage Christian unity. He laid the other day one of the memorial-stones of a new Wesleyan chapel in his parish.

The Southport Evangelical Conference will be held on June 3 and 4. Papers are to be read by Rev. Evan Hopkins on "How to Raise the Spiritual Tone of our Congregations," and by Rev. H. James, of Livermere, on "School Hindrances to Spiritual Life."

Rev. W. T. McCormick, vicar of St. Matthew's, Brighton, is delivering on Sundays, in his church, a series of Protestant addresses. In an address on "Sacrifice," he said he utterly denied and rejected the doctrine that at the moment of consecration Christ united Himself, body, soul, and divinity, with the elements of bread and wine; he argued that there was a Real Presence, but that presence was spiritual.

A few days ago the Bishop of Liverpool formally opened a new mission-room in Kilshaw-street, West Derby-road, in connection with Emmanuel Church, Liverpool. The building was recently purchased from the Primitive Methodists at a cost of £600. Dr. Ryle delivered an interesting address, in the course of which he dwelt upon the importance of planting mission-rooms, where simple, elementary, and bright services could be held, in large parishes.

On Sunday week the Dean of Chichester (Dr. Pigou) preached an impressive sermon in Ripon Cathedral, in which he alluded to the influence of the Spirit of God in the work of the Church, a fact which was not always recognised. Very few people realised this, and that was one reason why there was so little power in the Church. The lament of the time was not so much a want of apparent life in the Church, such as zeal and activity, as a want of the power of the Spirit.

At the annual meeting of the London Diocesan Council for the Welfare of Young Men, the Bishop of London explained that the object of the Council was to lend a helping hand to institutes for young men and boys. There are in the diocese of London nearly 200,000 youths between the ages of fifteen and twenty-five, and out of the 508 parishes in the diocese, 300 have institutes where the welfare of the young men is looked after, physically, mentally, and morally.

Canon Lester, who recently resigned the rectory of South Hackney on his preferment to that of Lexden, near Colchester, has been appointed Warden of the Mission Preachers of the Church Parochial Mission Society. It is hoped that Canon Lester's large experience, both as Diocesan Missioner of the Diocese of Lichfield, and more recently as rector of an important East London parish, will be of great service in extending the usefulness of the work undertaken by this Society.

Canon Liddon preached to a crowded congregation at the University Church, Oxford, on Sunday afternoon. He preached from the Gospel for the day, and, after a brief account of the event commemorated by the Church on Whitsun Day, he said that the Holy Spirit still in these latter days, glorified Christ (a) in its effects on character, (b) in the Church, and (c) in the Holy Scriptures, the inspiration of which he defended with vigour. He did not make any specific reference to "Lux Mundi," but (says a daily contemporary) the idea in his mind was unmistakable when he protested against applying the canons available for profane authors to inspired writers, and in his reference to the Zeitgeist, or spirit of the age, which he said was as inconstant and changeable as the fashion of women's dress.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Special services of an interesting character were held in Cheshunt College Chapel on Friday afternoon and evening, the occasion being the ordination of three, and the dedication of five, missionaries for work abroad. Their destinations are Shanghai, Bangalore, Mongolia, and New Guinea. Revs. R. Wardlaw Thompson, Dr. Allon, Dr. Reynolds, and Dr. Macfarlane, late of New Guinea, took part in the proceedings.

At Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road (Rev. Newman Hall, pastor), on Sunday afternoon, the "Virginia Jubilee Singers" held a special service of song. The singers are from Hampton, Virginia, seven of them have completed their course at the famous Hampton Normal Institute, and have all taught in the coloured schools. The jubilee singers seek to obtain funds in order to found scholarships in connection with the college. Their conductor may be addressed care of Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton, 27, Paternoster-row, E.C.

Rev. G. Snashall, pastor of Victoria Park Tabernacle, E., writes:—"We have opened a reading-room for the special use of our young men's guild. Here they will have books, periodicals, and papers, which they supply themselves, and which they can read in their own room any evening. Essays and papers on various topics are given, and are often followed by interesting discussions. On Sunday mornings the members meet for prayer and Christian fellowship. We have also a junior and senior Christian band, which meets for a religious service weekly, and which is greatly enjoyed by the young people.

Revs. Andrew Mearns and F. Blanchford have been engaged for a week visiting all the churches and mission stations which receive help from the Congregational Church Aid and Home Missionary Society.

SALVATION ARMY.

The Army in South Australia is negotiating for the purchase of a large and suitable building for a training Home.

Commissioner Combs has visited Sydney and Bathurst (New South Wales); in one meeting twenty-three young men and women volunteered for the work.

Over three million meals have been supplied since the food shelters were opened; and the number of homeless persons sheltered is now nearly 800 nightly.

PRESBYTERIAN.

In the recent Synod meetings of the Presbyterian Church in New South Wales, prominence was given to the work of missions to the heathen.

The Presbyterian congregation at Wood Green, N. (Rev. Duncan Macrae, pastor), have decided to provide galleries in their church, additional accommodation being required.

Sir George Bruce, last week, laid the memorial stones of new churches at Doncaster and Cambridge. Services at Doncaster were commenced only two years ago. A novel feature is the Town Council's gift of £100 towards the building fund.

Rev. John McNeill had a wonderful audience on Sunday week in Exeter Hall. Mr. McNeill (says The Presbyterian Messenger) is evidently getting the ear of London; and he is doing it by the real and genuine preaching of the Gospel.

METHODIST.

Mr. Westerdale has succeeded by his persistent appeals in wiping out the debt on the Wesleyan Chapel, St. John's Wood.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes has met with a very cordial reception, and has addressed large assemblies, during his visit to Scotland.

The question of a connexional temperance secretary came before a number of the Wesleyan district meetings. The resolution in favour of such an appointment was carried in several important districts, but was rejected in others. A resolution strongly condemning the compensation proposals of the Government was carried by large majorities in almost all the districts.

This year the first Tuesday evening of the Methodist New Connexion Conference will be devoted to an open session, in which the spiritual work and condition of the churches will be the subject of free conversation. In previous years this question has been arranged for a late stage of Conference, and in the thick press of business at the close has been hurried over, or even passed by altogether.

BAPTIST.

The annual report of the Jamaica Baptist Union shows a membership in 161 churches of 33,703, a clear increase for the year of 1352, and an increase since 1849 of 15,222.

The Baptist Church at Neudorf, Russia, of which Rev. S. Lehmann is pastor, has 843 members. Last year sixty-seven were baptized, also 142 at the neighbouring church at Toporitscht. The Sunday-schools number 280 scholars, with twelve teachers.

At the meeting to celebrate the first anniversary of the opening of Dawes-road Chapel, Fulham, a statement was made by the pastor (Rev. A. Walker) showing that, since the opening of the chapel, twenty-three had been baptized, and a church had been formed, now numbering 100 members; and the Sunday-school, which considerably exceeded 300 children, had more than doubled during the same time.

Rev. E. Lauderdale, writing from Great Grimsby, ells of an encouraging work in his church:—"You will be pleased to hear the Lord is giving a gracious blessing in the congregation and senior classes. Eleven young men, of ages ranging from eighteen to twenty-two, have declared their attachment to Christ, and others are following. We are hoping to see the whole of our senior scholars dedicating their lives to the Master."

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

The Irish Baptist Union held its annual meeting last week in Ballymena, co. Antrim, and had a pleasant and profitable session.

The parochial library, Kilkee, co. Clare, has been enriched to the number of 2000 volumes by the bequest of the late Mrs. Captain Fitzgerald.

The anniversary sermons on behalf of the Church Missionary Society have just been preached in a large number of churches in the North of Ireland.

A hearty welcome has been accorded to Professor Cairns in Dublin, where he has been preaching and lecturing in the interests of the United Presbyterian Church.

Rev. Thos. Connellan, while not obtruding himself on public notice, is persistently working for the spread of truth, and is at present holding meetings in the Christian Union Buildings, Dublin.

The Foreign Mission Committee has secured a highly qualified medical missionary—Mr. P. L. Brander, M.B.—for work in China. The designation service was held in Rosemary-street Church, Belfast. Dr. Pierson, of Philadelphia, was present, and gave an address.

Some time ago a number of ladies formed themselves into a guild in Dublin for the purpose of distributing clothing amongst hospitals and charitable institutions, and so greatly has the undertaking prospered that the number of associates has risen from 224 in 1887 to 1782 in 1889.

A Christian Convention has been held in the Centenary Chapel, Dublin, by Rev. C. G. Moore, of the China Inland Mission, editor of Divine Life, and Rev. J. G. Mantle, of Birmingham. The three meetings each day were largely attended, and there was much spiritual blessing.

How Wesleyan Methodism is progressing in Ireland may be inferred from the fact that, at the last meeting of the General Committee of Management in Dublin, a few days ago, the building of four new chapels was authorised, and grants were made to nine others in course of erection.

The address recently delivered in Dublin on the question of Home Re-union, by Lord Plunket, Archbishop of Dublin, has been published by request, and cannot fail to do much towards toning down the spirit of jealousy and bitterness which too often exists between the various denominations.

The Home for Destitute Children, at Shamrock Lodge, Belfast, which is doing much good in rescuing children from lives of infamy and intemperance, has had a successful year, and has at present sixty-seven children under its care. £2000 has also been subscribed towards building permanent Homes.

The Women's Temperance Association and Christian Workers' Union, which has now a large and active membership in Belfast and the neighbourhood, and which supports a missionary and a colporteur, held its annual meeting in Belfast on Thursday evening, and was able to report much progress during the year.

An eight days' mission in Dromcliffe (Ennis) parish, conducted by Rev. J. J. Robinson, in connection with the Episcopal Church of Ireland Home Mission, has been greatly blessed; the numerous services having been well attended, and the interest having deepened day by day. The Bishop of Killaloe closed the mission, preaching morning and evening on the Sunday to crowded congregations.

The first annual report of the Belfast City Mission, of which Rev. R. C. Johnson is the principal, has been published, and is a most cheering record of twelve months' earnest work done for the Master. Thousands have heard the Gospel, and about three hundred have entered the inquiry-rooms, while many drunkards and profligates have come under the power of Divine grace, and have been reformed.

The sixty-first annual meeting of the Congregational Union of Ireland was held last week in Carrickfergus. Mr. Chas. Sheldon, M.A., D.Lit., presiding. There was a full attendance of delegates, including Revs. Henry Simon, of London, and John Wemyss, M.A., of Scotland. Rev. Jas. Cregan, of Belfast, was cordially appointed Chairman of the Union for 1891, which is to meet at Coleraine, and resolutions in favour of Sunday Closing and against Compensation to publicans were adopted.

The annual meeting of the southern branch of the mission to the adult deaf and dumb has just been held in Cork, the Bishop of Cork, Dr. Gregg, presiding. According to the last census, there were 1130 deaf mutes in Ireland, and the chairman thought that instead of three societies, as at present, one society should do for the whole of Ireland, and that that was a work in which the different Protestant denominations might combine without rivalry, and without raising in the minds of mutes the question of the denomination to which they belong.

NOTE FROM SCOTLAND.

Preaching in St. Brycedale Free Church, Kirkcaldy, on the ritual and reality of religion, Rev. W. J. Macdonald said that when men were conscious of the decay of religious feeling and genuine worship, they often kept up the pretence after the reality was gone. Nay, often the less they had of the reality the more they elaborated the pretence. They trick out their dying worship with the strictest observances, and sometimes the less religion men had the more churches they built.

NOTES FROM WALES.

Last week Rev. Charles Spurgeon preached and lectured at Merthyr Tydfil.

Swansea has a shelter for fallen women; its supporters held their third annual meeting on Thursday week. The subscriptions towards the shelter were over £123.

The General Assembly of Welsh Calvinistic Methodists was held at Liverpool throughout last week. It represented 134,239 communicants, an increase upon last year of 1905.

On Tuesday and Wednesday, last week, the annual meetings of the Pontypool College were held. It was decided to establish a Home Missionary Society in connection with the College.

In 1790 there were only forty-six places of worship in Wales in connection with the Welsh Baptists. The number given in the record at the close of 1889 is 739, with a membership of over 91,000.

On Sunday nineteen persons were baptized by immersion in the Garw Valley river by Rev. W. Griffiths, pastor of Paran, Blackmill, in the presence of a very large concourse. The ceremony took place near the Cwmpandy Mill.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Rev. E. H. Steventon, formerly for many years vicar of All Saints', Paddington.—Rev. H. Erskine Fraser, senior pastor of Langside-road U.P. Church, Glasgow.—Mr. Joseph White, senior deacon of the Baptist Church, St. Anne's.—Rev. James Cowie, Free Church minister, of Denny.—Rev. D. A. MacGregor, president of the Baptist College, Toronto.—Rev. G. R. Davidson, D.D., senior pastor of Lady Glenorchy's Free Church, Edinburgh.—Rev. Ed. W. Burton, incumbent of Rathmichael, co. Dublin, and a most humble and devoted Christian.—Mr. Hugh McCaldin, for nearly twenty-five years an elder in the Presbyterian congregation of Newbliss.—Rev. G. B. Williams, Congregational, Ynyshir, Glamorganshire.—Canon Williams, Llanelly, Carmarthenshire.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope many of our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes, which of course are entirely different from these.

SUNDAY, JUNE 1.—Psalm XXIII.

A SABBATH restfulness breathes through this Psalm. It is the favourite of the children, but the oldest and holiest must confess that it touches an experience which lies still in front of them. There is no strife, no fear, no denunciation of the wicked, no effort at self-vindication; the waters, which fretted and chafed in their earlier course, flow in placid repose through the rich pasture lands, and beneath the arms of the spreading trees; and if for a moment there is the suggestion of the dark valley of death-shadow, it is instantly dismissed by the thought that He will be there, whose face makes light in the darkest night.

Jehovah is represented successively as the true Shepherd and Guide and Host of his people. And we are taught to think much less of ourselves in our relations with Him, and more of Him as being responsible for us. After all, it is not so much a question of what we are to Jesus, as of what He is to us. The flock does not keep the Shepherd, but the Shepherd the flock. Look away from self, and trust Him to keep and lead and feed. All that we should care for, is not knowingly to resist any of his gracious promptings and teachings.

The Psalm was probably written when the sun of David's life was westering. The experience of age is grafted on the memories of youth.

1. The thought of God as the Shepherd of his saints is familiar to Scripture students from Gen. xlviii. 15 to Rev. vii. 17, especially John x. Let God see to your wants. There is nothing you really need for which you may not count on Him.

2. "Pastures of tender grass and waters of rest."

3. When the soul has spent itself unduly, He recruits it. When diseased, He heals it. When penitent, He puts it back whence it fell. It is only as we look back on life that we see how absolutely right were paths that seemed most wrong. But his name and character are implicated in doing the best for us.

4. This is not death only, but any dark ravine through which we have to pass. But God seems nearest then. It is no longer He, but thou. Club to depend; crook to chasten and guide.

5. Every day is that table spread with food for body and spirit, but we need the purged eye to see, and the believing hand to appropriate. And we must be prepared to break through a ring of enemies to feed, and to get the daily anointing of the Holy Spirit (1 John ii. 27).

6. God's house is his Presence, Himself. There let us live. And his twin-angels shall follow us. We must not look behind, dreading the pursuit of the evil past. The rear is well protected. Watch-dogs behind, the Shepherd before.

MONDAY, JUNE 2.—Psalm XXIV.

Psalm xxii. of the Cross; xxiii. of the Crook; xxiv. of the Crown. This great choral hymn was evidently composed to celebrate the removal of the Ark from the house of Obed-edom to Mount Zion (2 Sam. vi.). It must have been a great procession by which it was conducted, with music and song, to its resting-place (1 Chron. xv. 2).

It was without doubt composed for a choir. The first two verses might have been sung by the entire festal crowd; the third by a single voice; fourth and fifth by the choirs; and the sixth by all. What a sublime challenge on the part of the approaching host is contained in 7, answered by a company already within the gates, 8; to which again the vast shout of the multitudes gives reply. Surely this ode was rightly employed when used by Handel to represent the return of the ascending Saviour to his home. It never reached its perfect accomplishment till the Victor over hell and the grave went to his home.

1, 2. Chosen by Albert the Good to be placed over the Royal Exchange. The earth and men are God's by right of creation and redemption. The devil is a usurper, and shall be thrust out.

3, 4. The Almighty is also the All-Holy. We are his, but we cannot approach Him, unless we observe certain conditions, which He will secure in us by the power of the Holy Spirit, if we are only willing that He should.

5. Ah, what a blessing is this (Gen. xv. 6; xlix. 25).

6. We must evidently insert the name of God before Jacob, as the margin suggests.

7. The doors are everlasting, grey with hoar antiquity, and destined to stand for ever.

This Psalm is accomplished in us when Jesus enters our hearts as our King to reign, and it will have its full realisation when the earth and its populations welcome Him as its Lord.

TUESDAY, JUNE 3.—Psalm XXV.

An acrostic or alphabetical Psalm. The verses begin with the letters of the Hebrew alphabet; probably to aid the memory; so also xxxiv., xxxvii., cxi., cxii., cxix., cxlv. It contains many similar expressions, which might be connected by slight Bible markings. Such are wait (3, 5, 21); ashamed (2, 3, 20); teach (4, 5, 8, 9, 12); sin and forgiveness (7, 8, 11).

1. Lift your soul, that its darkness may be penetrated by his light, its maladies healed by his saving health.

4, 5. If you utter this prayer in all sincerity, wait for the answer; be sure that it will come, and if you are not yet told what to do, wait till you know certainly. "Wait all the day."

8, 9. God's holiness is no barrier, but an encouragement to sinners (compare Luke xv. 1, and 1 John i. 9). Not the meek only, but sinners may claim his teaching. Do not be careful as to your lessons, but as to acquiring them. God will set them, we must get them by heart.

11. How much the Old Testament writers count on God's Name. It is his character, his troth, Himself (Josh. vii. 9; Isa. xliii. 25; Ezek. xxxvi. 22, 32).

13. "Dwell" is literally pass the night. In the darkest, saddest hour we may find a home in the goodness of God.

14. What secrets God has to tell his own (Gen. xviii. 17; John xv. 15; 1 Cor. ii. 9, 10).

15. Don't look down at your feet, but up to his face.

20. When we are unable to keep ourselves for God, let us trust Him to keep us for Himself. He is able to do this, and it is easiest to transfer the entire responsibility to Him (2 Tim. i. 12). We cannot be ashamed (Isa. xlv. 17; xlix. 23; l. 7).

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 4.—Psalm XXVI.

In some respects this Psalm is similar to the previous one, only, instead of entreaties for forgiveness, there are protestations of innocence. It may have been composed during Absalom's rebellion, and is a strenuous protest against the dissembling and hypocrisy on which it had been built. In these avowals of conscious rectitude, we must ever bear in mind that David did not mean to avow absolute sinlessness, but his innocence of those specific charges with which he had been assailed.

1. If therefore be omitted, we get the sense that he had not slidden from his attitude of faith. Let us trust God to keep us trusting.

2. These words are all borrowed from the smelting furnace, and point to the purity which it gives. If the Baptism of Fire avail not, we must pass through the Fires of Purification (Num. xxxi. 23; Mal. iii. 1-3).

3. "I have walked to and fro in thy truth" (Zech. x. 12).

4. Human society without God is an empty bubble, and cannot satisfy.

6, 7. We must use the laver, if we would minister at the altar. It is more imprtant to be clean than clever. We must wash before we publish and tell.

8. Hatred of evil men (5) is one side of the coin; love to God's house the other. Seek either, and the other will be yours.

11. Can we also assert our integrity—that is, our whole-heartedness? Is our eye single, our heart open toward God, our motives pure? If so, though we still need redemption and grace, yet we are on an even table-land, in which there is no pitfall or cause of stumbling, and from which the glad song of praise shall ascend as sweet incense to God.

THURSDAY, JUNE 5.—Psalm XXVII.

This Psalm probably dates from the time when the exiled king, surrounded by unscrupulous foes, looked from the regions beyond the Jordan to the beloved city, where the ark of God abode. It would almost seem as if his one thought was, not to resume his throne, but to revisit the sanctuary of God. "One thing have I desired." The "one thing" people are irresistible (Phil. iii. 13).

I. ASSURANCE (1-6).—How many-sided is God. He is light, salvation, and strength. The trusting soul lives behind a triple door. We may shrink from uttering the desire to dwell evermore in Jehovah's house. And yet there is a sense in which even busy people can do this, by the grace of the Holy Spirit. God's presence is God's house. Abide in Him. You are in Him unless you consciously go out. How beautiful God's world is! How much more beautiful Himself! If you behold that beauty it will be transferred to your own face, though you wist it not (Ps. xc. 17, cx. 3). Temple (4) is here applied to the tent which David erected on Mount Zion (2 Sam. vi. 17). The believer who hides in God is as safe as the young Josiah (2 Chron. xxii. 12).

II. SUPPLICATION (7-14).—The triumphant trust of the Psalm suddenly changes to a tone of sadness, as if a cloud had for a moment passed over the soul. Did he for a moment look from his Saviour to the wind and waves? How true to life are these changing strains! What a comfort to know that our experiences do not alter our standing! Sometimes God seems to hide his face, only to lead the soul to a pitch of trust which otherwise it had never dared to adopt (Mark vii. 28). Here is the heart-echo. God's words come back to Him as a prayer. The dearest may forsake, but the Lord gathers (marg. of Isa. xl. 11).

11. Again we have the even path of xxvi. 12.

12. We may apply this to the wicked spirits of the heavenly places who assail us, if we have no earthly foes who hate us for the truth's sake. It is an unlikely thing, however, that we should escape hatred, if we are living very near to Christ (John xv. 19, 20).

13. Look up and look on.

14. It is so much easier to act, or lie down and do, or run to friends, than to wait. But this is the true posture. He that waits for God shall not be long without the God for whom He waits.

How delightful is the me and my of this exquisite Psalm! The pronoun of personal appropriation.

FRIDAY, JUNE 6.—Psalm XXVIII.

This Psalm also probably belongs to the time of Absalom's rebellion. Verses 2 and 3 closely resemble Ps. xxvi. 8, 9.

1, 2. What a thought is suggested in the silences of God. Sometimes He is silent because He loves (Zeph. iii. 17). Sometimes to test our faith and stir up our zeal (Matt. xv. 23). Sometimes because He has already spoken and we have not heeded his words (Matt. xxvi. 62). But if a period of silence befall us, let us not have resort to any unhallowed source of help (1 Sam. xxviii. 6, 7); let us rather pray and wait and lift up our hands for help towards God's oracle (R.V.).

3, 4, 5. The world is so made that wickedness is doomed to failure, and the righteous man is glad when God's righteous government of the world is thus approved. We must look at the punishment of wrong-doing, not only from man's standpoint, but from God's.

6, 7. The answer has already begun to steal into his soul. Some herald ray has announced the coming dawn. Some stray flowers of hope piercing the sod tell of coming spring. The quick ear can tell the pibroch of the Highlanders, though foes engirdle the beleaguered city. "I am helped."

8, 9. Note the contrast between my strength (ver. 7) and their strength. Trust is contagious as well as panic. What heart, which has experienced God's help, does not long that all may know the blessed help and salvation of God. Feed them (lxxxi). Bear them (Isa. lxiii. 9; xl. 11).

It is thus that prayer clears itself in its utterance, and changes its note to praise, and, as a rising lark, breaks into song as it soars.

SATURDAY, JUNE 7.—Psalm XXIX.

A perfect specimen of Hebrew poetry, giving a magnificent description of a thunderstorm, marching from north to south of Palestine.

PRELUDE (1, 2).—Addressed to the firstborn sons of light, who stand above the tumult of earth and sky. Heaven is viewed as a temple, the priests of which are angels, clad in holy vestments (2 Chron. xx. 21; Ps. cx. 3).

THE DESCRIPTION OF THE STORM (3-9).—We hear first the low, distant muttering of the thunder. The many waters may refer to the Mediterranean, from which the storm arose (3). Coming nearer, the tempest breaks on Lebanon and Sirion, the Sidonian name for Hermon, the cedars of which sway to and fro before the wild fury of the storm. And each thunder peal is accompanied by the zig-zag forked lightning (4-7). The storm passes southwards to the desert of Kadesh, and to the rock-hewn cities of Petra. The very beasts are stricken with terror, and the forests are stripped of their leafy dress, so that their ground and floor is discovered. And in the Temple the gathered worshippers respond to the challenge of two, and say, "Glory." "Every whit of it uttereth glory" (marg.). Oh that every whit of the inner temple of our hearts, and of the spiritual temple of the Church, each nail and thread and splint, might utter that same cry "Glory to God in the Highest." The voice of the Lord is mentioned seven times, reminding of the seven thunders of Rev. x. 3.

THE CONCLUSION (10, 11).—God's supremacy is the subject of these closing words. He sits upon the clouds as a throne or chariot. He is King of Nature and Grace. He is in the strength of the storm, and in the halcyon peace that breaks out like a smile, when the storm has passed, and He can give both to his people. It has been truly said the Psalm begins with Gloria in excelsis, and ends with Pax in terris. Glory to God implies peace on earth.

International S.S. Lessons.

Sunday Afternoon, June 8.

TEACHING TO PRAY.—Luke xi. 1-13.

GOLDEN TEXT: Luke xi. 9.

I.—INTRODUCTION.

"AS HE WAS PRAYING IN A CERTAIN PLACE, WHEN HE CEASED."—Another illustration of our Lord's habit of prayer. "He was not satisfied with that constant direction of soul towards his Father to which the meaning of the command, 'Pray without ceasing,' is often reduced. There were in his life special times and positive acts of prayer."—Godet.

"LORD, TEACH US TO PRAY."—How little importance Jesus attached to even the highest form of prayer! He gives this perfect form only when asked, and not till near the close of his ministry! Moreover, it is given as a model, and not as a form, as the phrase, "After this manner, therefore, pray ye" (Matt. vi. 9), plainly indicates. When the fulness of the Spirit came upon them, the disciples prayed in independence of the form of this prayer, but in perfect conformity to its spirit—e.g., Acts iv. 24-30.

II.—THE MODEL PRAYER.

This should have been called "The Disciples' Prayer" (we have the Lord's Prayer in John xvii.); for, while it was given to the disciples, as such (ver. 1), its tone and substance is so pure and heavenly that none but true disciples could possibly use it. Its first and chief characteristic is the filial spirit, and the fraternal spirit its second. It assumes throughout a child-heart. (1) At peace with God, being full of the spirit of adoption, and (2) full of loving submission to the Father, and pure enthusiasm for the Father's name, kingdom, and will. Then out of the filial grows the fraternal. When the heart has learnt to spell "Father," it proceeds at once to learn the word "Brother." Not content with "Father," the disciple says, "Our Father," and when asking for personal mercies (vv. 3, 4), he includes his brother, using the plural ("us," "our") throughout. "Having forgotten himself, and become lost in God, the Christian comes back to himself; but, as it is in God that he finds himself again, he does not find himself alone. He contemplates himself as a member of God's family, and says henceforth We, and not I. The Lord's Prayer is thus nothing else than the summary of the law put into practice; and this summary, so realised in the secret of the heart, will naturally pass thence into the entire life."—Godet.

"WHEN YE PRAY, SAY."—This "does not mean that the formula was to be slavishly repeated on every occasion of prayer; it was the type which was to give its impression to every Christian prayer, but in a free, varied, and spontaneous manner."—Godet. "FATHER" expresses (1) confidence, and (2) submission. This filial relationship rests on the work of Christ for us in redeeming us unto God by his blood (Rev. v. 9), and our union to Him by faith, or the work of the Spirit in us (John i. 12, 13, and Gal. iii. 26). "GIVE US DAY BY DAY OUR DAILY BREAD." Give, implying absolute dependence upon the Father providing "us"—the inclusive plural of brotherly love. "Day by day," so the manna fell. The Father cares for our morrow, therefore we pray "day by day." "Bread," not luxury. This is the prayer of self-conquering contentment. "FOR WE ALSO FORGIVE." "All evil as we are, we yet ourselves use the right of grace which belongs to us; how much more will not Thou, Father, who art goodness itself, use the right toward us!"—Godet.

III.—THE SURE EFFICACY OF PRAYER.

(1) Illustrated by parable (vv. 5-8).—This parable is given by Luke only. Its main burden is not, as is often taught, the duty of importunity; but the absolute certainty of success, if only we ask in the right way for what we really need. Its argument is: If a selfish, false friend can be overcome by force of shameless importunity, how much more may we get good things from God, when his delay in giving is ever on our account only, and never from reluctance to give. It is impossible to conceive how the efficacy of prayer could be more forcibly illustrated. Teachers should take great pains to realise the scene: the sudden arrival; consternation of host in view of empty cupboards; remembers his neighbour, and goes to him forthwith; the first knock, and drowsy response; repetition, followed by firm denial; more knocking and asking, and more determined refusals; anger of man within, while he without is wholly set on getting his bread; then a long trial of will—the man within settling down into dogged silence, while his neighbour without plies him, shamelessly, with knocks and requests; and the perfect triumph of the petitioner, who would take no denial. Importunity; literally, "shamelessness"; a striking word, used nowhere else in New Testament. For illustrations see story of Abram interceding for Sodom (Gen xviii. 23-33), and the Syro-Phœnician woman (Matt. xv. 22-28).

(2) Based on Law (2, 9, 10).—That true prayer must be answered "is a great law of our Father's spiritual kingdom; a clause cut of the eternal covenant which cannot be changed."—Alford.

(3) Shown to be a necessary outcome of the fatherly goodness of God (vv. 11, 13).—So the lesson, which began with "Our Father," ends with a glorious unveiling of the Father's character. To know God, and to rest in what He is, is the life of prayer, just as to know God is the life of all pure goodness whether in thought or action (John xvii. 3).

LESSONS.

(1) Observe the perfectly simple child-life toward God, and brother-life toward fellow-disciples, assumed in the disciples' prayer; and how necessary these are to true Christianity.

(2) Make it very clear that we become God's children, and "are born of God," not by any effort of ours, not by waiting for the Holy Spirit to make us better, but by "receiving" Jesus, by "believing on his name (John i. 12, 13).

(3) Our hope of living the disciples' prayer rests on the fact that Jesus, in the Holy Spirit, abides ever in the hearts of his people. In proportion as they know this, and trust Him fully, He gives and keeps alive in them the child-heart. How important to know whom we have within, and to trust Him wholly.

(4) It is the Spirit's office to reveal Jesus to us. If then we have received Him, let us pray the Father (v. 13) for the fulness of the Spirit, that we may know the fulness of Jesus; and we may be sure that if we ask this as the man asked for bread, we shall soon be full of God's joy and peace.

MR. AND MRS. GEORGE PEARSE have left North Africa. It is ten years since they first went to Algiers to do pioneering work, and as a result of their solicitude many have been led to undertake Christian work in that neglected French Colony, as well as in other parts of North Africa. Mr. and Mrs. Pearse's future movements are uncertain, but it is probable they may settle in Paris, where they are at present staying. Mr. Pearse writes:—"I expect we may be more in the way of getting men and means for the work of God here than there."

BERLIN CHRISTIAN MISSION.—Mr. Fritz Schnaff, 33, Britzerstrasse, Berlin, S., writes expressing gratitude for the sympathy and material help he received last April, when on a visit in England, in pleading the cause and needs of Germany and of this Mission. Since then the attendance at the meetings has been steadily on the increase, so that on some week-nights, notwithstanding the hot weather, there is quite a full house. A good many professed conversions have taken place, and believers have been sanctified. A few weeks ago a second station was opened in one of the suburbs of Berlin, at Friedrichsberg, where there had already been signs of the working of the Holy Spirit. Some papers call them English pietists. Meetings are held in the hall, Alte Jakobstrasse 91, every night at eight o'clock, and any English visitors to Berlin are invited to the meetings. Any communications in regard to the Berlin Christian Mission may be sent to Mrs. Pennell, 5, Gordon-street, Gordon-square, London, W.C.

The Temperance Cause.

In Sheffield last year the number of licenses was seventy-eight lower than in 1879.

A majority of the Wesleyan districts have recommended the appointment of a connexional temperance secretary.

In the five cities and towns in Ireland exempted from the Sunday Closing Act, plebiscites have given large majorities in favour of inclusion.

At the annual meeting of the Metropolitan and National Nursing Association, the value of total abstinence to nurses, as an example and personally, was urged with great force.

It is reported that a Temperance Society, the first originated in Russia, has been inaugurated in St. Petersburg, and that the movement has received high official sanction and patronage.

In connection with the United Presbyterian Synod (Scotland) there are now 326 total abstaining ministers in charge of churches, sixteen without charge, and twenty-seven ministers and missionaries abroad—a total increase of twenty. Ninety of the ninety-one students in residence at the Hall are [illegible].

The folly of the Publican Endowment scheme is shown by the fact that in the Rhondda Valley, at Ferndale, a woman who kept a public-house recently retired. In seven years she had made £12,000. A grocer with a beer and spirit licence, in the same valley, says he will eat his hat if he does not make £2000 a year.

The King of Samoa has just issued the following proclamation:—"No spirituous, vinous, or fermented liquors or intoxicating drinks whatever shall be sold, given, or offered to be bought or bartered by any native Samoan or Pacific Islander resident in Samoa to be taken as a beverage." Heavy penalties are the result of a breach of this law.

"THE CHRISTIAN" BIBLE READINGS.

JUST READY

BEING NOTES AND READINGS ON THE FIVE BOOKS OF MOSES.

Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, Deuteronomy.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

THE NOTES AND READINGS contained in this volume originally appeared in the pages of THE CHRISTIAN week by week. The interest taken in them at the time of their issue has led to re-publication in their present form.

It is believed that these NOTES and READINGS will be found of service to Sabbath School Teachers, and to Bible Students: Ministers and Evangelists will also be able to gather help from their pages.

It will be observed that the Chapters have been considerably extended since their appearance in THE CHRISTIAN; and some new features have been added.

It should be understood that the present work is intended to be a HELP for Bible Students. It is not, therefore, prepared with a view to being read through like an ordinary volume. But as chapter after chapter of the Pentateuch is perused, it is hoped that Bible Readers will have this book open at their side for reference. In this way the use and value of the work will be most fully realised.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s. 6d.

London: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.

THE NEW

HOME OF REST,

At LANCING, Near WORTHING.

A DEDICATORY MEETING, to supplicate the Divine blessing upon the above New Seaside Home, together with the Gospel Room adjoining, under the care of the North-East London Gospel Mission, will (D.V.) be held at the Home, on FRIDAY, JUNE 6, at 3 p.m. Tea at close.

Among the friends who have kindly promised (D.V.) to be present are Rev. J. B. FIGGIS (Brighton); G. E. MORGAN, Esq. (of THE CHRISTIAN); C. M. SAWELL, Esq. (of the City Mission), and others. The "Home" will be open to the inspection of visitors both before and after the meeting.

CONTRIBUTIONS for completing the furnishing, and for maintenance, are earnestly solicited.

Director: WILLIAM CHORLEY, 2, Marquess-grove, Canonbury, London, N.

Treasurer: F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.

A convenient train leaves Victoria 11.40, London Bridge 12 noon, for Lancing; returning to London by 8.30.

DRIFT CHILDREN'S MISSION.

THERE ARE THOUSANDS OF POOR AND NEGLECTED CHILDREN IN EAST LONDON who are DRIFTING down to RUIN without a friend or helper. They are OUTSIDE our Sunday and Ragged Schools, and many of them are seldom found in our Board Schools. They run wild week-days and Sundays, and are left to perish by cold worldlings and indifferent Christians.

UNSECTARIAN in its operations, and Christlike in its aims, the "DRIFT CHILDREN'S MISSION" sets itself to rescue and save the souls and bodies of these unfortunate and outcast children. Our devoted Founder and Missionary, Mr. C. L. BOYER, has PAID OVER 25,000 VISITS to the homes of these children during the past winter, with the result that more than 1200 have been regularly gathered week by week into school-rooms, halls, and churches, for RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION AND GOSPEL TEACHING.

1000 ROBIN DINNERS and many Free Meals have been distributed. 2200 CHILDREN under eight years of age were made happy at Christmas time with a CHRISTMAS TREE entertainment.

100 little sufferers belong to the "YOUNG CRIPPLES' BAND," amongst whom we have a TOY AND GAME EXCHANGE and LENDING LIBRARY in full operation.

During the summer we hope to march hundreds into the parks for recreation, and many into the OPEN COUNTRY FOR FRESH AIR AND CHANGE, for want of which many children in the East-end JUST PINE AWAY AND DIE.

We have no funds; but we confidently appeal to the LORD'S STEWARDS, "IN HIS NAME," to help us to RESCUE THESE PERISHING LITTLE ONES for whom Christ died.

The Committee consists of twelve gentlemen: the Rev. Dr. TYLER, Whitechapel; Mr. JOHN KIRK, Secretary Ragged School Union; and Mr. GEORGE HOLLAND, George-yard Mission, being of the number.

CONTRIBUTIONS of Clothing, Boots, Toys, Books, &c., should be sent, carriage paid, to the President of the Mission, Mr. SIMEON CLAYTON, 218, Bow-common-lane, E.; and all money contributions may be sent to Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings; Mr. F. T. WATT, Treasurer, Summerhill-road, Dartford; or to the Secretary,

T. J. HAZZARD 14, LAWRENCE ROAD. BOW. E.

FARMHOUSE APARTMENTS.

Dear Sir,—Owing to my name and Mission having become known to a large circle of your readers, I am frequently applied to by Christian friends in London and other large towns to direct them to farmhouse apartments, and during the last few years it has been my privilege to do this little service for nearly a hundred people, and have made many pleasant, and some lasting, friendships in this way.

At the present time many farms are without tenants, and, to keep the house from falling into dilapidation, they may be had at a low rental. Several such places coming before me during the last week or so plainly seem to offer to my Mission work an advantage of which I would like much to avail myself.

I find the presence of my summer visitors amongst our village folk very helpful to and much appreciated by them. It is also found to be such congenial work as to prove both a rest and a change, and they usually return to town to work with fresh zeal and courage.

Working as I and my colleagues have to do, so much alone through all the cheerless winter, we feel the need of Christian fellowship in our service, and it is a pleasant anticipation as we look to see our friends again at this season of the year.

God willing, I am hoping to take one or more of these farmhouses, to be used as mission homes where I can receive Christian friends and workers upon easy terms. It will, I feel sure, prove helpful in various ways. In nearly every house there are articles of furniture for which no use can be found. May I plead for just these odds and ends? They will help me to carry out my project, and save money for other good work. Things that may be considered quite useless may prove valuable in an empty house, and I will gladly pay carriage by rail. Will friends kindly remember at any future time that there will always be an open door here for such things? A mission house is needed in nearly every village we go to, and it will save us much that we are now obliged to spend, and enable us to welcome other workers.—I remain, dear Sir, your faithful servant in Christ,

George D. Shipley.

DONATIONS
RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT TO SATURDAY, MAY 24, 1890.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

PROSPECTUS.

THIS Company is formed for the purpose of acquiring, working, and developing the Penrikyber Navigation Colliery, situate in the Aberdare Valley, in the County of Glamorgan, together with the business carried on in connection therewith, and also all plant, machinery, locomotive engines, as well as the Leasehold Mines and Messuages and Freehold Cottages held therewith, as a going concern.

The Penrikyber property is situated in the Aberdare Valley, adjoining that of Messrs. Nixon & Company, which firm has been working the celebrated Four-feet Seam for the last twenty years. The seams at the Penrikyber Colliery are the same as those worked at Nixon's Navigation Colliery, and the coal is known as being of the highest quality of steam coal in South Wales.

The taking comprises the coal and other minerals underlying a total area of about 1,650 acres, the whole of which is held under leases for long, unexpired terms, and at favourable rents and royalties.

The pits are 16½ feet in diameter, securely walled, and are provided with well-appointed winding, hauling, pumping, and air-compressing machinery of such capacity as to be fully equal to an output of 1,500 to 1,600 tons per day.

The Pits are sunk to the Four-feet Seam (which is struck at a depth of about 525 yards), one of which is the downcast, and used for winding coal, and the other serves as an upcast, and is ventilated by a 45-feet Waddle Fan.

The average output during the eight years ending December 31, 1889, was 327,209 tons per annum. The minimum annual output at the commencement of the period, before the workings were properly developed, was 260,140 tons, while the maximum output when in full working order has reached 326,835 tons.

It will be seen, by the annexed Report of Mr. Galloway, that there is, in his opinion, sufficient unworked coal to maintain at regular output at the same rate of working for a period of at least 70 years.

It may also be mentioned that the No. 3 Rhondda Seam of bituminous Coal has been proved in the pits, and is comprised in the Vendors' leases for about 1,100 acres of the property. The working of this seam, either through the present pits or by separate winnings, would be a valuable adjunct to the concern.

The Pits have been equipped with plant and machinery of the most modern type, and the workings are opened out on such lines as to yield a daily output on a large scale. No expense has been spared in laying out the Colliery on the most approved principles of mining, both in regard to safety as well as economy in working, the development of the concern having always been under the direction of some of the most prominent mining experts in the South Wales Coal Field; while most of the machinery has been provided by the leading engineering firms, namely:—Messrs. Galloway & Sons, of Manchester; Harvey & Co., of Hayle; Walker Bros., of Wigan; Nevill Brothers, and J. R. Waddle, of Llanelly. The surface-works comprise substantial and well appointed fitting, carpenter and other workshops, store and lamp room, and a suitable suite of offices, the whole surface, as well as the bottom of the pits, being lighted by electricity.

There are also 297 Freehold Workmen's Cottages, subject to Fee-Farm rents, as well as long leasehold residences for Manager and Secretary, built at a total cost of about £35,000. The Cottages are subject to Mortgages, upon which about £25,000 remains to be repaid, as to £1,500 thereof over a period of about three years, and as to the remainder over a period of about 19 years. The Company will undertake these repayments, and will indemnify the Vendors against all liability in respect thereof. It is, however, estimated that the profits upon the rentals over the periods named will be more than sufficient to discharge these Mortgages.

In addition to the Colliery and its plant, messuages, &c., as above enumerated, the Goodwill of the business is included in the sale. It is a well-known fact that the Penrikyber Navigation Coal has already acquired, and is maintaining for itself a first position among Welsh steam coals, and commands the very highest prices obtainable in the steam coal markets.

The Colliery is connected with the Taff Vale Railway by commodious sidings, upon which there are suitable screens, weighhouses, &c., &c, and is in direct communication with the Docks at Cardiff, Barry, Penarth, and Newport.

The pits were sunk to the coal in the year 1879, and the Colliery was fairly in operation at the commencement of 1882, and, notwithstanding the depression which has existed from then until 1889—a depression almost unprecedented in the history of the coal trade—a constant profit has been made, as will be seen from the certificate given by Mr. Herbert J. Goss, Chartered Accountant, of Swansea and Cardiff. It will be observed that, notwithstanding this depression, and the lower output in the early years of this period, the profits were sufficient to yield an average of nearly £6 per cent. per annum on the whole of the Preference and Ordinary Share Capital now intended to be raised.

Looking at present prices and contracts already effected, it is confidently expected that the profits for the current year will largely exceed those of any previous year, and, having regard to the general outlook of the trade, there is every reason to anticipate that the future of steam coal will show a very decided improvement on the past.

Messrs. Cory, Brothers & Co., Limited, of Cardiff and London, will continue to act as Agents for the sale of the Coal as heretofore, under the Agreement of the 13th November, 1886, mentioned below.

The Vendors, who are the Promoters, have fixed the price to be paid for the above property at £350,000, payable as to £175,000 in cash, £100,000 in 10,000 fully-paid Preference Shares, and £75,000 in 7,500 fully-paid Ordinary Shares in the Capital of the Company.

The Vendors will hand over the business as a going concern as from the 1st day of January, 1890, with all profits subsequently accruing; they will also hand over all stocks, book debts, redeemable dead rents, and cash, after withdrawing their profits made prior to that date; and the new Company will discharge all current liabilities. These assets will, it is estimated, largely exceed the said liabilities, but, should any deficiency from any cause arise, the Vendors will make good the same.

The Vendors will pay all the costs and expenses incidental to the formation of the Company, and all preliminary expenses up to and including its incorporation.

The following Agreements have been entered into:—

1. An Agreement, dated the 13th day of November, 1886, between Thomas Cory, Frank Ash Yeo, John Glasbrook, Thomas Glasbrook, John Cory, Richard Cory, Hugh MacKay Matheson and Wm. Allan Coats, of the one part, and John Cory and Richard Cory, of the other part.
2. An Agreement, dated the 23rd day of May, 1890, between William Allan Coates, of the one part, and Hugh MacKay Matheson, John Cory, Richard Cory, Thomas Cory, John Glasbrook, Thomas Glasbrook, Frank Cory Yeo and Mary Dowson Yeo, of the other part, for the purchase by the Vendors of an eighth share in the property now being sold to the Company.
3. An Agreement, dated the 23rd day of May, 1890, between Frank Cory Yeo, Mary Dowson Yeo and John Viriamu Jones, of the one part, and Hugh MacKay Matheson, John Cory and Richard Cory, Thomas Cory, Thomas Glasbrook and John Glasbrook, of the other part, for the purchase by the Vendors of two-sixth shares of another one-eighth Share in the property now being sold to the Company.
4. An Agreement, dated the 23rd day of May, 1890, between Hugh MacKay Matheson, John Cory, Richard Cory, Thomas Cory, John Glasbrook, Thomas Glasbrook, Frank Cory Yeo, John Viriamu Jones and Mary Dowson Yeo, of the one part, and John George Widdicombe, for and on behalf of the Company, for the sale and purchase of the Penrikyber Colliery.

and copies of the same, together with copies of the Memorandum and Articles of Association, and all documents referred to in the said Agreements, may be inspected at the Offices of the Solicitors to the Company.

Numerous trade Contracts and Contracts relative to the formation of the Company have been made. Applicants for Shares will be deemed to have had notice of all such Contracts and Agreements and to waive the insertion in this Prospectus of the dates and names of the parties thereto, and to accept the above statement as sufficient compliance with Section 38 of "The Companies Act, 1867."

Applications must be made on the form accompanying the Prospectus—and be sent, with the deposit of 10 per cent., to the Bankers for the issue.

Allotments will be made as far as practicable pro rata on amounts applied for.

Forms of Application can be obtained at the Offices of the Company, or from the Bankers, Brokers, or Solicitors to the Company.

In cases where no Allotment is made, the deposit will be returned in full; and where the amount allotted is less than that subscribed for, the balance of the deposit will be applied towards the final payment. Failure to pay the due will render the Allotment liable to cancellation, and the previous payment to forfeiture.

The following is a Copy of Mr. Goss' Certificate referred to above:—

"SWANSEA, March 19, 1890.

"To the Directors of "THE PENRIKYBER NAVIGATION COLLIERY COMPANY, LTD.

"DEAR SIRS,

"I have examined the books and accounts of the Penrikyber Colliery for the eight years ending December 31 last, and hereby certify that the net profits earned, after deducting all working and business expenses, but exclusive of any interest on Capital, have amounted to £167,204 15s. 6d., or an Annual Average profit of £20,900 11s. 11d., equal to a dividend of £5 19s. 5d. per cent. per annum on the proposed Ordinary and Preference Capital of £350,000.

"I have also further examined the Capital Expenditure Account, and the amounts charged to Revenue for that period, and I find that all deadwork, maintenance and renewals of every description, and all dead rents paid or payable (whether recoverable under the Average Clauses or not) have been borne by Revenue, and that the only items charged to Capital during the period have been for new cottages built, additional engines, boilers, and engine houses erected, and an increase of 1,033 in the number of trams.

"The whole of the plant has been kept in excellent order out of profits, therefore no fund for depreciation has been created.

I am, DEAR SIR, Yours faithfully,
HERBERT J. GOSS, F.C.A.,
Chartered Accountant,
Swansea and Cardiff.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

(THIRTY-THIRD SERIES.)

"FULL OF CONSUMPTION"—CASE OF A YOUNG MAN AT CARLISLE.

The patient's name is JOHN BULMAN, a polisher, of 4, Scotch-street, Carlisle. His friends wrote me in November last.

The case had commenced three months before, and had followed on a neglected cold. Cough had become violent, spitting excessive, pain very severe in chest and right side, breathing distressing at night, profuse night perspirations. The strength had declined for three months. He had lost much flesh. The doctor reported his lung "full of Consumption."

The patient had been recommended to me by a Mr. Armstrong—a friend who had realised much benefit himself. His cousin writes: "He is most anxious to commence your treatment."

The wisdom of this was soon manifest. In January (scarcely ten weeks from commencement) writing himself he says: "I am very glad to let you know I am all strong again. I have gained ten pounds in weight since under you, and am working seven hours per day."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

Hymn Sheets from "SACRED SONGS and SOLOS."

A Series of Sixteen different sorts (each of two pages), 9d. per 100.
Each leaflet contains about eight selected hymns.

No. 2.

Stand up, stand up for Jesus.
Come, every soul.
The Great Physician.
Pass me not.
Rejoice and be glad.
Down life's dark vale.
Almost persuaded.
I heard the voice of Jesus.
Let us gather up the sunbeams.

No. 16.

Shall we meet beyond the river?
When peace, like a river.
By-and-by we shall know Jesus.
Repeat the story o'er and o'er.
Thou, whose almighty word.
I am now a child of God.
Thou didst leave Thy throne.
Oh, my Saviour, hear me!

Fifth Series.

No. 9.

The God of Abraham praise.
Joy bells.
Jesus, keep me near the cross.
How sweet the name.
One there is above all others.
Beneath the cross of Jesus.
Look and live.
Take the name of Jesus.
With harps and with viols.
Not all the blood of beasts.

Seventh Series.

No. 13.

Will you meet me at the fountain.
The mistakes of my life.
I lay my sins on Jesus.
In the Rifted Rock.
Amazing grace! how sweet.
I have heard of a Saviour's love.
Oh, turn ye! oh, turn ye!
Come, sing the gospel's joyful sound.
I bring my sins to Thee.
Time is earnest.

BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR

Is a Household Requisite of Constant Utility.

That BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR possesses very valuable qualities as a food for all classes, at all periods of life except earliest infancy, has been attested by eminent dietetic authorities, as well as by universal public experience during over thirty years.

Interested attempts to set aside these facts in favour of other foods can only appeal to ignorance and prejudice, and it remains true that no other kind of food can serve the special purposes of Corn Flour.

THE SOCIETY FOR DISTRIBUTING SCRIPTURE TRUTH,

EASTBOURNE.

Established by the late Rev. WILLIAM MARSH, D.D., and others in 1857.

PERMISSION has just been granted by the Directors of the Midland Railway Company to place hanging Rolls of Texts and Scripture Handbooks, in all their Waiting Rooms and Porters' Rooms.

This Society, which is NON-SECTARIAN, has supplied all the stations of the other Companies of Great Britain, for many years. Likewise every deserving Institution, Hospital, Prison, Workhouse, Home, or Mission is furnished with Scripture Literature FREE OF COST, on application.

The subscriptions have fallen off very seriously during the past five years, and still the demand for FREE GRANTS is ever increasing. For this reason, and in view of the costly work of supplying the Midland Railway, the Committee would appeal to the Christian public for help.

SUBSCRIPTIONS OR DONATIONS received by PETER B. MAXWELL, Secretary (at their sole depôt), 47, Pevensey-road, Eastbourne.

GEORGE HARDIE, Esq.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

THE ANGLO-AUSTRALIAN INVESTMENT, FINANCE AND LAND COMPANY, LIMITED, was formed in Sydney, New South Wales, in October, 1880, to purchase and resell, or otherwise invest in Freehold Properties in the City of Sydney and its immediate vicinity, to negotiate and advance Loans on Freehold and other Properties, but not Mining Securities.

The operations of the Company were commenced when the population of Sydney was but little over 200,000, and it is now over 400,000. The value of real estate in the City and its immediate vicinity has made even greater strides, and the investments of the Company have been of a most successful character, as will be shown by the dividends paid to the Shareholders, which have been as follow:—

In 1882 the dividend was	12½	per cent. per annum.		In 1886 the dividend was	25	per cent. per annum.
„ 1883	„	12½	„	„	„ 1887	„	15	„	„
„ 1884	„	12½	„	„	„ 1888	„	15	„	„
„ 1885	„	17½	„	„	„ 1889	„	15	„	„

Although the Memorandum of Association gives the widest powers of investment, the Directors have from the first devoted their attention almost exclusively to properties in the City of Sydney and its immediate vicinity, and the Company now owns magnificent Warehouses, Offices, &c., in George-street, Clarence-street, Kent-street, Bond-street, Castlereagh-street, Hunter-street, and other main thoroughfares in Sydney, producing a rental of over £17,000 per annum, which will be largely increased when other City Properties, now in course of erection, are completed.

The Directors recognise the inconvenience of holding such large sums for varying terms on deposit, and have determined to take advantage of the more modern and settled system of issuing Debentures for long periods. By this means they also hope to secure the advantage of English capital at more moderate rates of interest than can be obtained in the Colony, and it is with the object of paying off these deposits as they become payable that the present issue of Debentures is made.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT.

Assets.	£	s.	d.
Freehold Properties of the Company as shown by the last Annual Balance Sheet	653,659	0	0
Moneys Lent on Mortgages by the Company	272,699	0	0
Uncalled Capital, of which £169,750 is on Shares issued in London	384,076	0	0
Undivided Profits	3,949	0	0
	£1,314,383	0	0

Liabilities.	£	s.	d.
Moneys held on Deposit	334,833	0	0
Capital paid up	115,924	0	0
Moneys owing on Mortgague of the Company's Freehold Properties	400,890	0	0

For the purpose of investment, the security to be given to Debenture-holders may therefore be considered as follows:—The moneys on deposit are to be paid off out of this Debenture issue, and may be deducted from the liabilities. The paid-up Capital also will not rank as against creditors, and may therefore be struck out of the liabilities. The result is that the security offered to the Debenture-holders will be the total Assets of the Company, which amount to £1,314,383, subject only to the moneys owing by the Company on mortgage of the freehold properties of the Company, viz., £400,890, which, deducted from the Assets, leaves £913,493 as the security for £350,000 Debentures.

The Debentures will be secured by a first charge on the uncalled capital, and by a floating charge over all the other Assets of the Company.

Applications for Debentures must be made on the form accompanying the Prospectus, and must be forwarded to The London and County Banking Company, Limited, 21, Lombard Street, London, or its Branches, accompanied by a remittance for the full amount thereof.

The Debentures will be issued in sums of £100 each.

Application will be made in due course for a quotation on the Stock Exchange.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application can be obtained at the Offices of the Company, 31, Lombard Street, London

A CHILD OF FAITH IN AN AGE OF DOUBT.

MEMORIALS OF ANDREW KENNEDY BREMNER.

BY HIS BROTHER.

"The title well describes the youth whose brief life is herein lovingly set down. . . . Will Scotland or any other land produce such holy youth when the new unbelief has won the day? Our young brother, who has now gone up higher, knew the reality of the great truths, which, to many around him, were mere names and dreams."—Sword and Trowel.

"A career of singular promise was cut short by the early death, towards the end of 1887, of the young Scotch student whose brief, beautiful life is embalmed in these pages. But he left a noble testimony behind him, and its influence will be perpetuated by this simple, fraternal memoir. The book is invested with a special interest because of the references to recent religious movements."—Christian.

The Downfall of Whitefield's!

The Old Tabernacle is gone! the Site is cleared for the NEW WHITEFIELD MEMORIAL CHURCH AND TOPLADY HALL.

On Tuesday, June 10, A PUBLIC MEETING will be held at 7.30 p.m., in THE CITY TEMPLE, in furtherance of the new building scheme, for which £20,000 is required. Revs. Joseph Parker, D.D., J. Guinness Rogers, B.A., Hugh Price Hughes, M.A., Andrew Mearns, J. Jackson Wray, Evan Spicer, Esq., L.C.C., and others are expected to take part in the meeting. Donations or promises will be gratefully received by Rev. J. J. Wray, Mr. R. J. Barrett, or Mr. A. R. Johnson, at the Tabernacle. Help is earnestly asked to meet this urgent case of sudden calamity, and to aid a busy Church to resume its work, now largely suspended.

JUNE 6, 1890.

The Christian.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of the Hon. NEAL DOW, the American Temperance Reformer.

On Sunday next the customary annual collection for London hospitals will be made in the Metropolitan churches. The cause is so widely recognised as a good one that it needs no advocacy. What would be the condition of our sick poor, and the sufferers from serious accidents, without the aid of our hospitals, one can scarcely imagine.

We hope our readers will give an attentive perusal to the brief article on the following page respecting the "John G. Paton Mission Fund." Those who have been charmed and profited by reading Mr. Paton's autobiography could not choose a better way of expressing fellowship with this veteran servant of God, than by enabling him to realise his heart's desire in the complete evangelisation of the South Sea Islanders.

In one of a series of interesting papers in regard to working women in large towns our contemporary, The Hospital, remarks, in treating of the factory girl within the London boundaries :—

> The most serious question which we have to ask ourselves with regard to these low-class factory girls is not, how can their wages be raised, but how can they themselves be raised. They are improvident, fond of drink, low in their standards of comfort and of morality, and yet—so far, at least, as the East-end is concerned—every one of these girls can marry—will marry—and, if she follows the example of her mother, will very likely bring into the world a family of twelve, or even seventeen. True, many of that band may not live through infancy, for the child mortality among the lowest East-end classes is enormous; but what of those who do? Can we expect them to become useful, industrious, provident, respectable citizens?

It has become the custom in certain quarters to sneer at the incapacity of the Gospel to deal with social evils as grave as those referred to by our contemporary; and at first sight it certainly would appear that the discrepancy between the extent of the disease and the limited application of the remedy is so striking as to warrant scepticism in regard to the result. The Gospel was intended, however, both to prevent and to cure such evils. The comparative smallness of present-day efforts, instead of being an incentive to despair, should rather be a spur to energy and increased effort.

"The results are so obvious, and the growth and development so phenomenal, that nothing but the power of God could have brought it about." In various forms this sentiment has been recently repeatedly expressed. We must enter our solemn and emphatic protest against phenomenal development being regarded as a proof of God's good pleasure, or of the righteousness of any cause. It proves too much. If this be a true test, then Mohammedanism, Romanism, Mormonism, and other monstrous growths, must be declared to have been brought about by nothing else than the power of God.

The leading native journal of the Japanese capital comments upon a memorial addressed to the Government by a number of governors and prefects in regard to the adoption of a new "basis of morality" for Japan. It states that the Education Department has long perceived that the Western religion, which forms the basis of Western morality, and which, therefore, might seem a necessary consequence of the acceptance of Western civilisation, is unsuited to the conditions of Japan, and could not be introduced without "confusion and peril." The Japanese leaders of thought, however, could not introduce, as they would like to have done, the utilitarian system, "as it is of too subtle and recondite a character to be embodied in a text-book of common morality." The experience of centuries, the journal goes on to assert, has proved that the doctrines of Confucius are suited to the disposition of the Japanese people, and it states that it has, therefore, been decided that text-books for the schools are to be compiled with his precepts as the basis.

We have no fear, however, as to the religious future of Japan. A greater than Confucius will reign over the hearts and minds of the Japanese. These efforts to stay the progress eastward of Christianity are simply the dying struggles of expiring false systems going down before the Redeemer.

The Inebriates Legislation Committee of the British Medical Association has for nine years been in correspondence with Boards of Guardians throughout the country in regard to habitual or periodically drunken inmates of workhouses. These people enter the workhouse to recover from an inebriate outbreak, and claim their discharge directly they are strong enough to begin another outbreak. Lately the Committee have received communications from 131 Boards in favour of legislation to empower the authorities to detain pauper inebriates in order that there may be a reasonable endeavour to cure them "by seclusion from intoxicating drinks under proper medical treatment." We wish the movement every success; not only is it one that must result in a great economy to the ratepayer, who certainly has to pay heavily for the drinking habits of the day, but one likely to be beneficial to the inebriates themselves.
